A Friend

Wishes to speak through the Register of the beneficial results he has received from a regular use of AYER'S PILLS. He says: "I was feeling sick and tired and my stomach seemed all out of order. I tried a number of remedies, but none seemed to give me relief until I was induced to try the old reliable Ayer's Pills. I have taken only one box, but I feel like a new man. I think they are the most pleasant and easy to take of anything I ever used, being so finely sugar-coated that even a child will take them. I urge upon all who are of a laxative to try Ayer's Pills."—Boothbay (Me.) Register.

In Need

"Between the ages of five and fifteen I was troubled with a kind of salt rheum, or eruption, chiefly confined to the legs, and especially to the bend of the knee above the calf. Here running sores formed which would scab over, but would break immediately on moving the leg. My mother tried everything she could think of, but all was without avail. Although a child, I read in the papers about the beneficial effects of Ayer's Pills, and persuaded my mother to let me try them. With no great faith in the result, she procured and I began to use them, and soon noticed an improvement. Encouraged by this, I kept on till I took two boxes, when the sores disappeared and have never troubled me since."—H. Chipman, Real Estate Agent, Roanoke, Va.

Ayer's Pills

"I suffered for years from stomach and kidney troubles, causing very severe pains in various parts of the body. None of the remedies I tried afforded me any relief until I began taking Ayer's Pills, and was cured."—Wm. Goddard, Notary Public, Five Lakes, Mich.

The Hour After Tea.

When thro' twilight's glimmer
The early stars look down,
And round the earth comes folding
The evening soft and brown—
My laddie sits beside me,
His hand beneath his chin,
And peers in dusky corners
Where night keeps gathering in;
Where dark and deep,
The shadows sleep
And night keeps gathering in.

'Tis then I tell a story
About the elf-folk wee,
Who seem about us thronging,
The hour after tea.
That dreary hour when fairies
Their deep enchantments throw,
Weaved all of yellow star-rays
That waver to and fro
Across the night
In rifts of light
Like golden threads ablow.

Around seem fainting echoes
Of merry elfin din—
That steal along the twilight,
In notes most weird and thin—
But when the lamps are lighted
Away the fairies flee,
For elf-folk love the hour best
That comes just after tea—
When shadows deep
Lie fast asleep,
And stars aglimmer be.

—Ellen Brainerd Peck, in Hartford Courant.

DRIVEN TO HER GRAVE.

The village of P. was a pretty little place enough, snugly located among the green hills of the western part of New York state, and owning to a population of some fifteen hundred or two thousand souls. It had its own post office and its own bank. Two or three flourishing stage lines connected it with the outer world beyond, and there was some talk of a railway which was to pass directly through the town, and bring such advantages and privileges in its train as would make it into a city within the course of a few fleeting years. The older inhabitants shook their heads sagely enough over the magnificent projects of those who were apparently bitten with the mania for speculating in railway stocks and "air lines." But the younger part of the population believed in the project with heart and soul, and were wont to talk so largely and hopefully of "what we shall do when the railway comes," that P—— held up its head in consequence, and took upon itself such airs of prospective expectancy and importance as nearly to make the surrounding villages that were not to have a railway fit to burst with disgust and envy.

At this particular period of the local history of the place, a new clergyman was summoned by an unanimous call to take charge of the congregation in P——. He was a young man—deeply impressed with the solemnity of his position and sanctity of his calling. Deeply and unaffectedly pious, his delicate health had kept him from the temptations of a young man's career, and left him a kind of St. John in the pulpit, as innocent, as free from guile, and as incapable of understanding its existence in others as the beloved disciple, exposed to the peculiar atmosphere of the nineteenth century, could well have been.

Raymond Strong was but five and twenty years of age, unmarried, and with a heart untouched, when he began his career in P——. He was a remarkably handsome man—being tall, erect, with blue eyes and bright brown hair, regular features, a magnificent forehead, and the sweetest smile that ever played around lips as finely cut and chiseled as his own. His manner was somewhat reserved; but there was a curious determination visible in his slightest look and tone, the sign of a firm and almost defiant spirit, that was not to be daunted or lightly put down.

His congregation were in raptures with him. The young men loved him as a brother, and the young maidens loved him like the brother of some one else. The elderly men thought him singularly quiet and unassuming, and the elderly ladies took him under their wings from the very first, and petted and fussed over him as if he had been a bantling of their own. A home was found for him in the house of a widow lady, over 60 years of age, who kept a staid, middle-aged servant, and had no giddy, flirting young daughters to draw the pastor's attention from his duties and studies. Absorbed in his books and sermons, the young man apparently passed his life quietly enough for some months—making such calls on the members of his flock as were absolutely necessary, preaching regularly every Sabbath day, and not unfrequently attracting worshipers from other churches to attend the Sunday evening exercises and hear the really eloquent and beautiful discourses to which he gave the best energies of his mind and soul.

"A new broom sweeps clean," they say; and never was there more universal satisfaction displayed on the acquisition of so useful an article, than that with which this congregation were unanimous in proclaiming to the world. "Mr. Strong is so pious," said the old ladies. "So meek and humble," added the elder men. "So warm-hearted and disposed to overlook one's faults and failings! So true and firm a friend!" chorused the young men. "So eloquent, so delicate, so interesting!" sighed the maidens, who, had they dared, would have added, "and so handsome!" to the bead-roll of the young clergyman's perfections.

All went smoothly with the congregation and their treasure of a pastor for some months. He had come among them late in the fall, and through the winter every member of the flock was busy in sounding forth his praises to the world. But when the evenings were no longer long and dark, but short, full of the glory of the summer moon—then a little cloud, "no bigger than a man's hand," began to rise imperceptibly in the sky, and the chorus of praise suddenly slackened, cooled, and ceased!

The change was too sudden not to be noticed. And no sooner was the effect observed, than the cause was ferreted out by members of other societies.

Reader, it was this:

Just beyond the railings of the church, under the very droppings of the sanctuary in fact, stood a neat, two-story house, surrounded by a well-kept garden, full of fruit and flowers. The house was painted the fashionable brown color, and kept in a state of scrupulous neatness, within and without, that bore testimony to the skillful housewifery of its mistress. Passing by, of a pleasant summer's afternoon, you might see her busy among her flowers, neatly and even coquettishly dressed—a plump, well-formed brunette, with rich black hair and soft black eyes, and a color on cheek and lip that many a languid belle might envy.

There was not a stricter housewife, a better manager, a "smarter" or more capable woman in the town of P—— than Mrs. Thorne. Her husband believed in her and loved her, if all tales were true. Yet all P—— was agreed on one point; the love and the trust were both entirely thrown away.

According to Mrs. Grundy, "the proceedings of that woman" were enough to make the dead turn in their graves! How Mr. Thorne could be so blind, Mrs. Grundy was at a loss to see! How "that woman" could have the effrontery and impudence to exhibit herself out there, dressed like a queen, and pretending to be occupied with her flowers, Mrs. Grundy never knew! Flowers, indeed! The tax collector paused there a few moments, on his rounds—to inquire after Mr. Thorne's taxes, no doubt! Humph! Yes? no doubt—his frequent errands to his neighbor's were on business too, of course! Mrs. Thorne did some writing for him, did she? Oh, yes! All those new dresses were paid for out of the money she received for copying musty old law papers very probably! The doctor had been called in to see Mr. Thorne. And the doctor was a very handsome man, of whom—Well, Mrs. Grundy sighed, shook her head, and held up both her hands, unable to find words to express the enormity of that last offence.

This was a fair specimen of the village talk about Mrs. Thorne.

Was she conscious of it?

Something in her manner said so. There was a sad, wistful look in the dark, bright eyes at times—a sort of shrinking from notice, on her part, if some necessary errand took her into the street—a droop of the proud head when no one was near, that told tales—that showed how well the cruel shafts had sped.

She had come to that village a bright, frank, happy girl—loving her husband, solicitous for his comfort, eager for his happiness in a well-ordered home. Naturally gay and impulsive, she had made many careless speeches, which had been twisted about to her disadvantage by those who are always envious of youth, beauty and happiness. Thinking no evil, she had committed many little sins against the frigid law of etiquette. This was all.

But all these things were remembered against her in the day of her trial, which came very soon. A dissipated young law student, of good family in the town, saw fit to be struck with the beauty of the bright brunette and to inform her of the fact in a long letter, which never reached its destination. After writing it, the young man went home thoroughly tipsy, and entirely forgetful of the visit with which he had intended to honor Mrs. Thorne. His wife, a prying, suspicious, jealous young woman—hearing some incoherent words fall from his lips during that drunken slumber, took alarm, searched his pockets, and found the precious letter!

Such a "tempest in a teapot" had never been known in P—— before! No one paused to consider that the letter had never been delivered! It was quite enough that it had been written. No doubt there had been others, said Mrs. Grundy, with a virtuous air. It was not likely that that poor young man, in spite of his bad habits, would have broken out at once, and written a letter of the kind to a married woman, unless she had given him some encouragement. From that moment it was, "Cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war!" so far as Mrs. Thorne was concerned. By nightfall of the next day the poor woman had not a shred of character left. And in that plight she had remained until the advent of Raymond Strong in P——. From the first day of the young man's occupancy of his new pulpit he had been conscious of the presence of one hearer, above all others—a woman, apparently some thirty years of age, elegantly dressed and mannered, who sat quite near the pulpit, and listened, as no one else listened, to his sermons. Gradually he grew to look for the bright, eager face—the deep dark eyes that rested on his face with such a quiet, absorbed glance.

She was not in her place one Sunday. On the next the pew was still vacant, and the wondering sense of disappointment which the young pastor felt at first, deepened into an anxiety that could not be controlled.

He knew her name and her home. Why should he not call, and ask the reason of her absence?

Strange to say, although he knew nothing of the previous reports, some instinctive feeling taught him to say nothing of his proposed visit. He paid it. He found Mrs. Thorne alone, lying back in an invalid chair, in a pleasant, prettily furnished parlor. She was carefully dressed in a wrapper of crimson merino, that became her well. But the feverish glow that rose to her cheek as she received her unexpected visitor soon died away, and left her pale and weak.

Then, for the first time, the young pastor learned that she suffered from an incurable disease of the heart, that often prostrated her like this and would one day take her suddenly away. He learned also that a great grief preyed upon her mind constantly, and aided in hastening the end that too surely must come. The nature of that grief she would not then reveal.

"One day when we know each other better," she said, as he took his leave.

From that time his calls were frequent; yet still he said nothing of them, even to his dearest friends. He gave no reason for this secrecy, even to himself. He only felt—he knew not how—that it was best and wisest that it should be so. And so, unwittingly, he added a whole cairn of stones to the lapidation which the poor woman had already received at the hands of those who seemed to hate her for her beauty and her grace.

Judge how the storm broke out, when the brightness of the early summer evenings revealed the heinous fact that the young minister spent at least two of those evenings every week "at that horrid Mrs. Thorne's;" and it had been going on all through the winter months, and no one ever suspected such a thing! Their saint! Their young apostle!

"I thought he went out to the post office each evening; though, to be sure, he did stay a long time to get his letters!" wailed his widowed landlady, when informed of his awful wickedness. His own society held up their hands in horror and amazement. Other societies laughed heartily over the fracas, and the church was fuller than ever of a Sunday evening, to hear the hero of the scandalous story preach.

The elders of the society called a private meeting at last, and summoned the delinquent before them.

He came readily enough, but there was a light in his blue eyes and a firm compression of his handsome mouth that should have warned them not to tamper with him. He heard the charges they had to make against him in stern silence. When they had ended, he rose, and replied that it was all perfectly true, but that he refused to give up the visits which were causing so great a scandal.

"You will know my reason for this refusal in a few days, perhaps to-morrow," he said, sternly. And then, taking his hat, he left the meeting, and was seen by Mrs. Grundy's own horrified eyes to go straight to the house of Mrs. Thorne! They did know, "to-morrow!" For early in the same morning the death-bell pealed out solemnly, and when people stopped and looked at each other, and asked who was gone, the answer was, "Mrs. Thorne!" The heart disease, aggravated by trouble, and suddenly intensified and developed by this last blow, had taken her away at last.

All P—— flocked to that funeral. Raymond Strong did not officiate. He sat beside Mr. Thorne, as one of the mourners, and a brother clergyman filled his place. After the long procession had wound up the hill, and stood solemnly around the open grave, Raymond Strong stepped forward, with a folded paper in his hand. His face was very pale—the light in his blue eyes was cold and pitiless—his glance fell like a sword upon the scared and guilty faces around him.

"By the request of my dead friend I read these, her words spoken from the grave, to you who wronged and slandered her so long," he said sternly.

And then he read a kind and loving letter, written by the dying woman in her last hours, solemnly asserting her innocence of all the crimes that had been laid to her charge, and her unbroken faith toward her husband, and calling upon them, for the sake of her full forgiveness, to let this slander follow her no further than the grave.

It was a solemn and a stange appeal, against which no heart was proof. There was not a dry eye in the assembly. The very woman who had imbittered her last hours, and made the grave indeed a welcome refuge to her, wept bitterly, as those simple words, justifying herself and forgiving them, fell on their ears.

The clergyman ceased to read, gave the paper to the weeping husband, and addressed them again:

"I wish to state that my connection with the —— society ceases on this day. I resign my position as pastor of that church forever."

You might have heard a pin fall as he spoke. He shook hands with Mr. Thorne, said a few words to him in a low voice—cast one long yearning look into the still open grave—and turned away. Silently they made way for him—silently he passed down the hill. That evening he left P—— forever. He has never visited the place again.

* * * * * *

Standing beside the grave of Mrs. Thorne the other day, I heard this tale from the lips of the old physician who had attended her in her last illness:

"As good and pretty a woman as ever lived," he said gruffly. "Might have lived till now if those women would only have let her alone. They fairly talked her to death. And now they will come up here and hang wreaths on her grave, and say what a saint she was! There is one of the wreaths now! Bah!" and he gave it a spiteful poke with his gold-headed cane.

And this, dear reader, this was one of the many things that "Mrs. Grundy" did!

WHITE WING PRAYER.

Previous to the close of the Democratic county convention, Edwin Croke, mayor of Irwin, Col., arose, and all the delegates reverently bowed their heads while he offered prayer to Almighty Cleveland. His voice was filled with emotion, and the reporter found it difficult to get every word. But here it is:

"Oh, almighty and all-powerful Cleveland, who art in Washington, when not fishing; thou art the father of Ruth and Ruth's sister and the godfather of the Democratic party, (its father wouldn't own it if he were here), we hail thy name as the great political prophet of the country. We bow down before thee in humble political obedience. When thou sayest go, we go; when thou sayest come, we come. We have no desire but to serve thee. If thou sayest black is white we will swear to it and lick the everlastin' stuffin' out of the man that disputes it. When thou takest snuff we will sneeze; when thou sayest free silver we will echo thy words; when thou sayest gold then gold it is. We are Democrats after the improved modern type. Our business is to vote the ticket, and vote 'er straight. What is it to us whether we have free silver or not? We are but dogs that eat the crumbs that fall from our master's table. When the crumbs fall we wag our tails; when they don't fall we stand and wait until they do. This is Democracy. This is the kind of Democracy which elected thee, our great and almighty Cleveland. Oh, most adored master, we love thee for what thou hast done for us. We love thee because thou art Cleveland. We humbly surrender ourselves to thee. Do with us as thou wilt. Though wheat is but 40 cents a bushel we love thee; though cotton is low we love thee; though business is dull we love thee; though thousands, millions, are out of employment we love thee; though our children are clothed in rags we love thee; though our wife, the dear companion of our bosom, is scantily dressed and looks so shabby she can't go to church, we love thee; though we are sinking deeper in debt and poverty is knocking at the door and hunger is staring us in the face, we love thee still. This shows our great faith and love for thee. Our wives and children we are willing to sacrifice, even as the Hindoo mother sacrifices her offspring by throwing it under the crushing wheels of the juggernaut. Oh, mighty Cleveland, words cannot express our love for thee. We love our party, too. What care we about the many promises made? We know it promised free silver, and we know it won't give it to us, but we lied when we said it. We thought then we had some manhood about us; but we ain't. We have no independence. Thou, oh mighty Cleveland, hast all the manhood and independence in the party. We are fools, liars, lickspittles, mudsills. We have no business to want anything or to say anything. Last year we favored free silver, and now we have to oppose it. We favored it then because we thought it was right. We oppose it now, most adored master, because thou tellest us to. Ain't we a honey of the first water? Did ever dog serve his master more faithfully? Did ever a dog get less for it? Oh, mighty master, we are ever ready to serve thee and party. All the pay we ask is to be patted on the back by some local politician and called a good Democrat. We ain't got any sense. We don't want any, only enough to vote the ticket. It don't take any sense to be a good Democrat. What a joyful thought! We don't have to think. We don't have to worry. Our work is all mapped out for us. All that is expected is to do what we are told. We thank thee, oh Cleveland, that we are Democrats. We thank thee for the panic. We thank thee for the idle men and women in the land. We thank thee for low prices. We thank thee for the banks that have busted and the thousands of business failures since thou hast come into power. We thank thee for the hard times. We thank thee for the clothes our wife needs and can't get. We thank thee for what thou hast done for the banker and what thou hast not done for the people. We thank thee for all these things because it is our duty as a good Democrat to do so. It may be 'against the grain,' but we will take our medicine. We will work our wives to death, starve our children, sacrifice our homes, crucify liberty and kill prosperity, but will never go back on our dear old party, and on thee, our most adored Cleveland. Thou art more account than all of us put together. Thou knowest more than the South and the West. Call us fools; spit in our faces; wipe your feet on us; we will love thee all the more. And now, our great political father, we leave us in thy care. Do with us as thou wilt. Kick silver into the middle of the next century; give more privileges to the national banks; issue more bonds; preserve the McKinley bill; establish state banks; foster trusts; bribe congressmen with patronage; fish whenever thou carest to, and we will endorse everything thou doest, carry Cleveland roosters, carry campaign torches and forevermore sing thy praise. Amen."

The Lost Child.

I've lost a child—O, tell me; did you meet
My little darling in the sunny street,
With wind-blown hair, bright eyes and flying feet
Like swift-winged birds?

"How large was she?" Why, just a tiny thing;
'Tis such a short time since I used to sing
Low sleepy songs and feel her soft arms cling
About my neck.

"How old is she?" Why, really I forget;
Just old enough to love and kiss and pet;
Only a merry little maid, and yet
Not quite a child.

It seems but yesterday I saw her go
Leading her playmates in a laughing row;
If you had met her you would surely know
Her smiling face.

You thought her older, more than 12, you say,
That cannot be until another May
Opens the buds and brings the happy day
That gave her life.

"Is that the child? almost woman grown,
She holds her girlish head high as your own;
Some one will find her though she goes alone,
You need not fear."

I know she's tall and cares no more for toys—
That's Harry with her making all that noise;
Why don't he go and play with other boys
I'd like to know.

'Tis five years since her twelfth birthday was green
With tender leaves, and all the months between
Have slipped away till she is seventeen—
The child is lost.

HELEN KELLER AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Helen Keller spent three weeks in Chicago during the exposition, "and had a perfectly splendid time." Thousands and thousands of American young folk will share her enthusiasm as they recall the delightful days at the wonderful show, when, seeing it all and hearing all about it, they took in pleasure and information at every turn. But little Helen Keller can neither see nor hear. Everything is a blank to her until an impression can be made either through her imagination or through the deaf and dumb language of the hands and fingers; and even then, in Helen Keller's case, the words are not seen but felt by her own palm and fingers as they lightly hold the hand that is making these signs of words and letters.

The president and the managers of the exposition were exceedingly kind to her, and did all in their power to make her visit pleasant and instructive. So widely is she known, and so general is the interest in her, that wherever she went she received loving attention. The task of describing things to her was made lighter by the helpful sympathy of the chiefs of the departments. They gladly permitted her to pass her fingers over the exhibits whenever it was possible, and cheerfully gave her all the information they could. Of course I interpreted everything to Helen by means of the manual alphabet. She was allowed even to climb upon the great Krupp gun, and its workings were explained to us by one of the German officers. Everywhere the show-cases were opened to her, and rare books of art were given to her for examination.

At the Cape of Good Hope exhibit the great doors were unlocked, and Helen was admitted to the realm of diamonds, where everything was carefully explained to us about the precious stone; how it is mined, separated from the matrix, weighed, cut and set. Wherever it was possible she touched the machinery and followed the work being done. Then she was made very happy by being allowed to find a diamond herself,—the only true diamond, they assured her, that had ever been found in the United States.

But the French bronzes afforded her more pleasure than anything else at the fair. The picture which she presented as she bent over a beautiful group, her eager fingers studying the faces or following the graceful lines of the figures, in her effort to catch the artist's thought, was the most touching and pathetic I have ever seen. And, strange as it may seem to those who depend upon their eyes for the pleasure which they derive from works of art, this little blind girl, who has not seen the light since she was 19 months old, rarely failed to divine the thoughts which the artists had wrought into their work.

Constant practice, indeed, has given to Helen's sense of touch a delicacy and precision seldom attained even by the blind. Sometimes it feels as if her very soul were in her fingers, she finds so much to interest her everywhere. People frequently said to me at the fair: "She sees more with her fingers than we do with our eyes." And in one of her letters she says: "I am like the people my dear friend Dr. Holmes tells about, 'with eyes in their fingers that spy out everything interesting, and take hold of it as the magnet picks out iron filings.'"

Descriptions are to Helen what paintings are to us; and her well-trained imagination gives the light and color. One evening, as we sat in a gondola, I tried to tell Helen how the thousands of tiny electric lights were reflected in the water of the lagoons, when she asked: "Does it look as if a shower of golden fish had been caught in an invisible net?" Is it any wonder that Dr. Holmes says of her: "She is a poet whose lyre was taken from her in her early days, but whose soul is full of music."

So we see, pathetic as Helen's life must always seem to those who enjoy the blessings of sight and hearing, that it is yet full of brightness and cheer, of courage and hope.—Anna M. Sullivan, in St. Nicholas Magazine.

A DOMESTIC FAILURE.

She was a young wife just married from boarding school, one of the lovey-dovey order, and although educated in Boston, didn't know beans from any other vegetable. Hence this dialogue with the cook:

"Now Biddy, dear, what are we to have for dinner?"

"There's two chickens to dress, mum."

"I'll dress them the first thing. Where are their clothes?"

"Holy Moses, mum, they're in their feathers yet."

"Oh, then serve them that way. The ancient Romans always cooked their peacocks with the feathers on. It will be a surprise to Hubby."

"It will that, mum. Sure if you want to help, you could be parin' the turnips."

"Oh, how sweet! I'll pair them two and two in no time. Why, I had no idea cooking was so picturesque."

"I think, mum, that washing the celery do be more in your line.'

"All right, Biddy. I'll take it up to the bathroom, and I've some lovely Paris soap that will take off every speck."

"Thank you, mum. Would you mind telling me the name of the asylum where you were eddicated? I think I'll have to take some lessons there myself if we be goin' to work together."—Detroit Free Press.

There is a story that Walter Adams tells about Henry Guy Carleton, and if it is an old story Walter Adams shall bear the blame of it. Carleton stutters. The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 5, 1894.

THE number of the unemployed throughout the country does not seem to be as large as at first reported. In Boston, where the number was set at 30,000 at least, a police census shows only about 5000 who would like to work but cannot find anything to do, and in other cities the same dropping off is reported. But the number which is still suffering for food and clothing is large.

SECRETARY OF STATE OSBORNE of Kansas has issued a circular advocating laws making two hours a day the limit of work for each man, on the ground that labor-saving machinery now enables one man to do as much in a day as 20 could 75 years ago. Between Governor Lewelling, who will not have the tramps molested, Mary Ellen Lease, the politician, and Secretary Osborne, Kansas has quite a dazzling array of freaks among her state officers.

THE jury in the trial of Prendergast, for the murder of Mayor Harrison at Chicago, has brought in a verdict of guilty, and recommend a sentence of death, basing their verdict on the belief that the murderer was perfectly capable of comprehending the enormity of his crime at the time of its commission. Of course a new trial is moved for by the defense, and will be argued in a few days. There will be a general feeling throughout the country that the verdict is a just one.

MRS. MARY ELLEN LEASE, she of Kansas political fame, is so far ahead of the governor in the latest wrangle between the two. The governor appointed a Democrat on the state board of charities, of which the lady from Wichita is chairman, and she promptly informed him that the Democrat and she could not serve on the same board, whereupon he "removed" Mrs. Lease. She, however, declined to be removed, and seems to have the best of the "scrap," as it has been discovered that the governor cannot remove a member of the board without cause, and than only after formal charges and an investigation. Meanwhile there is little love lost between the two.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

The first message of Governor Greenhalge is, aside from its unnecessary length, on the whole a sensible document. As might be expected, it begins with an allusion to the "financial and industrial reverses which the country has recently sustained," in which he says "It is to be earnestly hoped that wisdom will sit in the high places of the nation, and that just and moderate counsels, based upon the lessons of experience and a sincere regard for the welfare of the people, may speedily lead the country back to comfort and prosperity." In view of the condition of the country the legislators are enjoined to avoid public extravagance, the refusal to enter upon new projects of expenditure being an appropriate means to that end. The importance of public education is touched upon, and the necessity of the very best of methods urged. Regarding labor the governor desires to see cordial feeling between employer and employed, and appreciates the fact that "the higher the standard of the workman, the greater is the capacity of production," and suggests that provision be made to give working people an interest in the stock of corporations by placing shares in the same at small rates. He recognizes the evils of intemperance, but is not disposed to interfere with the license system further than to suggest the appointment of license boards, in order to take the liquor question more effectually out of politics, than which a wiser suggestion could not be made. Regarding the prisons of the state he suggests that "there should be more unity, more consolidation in the government of the prisons, less opportunity for frictions and for conflict of jurisdiction, if good management and good results are to be obtained. Legislation to prevent the watering of the stock of corporations is recommended, and that all contracts for the lease, sale or purchase of railroads or street railways should be subject to the approval of the railroad commissioners. While aware that certain work of the state can be better looked after by a commission than otherwise, he considers the creation of one whenever it is necessary to erect a public building or to engage in any public work, a simple frittering away of the authority of the commonwealth, destroying or impairing the responsibility of its agents. He sees no reason why much of the work assigned to what may be termed temporary commissions cannot be done by or under the supervision of the governor and council, officials elected by the people annually, and directly responsible to the people. The commissions should not be regarded as offering places of comfortable retirement for once active politicians whose occupation is gone, and whose usefulness to the commonwealth is measured only by their admitted uselessness to political parties or to business circles, and should be directly and immediately responsible to the governor and council. The governor agrees with his predecessor in recommending the abolition of Fast Day, and suggests that the 19th of April take its place as commemorative of a double anniversary, recalling memories of 1775 and 1861. He speaks favorably of the conferring of the suffrage in municipal affairs upon women, and he thinks that experience and reasoning might seem to justify this step, which he commends to the most serious consideration of the Legislature. The subject of good roads is touched upon, with the suggestion that under the present system many towns are not getting the best results for their money. The "high state of efficiency, discipline and morale" of the state militia is a subject for congratulation. Regarding the protection of the ballot box he suggests that the Legislature should provide proper means for purging the lists of registered voters of names which should not appear upon them, and that the Legislature fix by law a simple test to be applied by all registering officers to all persons seeking registration, and which shall determine legally whether a voter is qualified by ability to read and write, as required by the constitution. He would relieve the superior court of some of its work by giving to the probate courts jurisdiction in matters of divorce, and permitting municipal, district and police courts to sentence in all cases of felony where the accused party pleads guilty, except, perhaps, in the case of two or three of the graver offenses. The importance of the good work of the state board of health, lunacy and charity is reviewed, and attention called to the need of a new house at the Lyman School, with a suggestion of the propriety of furnishing to the insane some light and interesting employment. The abolishment of the fee system in the various departments connected with the administration of justice, and in all other departments where it can properly be abolished, is recommended; also that practitioners of medicine be registered, similar to pharmacists, as in most other states. Regarding the right of the people to vote directly upon important questions of legislation by some system of referendum, and noting that many unwelcome local laws might be prevented and much pernicious special legislation checked if the system were extended, he recommends that the Legislature consider the propriety of submitting to the voters of the several municipalities all legislative acts of a local character, such as acts to increase municipal indebtedness for special purposes, new city charters or amendments to existing charters, all matters of especial importance affecting seriously a city or town, which acts shall not become laws until approved by such municipalities. A review of the present industrial situation closes the document.

PALMER NEWS.

Annual Meeting of St. Paul's Church.

The annual meeting of the Universalist parish was held in the lecture room Monday evening, the attendance being larger than common. These officers were elected: Moderator, W. W. Leach; clerk, William Merriam; executive committee, O. W. Studley, C. E. Getchell and George Robinson; treasurer and collector, W. E. Stone. The report of the treasurer showed an excellent financial condition. All bills are paid, there is a balance in the treasury, and about $500 is nearly due, out of which will come a few payments soon to mature. The pastor's report showed a gain of 25 families on the calling list. There have been eight baptisms and twelve christened. The pastoral calls have numbered about 300. The Western Massachusetts Universalist Ministers' Meeting will be held in St. Paul's church next Monday, when each member present will give an outline of his sermon next Sunday for criticism and suggestion.

A smell of smoke awakened J. J. Conway, who lives up stairs in the tenement west of the JOURNAL office, Tuesday morning, caused by the woodwork around the chimney taking fire. The flames were easily put out, and no great damage was done.

Dr. W. H. Stowe had the snow cleared from the Knox Pond the first of the week, much to the gratification of the boys and girls who enjoy skating, and they improved the opportunity thoroughly until the thaw of the latter part of the week.

The shade tree committee met in the court room Tuesday and discussed the mutilation of the trees by the men engaged in stringing wires about the town. A sub-committee was appointed to further consider the matter, and another meeting will be held next Tuesday.

At the Baptist church next Sabbath morning the pastor will preach on "New Year's Reflections, or Turning Over a New Leaf." At six in the evening there will be a meeting for men only, and at 7 a preaching service, the subject being "Pentecostal Power", a prelude to the week of prayer.

The dance at the opera house Monday evening was not largely attended, though the music was good and a good time was enjoyed by those who were present. The prize for the most neatly dressed lady went to Miss Maggie McAllister, while Thomas Rooney carried off that awarded to the homeliest man.

The ice on the ponds is about eight inches thick, having lost an inch in the warm weather of the past week. Those who harvest it for use the next season like to have it about a foot in thickness, and have not yet commenced to gather a crop, but will begin operations soon unless cold weather comes again.

Palmer Lodge of Odd Fellows elected these officers last Friday evening: N. G., Charles E. Shumway; V. G., J. H. Shaw; R. S., George H. Bray; T., C. T. Brainerd; P. S., L. G. Parkhurst; trustee for three years, James B. Shaw. The other officers are to be appointed, and all will be installed this evening by District Deputy Smith of Warren.

A citizens' meeting of all who are interested in relieving any cases of destitution which exist in town, or which may exist, is called for to-morrow evening at 7.30 at the district court room. This is done that all such cases may be systematically looked after, and the deserving poor supplied with the necessities of life without making them town charges.

At the annual meeting of the Ladies' Society of the Congregational church Monday afternoon these officers were elected: President, Mrs. Laura Child; vice presidents, Mrs. G. H. Fisherdick and Mrs. L. M. Burleigh; secretary, Mrs. J. C. Wing; treasurer, Mrs. C. L. Gardner. During the past year the society has raised about $450, and expended $721 in repairs on the parsonage.

Sunday morning at the Congregational church the usual service will be somewhat shortened, and after the sermon new members will be received and the sacrament of the Lord's supper will be observed. The pastor will be assisted in this service by Rev. Mr. Howie of Princeton, N. J. In the evening there will be a musical service under the care of the Men's Sunday Evening Club, followed by a sermon by the pastor on "A Vision of Hope and a Lesson for To-day."

The senior class of the high school has engaged Ralph G. Hibbard, professor of elocution in Wesleyan University at Middletown, Ct., to read in Holden's opera house on Friday evening, the 19th. Prof. Hibbard is an exceedingly popular reader, and is well known throughout New England. The entertainment will be one of rare merit, and all will want to hear this popular entertainer. The tickets will be 25 cents, with 35 cents for reserved seats. The 25-cent tickets will be sold by the high school pupils, while the reserved seat tickets will go on sale at Allen's drug store at noon of the 15th.

Next week is the week of prayer, and the subjects suggested by the Evangelical Alliance are: Sunday, "Pentecostal Power;" Monday, "Humiliation and Thanksgiving;" Tuesday, "The Church Universal;" Wednesday, "Nations and Their Rulers;" Thursday, "Foreign Missions;" Friday, "Home Missions and the Jews;" Saturday, "Families and Schools;" Sunday, Jan. 14, "The Second Coming of Our Lord." At the Baptist church the week will be observed with special services every evening except Monday and Saturday, short sermons being preached Wednesday and Friday. At the Congregational church there will be services on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings.

There was a good attendance at the annual meeting of the Baptist church Monday evening. After supper came the roll call and election of officers, which resulted as follows: Clerk and treasurer, C. B. Fiske; collector, N. W. Chandler; executive committee, the clerk and C. E. Fuller, E. B. Taylor, G. W. Camp, John H. Shaw; prudential committee, the pastor, deacons, clerk and Mrs. J. C. Rich, Mrs. P. M. Shearer; baptismal committee, A. E. Fitch, William Rhodes, Mrs. C. Moulton, Mrs. G. W. Camp, Mrs. C. E. Fuller; auditing committee, Mrs. A. S. Campbell, J. J. Prentiss; soliciting committee, Mrs. L. G. Parkhurst, Mrs. E. G. Buss, Mrs. C. Moulton, Mrs. A. E. Fitch. An informal ballot on the question of retaining the present pastor resulted in 29 for and 20 against him. An adjourned meeting will be held next Monday evening.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the fire department has received a check for $100 from the town of Monson for service rendered at the fire which burned Central block a few weeks ago. The expense to the department was $42.50, for men, etc., leaving a balance of $57.50, which it is suggested be applied toward the purchase of a bell for a fire alarm, to be placed on the tower of the engine house. The present location of the striker in the tower of the Universalist church is not the best, as it is not convenient to get at in case it does not work well, and the last three weeks have been hard ones on the apparatus on account of the ice storm which sagged the wires so that telegraph, electric light and fire alarm were considerably tangled. The firemen would much prefer a new striker, one which has a different tone from the present one, and the church people would like to get the apparatus out of the tower.

It was the good fortune of a Montague woman to receive the $500 prize for the best exhibition of fancy knitting at the World's Fair, and that woman was Mrs. A. M. Lawrence, niece of Hubbard Lawrence of Palmer. Concerning the work and the prize the Amherst Record says:

Mrs. A. M. Lawrence of Montague, well known in Amherst in years gone by as Miss Hattie Root, has received notice that she has been awarded the $500 prize for the best exhibition of fancy knitting that was exhibited at the World's Fair at Chicago, there being six thousand competitors. The $500 was offered by the Glasgow Thread Company for the best exhibit wrought with their celebrated knitting cotton. The work of Mrs. Lawrence consisted of an elegant and elaborate bed spread and bolster; the spread was formed of 30 panels or squares seven inches long and six inches wide, the task of knitting each one being from four to six days. These panels were framed in a basket work of white satin ribbon two and a half inches wide, the whole forming the body of the spread. A broad trimming of knitted lace of beautiful pattern to correspond with the panels gives finish to the edge. A bolster of elegant design and separate from the spread, but forming part of the exhibit, is worthy of mention as a splendid piece of work alone. All this work was made of Glasgow knitting cotton No. 80, and 10,000 yards and over were used, requiring from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 stitches, each one requiring careful attention in setting. The spread and bolster were on exhibition through the entire period of the fair, and among the many admirers of fancy knitting it was adjudged to be much superior to anything in that department. The Glasgow Thread Co. returned the spread to Montague last week with notice of the reward.

State Primary School Notes.

A new hen house has been completed, with ample room for keeping 200 fowls.

A number of the children will assist in an entertainment at the Baptist church next Wednesday evening.

The teachers are making arrangements for the first of the winter entertainments, to be held at an early date.

Thomas H. Benton, state visitor for the boys of the Lyman school, spent Saturday afternoon at this institution.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins spoke to the children last Sunday morning from these words: "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might," using a branch of mistletoe to represent the strength derived from the world, and pointing out the oak as a symbol of the spiritual strength mentioned in the text.

Probate Court Matters.

At a session of the probate court in Springfield Wednesday the following business was among that transacted: Administration granted in the estates of—Margaret Fitzgerald, late of Monson, George H. Newton administrator; Edgar W. Royce, late of Wales, William W. Leach special administrator. The will of Eli Rogers, late of Monson, Henry G. Rogers executor, was approved. Accounts were rendered in the estates of—Noah G. Stebbins, late of Hampden; Amasa Harvey, late of Monson; H. T. Dewey, late of Monson; Sophia B. Holmes, late of Monson. An inventory was filed in the estate of Algernon S. Flagg, late of Wilbraham, personal $1561. Affidavit of notice of appointment was received in the estate of Frederick Fay, late of Monson. Permission was granted to Albert P. and Addie A. Cross of Springfield to adopt Harold E. Moore of Palmer, and change his name to Frank A. Cross. Report of commissioners received in the insolvent estate of Gideon S. Moore, late of Monson.

Superior Court Cases.

In the superior court at Springfield Ellie Randall of Holyoke brings suit against Nelson Randall of Belchertown for $10,000 damages for alienating the affections of her husband, Clinton W. Randall, to whom she was married August 10, 1890, and with whom she avers she lived happily, a child being born to them in the meantime, but that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully "enticed her husband away from her to her great damage and distress." Charles W. Alden of Ludlow sues the city of Springfield for $2000 because the water commissioners flooded his land by letting the water out of the reservoir. George Fisher of Palmer sues the Boston and Albany road for $2000. These actions of contract are entered: Elisha Prentice of Otis against Anson and Juliet Soule of Wilbraham for $500; the Woonsocket Machine and Press Company against the Monson Woolen Company for $500; A. W. Stacy of Belchertown against George W. Richards of Holyoke for $300; William Pickhardt & Kuttruff of New York against the Monson Woolen Company for $1000.

A horse belonging to George Keith of Belchertown ran away one day this week, in consequence of which the vehicle became a total wreck, but Mr. Keith escaped without injury.

The person who reported that Mr. Bengle was about to move his shoe business from this place was greatly in error, as Mr. Bengle is having a profitable trade, and has no intention of leaving the place.

Next week is the week of prayer, and services will be held every evening at 7.30, alternately at the Baptist and Union churches. Mr. Weeks will speak at the Union church, and Mr. Butler at the Baptist.

A good story is going the rounds of a certain young man in this place who assumed the responsibility of escorting a young lady to her residence one evening this week. It seems that the young fellow was dilating on the glories of the Northern lights, and while thus engaged a rival relieved him of his protegee.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 3, 1894.

With the inauguration of the new state government the administration of Massachusetts becomes Republican for the first time since 1890 in all its branches. The change will not be noticed so much in the legislative department as in the executive. There will be fewer Democratic candidates for office in the executive chamber. The callers will be a majority of Republicans, instead of the other stripe, and there will be more than the change of personnel in the faces which are seen in the west wing of the state house. The Democratic incumbency has been longer than ever before since the ante-bellum period. William Gaston was there in 1875 and Benjamin F. Butler in 1883, but after one short year they retired to make room for a Republican, Gaston for Alexander H. Rice and Butler for George D. Robinson. It does not seem 10 years since the first inauguration of Robinson, but we count Robinson three years, Ames three, Brackett one, and Russell three, and so we fill out the decade. The return of a Republican governor finds a Legislature more strongly Republican than when Robinson followed Butler.

In no recent year has the Republican strength been as great in the Legislature as this year. In the House there are only 53 Democrats, whereas in 1891 they had 98. In the Senate there are only seven, but in 1891 they had 20, or an even half of the Senate. It was felt at that time by many enthusiastic Democrats that they were on the rising tide of popularity, and that the current of popular opinion would speedily give them permanent possession of both House and Senate, as well as of the governor's chair, for that was the first year of Russell's administration. But they have been compelled to look upon a steadily receding tide of popularity, as witnessed by the votes in the Senate and House, till now the ebb tide of seven and 53 respectively has been reached. Still, I remember that in 1878 the Democrats had only two Senators. That was in the midst of the hard times following the greenback collapse of 1873 and, taken with this year, helps to prove that in hard times people are more disposed to vote the Republican ticket.

The Senate Republican caucus was Tuesday evening, and Senator Butler of New Bedford was speedily and harmoniously nominated, as were the other officers of the Senate. The House Republican caucus was held Wednesday forenoon at 10 in the Green room, and the result was the nomination of George von L. Meyer of Boston by 148 votes to 29 for Arthur H. Wellman of Malden and one for Arthur S. Kneil of Westfield. This vote for Wellman was in consequence of a determination reached Tuesday night by a conference in the United States Hotel. But after the majority for Meyer, Mr. Wellman moved to make the nomination unanimous and Mr. Kneil seconded the motion. Thus there was harmony in the Republican camp from the outset. Now that the nominations are over, there is a general feeling that two very excellent men are in the chairs of the two branches. They are clean, honest, public-spirited and ambitious to have honorable administrations. They have the thorough confidence of their associates, and so the organization is under most happy auspices.

It is certain already that a great popular contest will rage in the Legislature over the question of taxation. On one side will be the farming interests and the weight of the assessors of the state and other powerful forces, while on the other will be the business elements of the cities and the men who believe that they are progressive in the science of taxation. The first great matter of interest will be the report of the special committee of last year's Legislature to revise and codify the tax laws. This report will be made early in the session, and will be divided. It is currently reported that the majority of the committee will be in favor of the double doomage law of putting taxes again on mortgaged real estate, of compelling the disclosure of the names of holders of stocks of foreign corporations, and perhaps of the taxation of church property. They would put the screws on more rigorously than ever. They would compel a citizen, under heavy penalty, to make oath to all the property he has which is subject to taxation, and they would put a heavy penalty upon the assessors who failed to exact the sworn statement from the taxpayer. Thus doubly guarded they believe that the law can be enforced, and that henceforth there will not be so many hundred millions to escape taxation. The State Grange has been in this fight for three years, while the other side has a small but wealthy organization which will do hard work this winter for a relaxation of thg present strictness in tax laws.

The Legislature of 1894 will be the last to occupy the present historic and beautiful halls. In 1895 the House will take its place in the new hall, which is in the corner of the state house extension on Mt. Vernon and Hancock streets. This hall has something like a dome, but nothing nearly as beautiful as the dome of the present House. There will be more convenience in the new hall, but it is sadly lacking in that majesty of proportion and that symmetry of feature and decoration which is the rare charm of the present house. Not all new things are improvements upon the old. LANDON.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Another Fire.

The large house at North Monson occupied by J. M. Heery and owned by the Monson Woolen Company was destroyed by fire early this morning, with all of the contents. The fire was first seen by Night Policeman Rood in this village, about 3 o'clock, and an alarm given, but only chemical engine No.2 was sent to the fire, as it was evident that no good could be done. The house was an old one, and burned like tinder, being consumed in a short time. The fire evidently caught from the chimney, from the wood fire in the furnace in the cellar. Mr. Heery had been away for the past two weeks, and the house was in charge of the hostler, who had not been in it since some time yesterday morning. The loss on house and contents will probably be about $5000. The building was one of the old landmarks of Monson, having been built by Deacon Andrew W. Porter, who also owned the mill property. It was sold by him with the mill to Albert Norcross, and by him to Jared Beebe, being occupied during his ownership by Henry G. Rogers. Mr. Beebe sold it with the mill property to the Monson Woolen Company, and it has been occupied by John M. Heery, one of the firm.

A Successful Year at the Creamery.

The annual report of the Monson Cooperative Creamery Association is very flattering, and reflects credit on the management. During the past year it has liquidated all outstanding debts and declared a 6 per cent dividend. The association has paid a fourth of a cent more per space for cream than in previous years. The highest price paid during the year was four cents per space, which is equal to twenty cents a pound for butter, and the lowest price paid was three cents per space. The average price received for butter during the past year was 28 cents. The creamery has consumed 316,312 spaces of cream, making $51,153 pounds of butter. The amount received for butter was $13,933, and for cream $10.770 was paid. The total expenses, including the 6 per cent dividend, were $2808, leaving a balance of $355. At the annual meeting of the association, held last Saturday afternoon, the following officers were elected: President, O. A. Bliss; vice president, Horace Bumstead; treasurer and superintendent, F. L. Ball; directors, Myron Leonard, Mark Noble and S. M. Stebbins.

Mr. Valentine of Spencer is visiting Rufus Aldrich.

Twenty-five tramps put up at Hotel Newton in December.

Miss Esther Holmes is wiring her stable for electric lights.

William Bolton of Moulton Hill has sold his farm to A. Delphia.

Ex-Senator Pinney of Stafford visited friends in town to-day.

Albert Blanchard has bought of Seneca Conant a wood lot for $50.

Dr. A. D. Coleman has returned to the Philadelphia Dental College.

Miss Carrie Richmond of New Bedford is the guest of S. F. Cushman, Jr.

Clara Germain of Northampton is the guest of Superintendent Reinhart.

The Windsor Club is to give a whist party to lady frends next Tuesday evening.

Miss Mary Feather spent the first week of January visiting friends in New York.

A physician direct from Asia is to speak in the Congregational church at an early date.

Mrs. Rufus Leach of Somerville has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Day.

Miss Abbie Fuller of Springfield has been the guest of Mrs. Alanson L. Fuller the past week.

Mrs. Elbridge B. Potter went yesterday to Grafton, where she will remain for two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Norcross sung at the funeral of Dr. E. W. Royce of Wales, last Monday.

Lyman Miller is absent for a week, visiting friends in Boston, South Framingham and Walpole.

Fayette Thompson of Springfield spent Sunday with his father, George Thompson of South Monson.

The Dorcas Society of the Congregational church meet Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. William Needham.

Miss Lora E. Purcell of Norwood is spending a few days with her mother, Mrs. Webber, on Pearl street.

Miss Esther R. Holmes and Miss Mabelle Anderson entertained the Ladies' Whist club Tuesday afternoon.

The Christian Endeavor societies of the Congregational and Methodist churches are arranging for a union meeting.

Mrs. Joseph Sunter is badly poisoned by handling dogwood which she used for fuel, and is under the care of Dr. Fuller.

A valuable horse owned by O.P.Holdridge was shot Friday on account of a broken leg, having been kicked by another horse.

Day Spring Lodge of Masons will hold a semi-public installation of officers Jan. 16th, followed by refreshments and a social.

The Odd Fellows will install officers next Thursday evening, the installing officers being District Deputy C. E. Fuller of Palmer.

A small but pleasant theater party attended the matinee at the Court Square theater in Springfield last Saturday afternoon.

The Monson National Bank declared a 4 per cent dividend New Year's day, which speaks well for the banking business of Monson.

The junior society of Christian Endeavor of the Congregational church will meet with the senior society Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.

The engagement of Robert H. Cushman and Miss Mabelle K. Flynt, two of the leading young people of the town, has been publicly announced.

The Monson stone cutters who have been employed on the large mill at Baltic, Ct., are home for the winter vacation, but expect to return in the spring.

The watch meeting at the Methodist church Sunday evening was well attended. Rev. Mr. Hatch of the Congregational church preached the sermon.

Every lady purchasing $2 worth of goods at the shoe store of G. L. Fuller is being presented with a bottle of Black Diamond shoe dressing, to introduce the goods.

A rather unexpected whist party was held at the home of Miss Letha Potter New Year's afternoon, many of the young ladies and gentlemen of the academy attending.

The sunrise prayer meeting held in the Congregational church New Year's morning was well attended, there being 40 present. The meeting began at 7.14 and lasted half an hour.

W. F. Cook, the leading monumental dealer of Springfield, has presented to Flynt Park some rare and valuable specimens of polished marbles, American and foreign granites.

George L. Keeney opened his new store, on the site of the old engine house, Wednesday morning. The apartments are light and spacious, and he has a full line of entirely new goods.

Mrs. W. N. Flynt was called to New York to-day to the funeral of her cousin, Marshall Blake. Mr. Blake married a sister of Henry Wyles of Brimfield, and was known by many here.

Frank Johnson gets the gold watch which G. L. Fuller gave to the person guessing nearest the time at which it stopped. It ceased to run at 5.23, and Mr. Johnson guessed 5.25.

R. M. Reynolds, who has been so long confined to his house, went to Boston Friday to attend a meeting of the stockholders of the New England railroad, of whose stock he is a large holder.

Rev. Phillip J. Lee, brother of Rev. J. F. Lee of Monson, who was ordained to the priesthood at Baltimore last Saturday, celebrated his first mass in St. Patrick's church in this place last Sunday.

Mrs. W. N. Flynt entertained her Sunday school class Monday afternoon and evening. Tea was served, and a very enjoyable hour was passed by all. It has been Mrs. Flynt's practice for several years to thus entertain her class.

The entertainment, "Still Waters Run Deep," presented at the Universalist church Tuesday evening by John Burgess Weeks of Tufts College, was very pleasing. About 200 were present, and the young people cleared $17.

Under the auspices of Monson lodge of Odd Fellows the Payson Male Quartette will give a concert at Memorial Hall January 16th. It will be remembered that the glee club sang at one of the Republican rallies, and was much enjoyed.

At the regular meeting held in their new apartments last week Thursday the Odd Fellows elected the following officers for the coming six months: N. G., R. Clifford Millar; V. G., Edward H. Graves; R. S., Samuel E. Howard; P. S., Frank A. Bills; T., John Cross.

The Windsor Club held its annual meeting Tuesday evening, electing these officers: Vice president, H. M. Bacon; clerk and treasurer, S. Newton; directors, Henry Wentworth, C. W. King, F. L. Shaw, H. M. Bacon, L. C. Flynt. The president will be elected by the directors.

The firemen did good work in saving the stable at the Heery fire at North Monson this morning. All the members of the company know what to do and are not afraid of work. Monson is indebted to A. D. Norcross for its fire brigade, as it was by him that they were organized and drilled.

The services of the week of prayer will begin next Sunday in the Congregational and Methodist churches. Union meetings will be held in the Congregational church Monday evening, and in the Methodist church Tuesday evenings. The meetings on the other evenings will be held in the respective churches.

Dr. F. W. Ellis of Monson and Miss Martha Clark Alvord of South Windsor, Ct., formerly a teacher in the academy here, were married on Wednesday of last week at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. Frederick Alvord, father of the bride, performing the ceremony. Only immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis arrived at their home here last Friday evening.

The town records for the year 1893 show a smaller number of deaths than in 1892, and an increase in the number of marriages. In 1893 there were 58 deaths and 30 marriages, while in 1892 there were 73 deaths and 23 marriages. As yet the list of births has not been completed, but from the numerous congratulations which have been offered during the past year it is safe to say that the births will exceed both deaths and marriages.

At the meeting of the school committee last week it was decided to open the State street schoolhouse for the winter term, and accordingly the school in Day's block is discontinued. School commenced in the new schoolhouse Tuesday morning. The matter of furnishing the students of the academy with text books in geology and astronomy was not decided. The committee has decided to strictly enforce the law regarding vaccination.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist church held a very pleasant sociable in the vestry Wednesday evening. Following the supper was a musical and literary entertainment of unusual interest, with this programme: Recitation by Miss Mabel Watson, singing by the Misses Williams, recitation by Miss Minnie Smith, singing by a quartette composed of Misses Williams and Messrs. Watson and Osborne, recitation by Miss Kennedy, reading by Miss Amy Eaton, singing by the quartette.

Saturday the skating on Ellis's Pond was perfect, and throngs of merry skaters improved the opportunity. In the afternoon Horace Broughton and Miss Annie Rathburn suddenly broke through the ice, but fortunately for them the water beneath was very shallow, as they were near the shore. Broughton was able to help Miss Rathburn out, and by the timely assistance of Rufus Cushman himself reached terra firma. They repaired to a neighboring house, and the accident only resulted in the young lady catching a slight cold.

The Sunday school committee of the Congregational church has arranged for the canvassing of the entire town, in order that no young person who is able to attend Sunday shall be out of one of the four schools. The town has been divided into 24 districts, and these have been assigned to competent persons who will begin the canvass immediately. All who are not able to attend the school at the church will be urged to join the home department, a feature of Sunday school work that is fast coming into prominence. All who express a preference for any of the other churches will have their names and address handed to the Sunday school superintendent of that church. It is hoped that this will increase the members in the different schools very much.

Marcus Keep G. A. R. Post and the Woman's Relief Corps held a joint installation New Year's night at Grand Army Hall. Past Commander Alvin A. Gage installed the following officers of the past Commander, George M. Severy; senior vice commander, Henry O. Nelson; junior vice commander, Henry E. Bugbee; quartermaster, John C. Aldrich; surgeon, William J. Ricketts; chaplain, Wilbur M. Fay; adjutant, George H. Foskit. Past Department Senior Vice President, Mrs. D. S. Davis of Palmer installed the following officers of the Woman's Relief Corps: President, Mrs. Susan E. Thrall; senior vice president, Mrs. Sarah L. Warren; junior vice president, Mrs. Maria L. Rood; secretary, Mrs. Lillian L. Chapin; treasurer, Mrs. Lucy J. Aldrich; chaplain, Mrs. Mary J. Bradway; conductor, Mrs. Ella S. After the exercises an oyster supper, with cake and coffee, was served, followed by impromtu speeches by A. A. Gage, H. Chapin, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Thrall, G. H. Foskit, G. M. Severy, L. Rood, H. Exley, and others, a reading by Miss Winnie Smith and a piano solo by Mrs. Chapin, making altogether a very pleasant affair.

Academy Notes.

The students of the academy have organized a young people's whist club, and hold their first meeting this evening with Miss Gertrude G. Gage on Main street. This meeting will be for the election of officers and the choosing of a name. The members of the club comprise four tables.——The union prayer meeting was held Tuesday at the close of the school, and a large number —50—were present. The meeting was led by Principal Burke.——The stars and stripes were unfurled at the academy for the first time this year Monday, and in honor of New Year's day there was only one session, closing at 1 o'clock.——The senior class has secured the Schubert Ladies' Quartette to give one of their popular concerts on Friday evening, Feb. 2d. This quartette gave a fine concert here last year, and it is hoped that the churches will plan to keep this date open, and that a large number of people, in fact all lovers of music, will plan to attend.——The social given last Friday evening was unusually well attended, and besides the various games which have been handed down from antiquity, several new ones were introduced, including an orange race, which the boys won twice out of three times.——At the regular meeting of the Lino society last Friday afternoon, the following officers were elected: President, D. J. McCarthy; vice president, Leo R. Burrows; secretary, E. B. Flint; treasurer, James Closson; librarian, Horace W. Cristy; prudential committee, George W. Brown, A. M. Walker, L. A. Prouty. This committee was authorized to act in conjunction with a similar committee appointed by Philo society in arranging for the public meeting, to be held Friday, March 23. George H. Brown was chosen editor of the Lino paper, the official organ of the society, published once a year.——At the regular meeting of the Philo society last Friday evening the following officers were chosen: President, Miss Mabel F. Gates; vice president, Miss Grace S. Cushman; secretary, Miss Mary C. Fitzgerald; treasurer, Miss Myrtis A. Perrin; prudential committee, Miss Katherine Smith, Miss Maud Aldrich, Miss Mabel E. Watson.——The regular meeting of both societies occurs next Friday evening, and the following programme will be given by the Lino society: News for the week ending Jan. 5, E. B. Flint; news for the week ending Jan. 12, President D. J. McCarthy; debate—"Resolved, that no circumstances can justify a departure from the truth," affirmative, W. C. Nelson; negative, G. Leonard Phillips; recitation, G. W. Brown; essay, L. A. Prouty.——All post graduates and special students are obliged to pay their own tuition, beginning this term.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

A barn owned by James Eagan, situated a half mile east of this place, was burned Thursday evening of last week, with its contents. The loss was $500, and the insurance $300.

GLENDALE.

Miss Young of Springfield has been visiting at the home of Mrs. O. F. Benedict.

There was a Christmas tree at the church Christmas night. Recitations were given by the children, and a pleasant time was enjoyed.

There will be evening meetings at the church this week, commencing Tuesday and ending Friday. Mr. Simondson of Ludlow, and other good speakers are expected.

Rev. Mr. Miller, who supplies the Methodist church at Hampden, preached at the church here Sunday, Mr. von Bast having gone to New York on a Christmas trip.

Mark Mills, who met with an accident about four years ago which injured his spine so that he has been confined to his bed ever since, is about once more and able to ride.

Mrs. Jenks, who has been seriously ill at the home of her son, F. G. Shaw, had her hip broken last week Thursday night while being raised in bed to take medicine. Owing to the patient's age and sickness the accident is a serious one.

At the close of the prayer meeting in the Congregational chapel last week the clerk of the church read the resignation of Deacon C. B. Southwick, the senior deacon. Should he persist in declining a reelection it will be a selious loss to the church.

John Montague, 55, a brother of Prof. Montague of Amherst College, died at his home last Saturday after a short illness. He was an upright and much respected resident of the town, had been a member of the Congregational church for 37 years, and held many offices of trust, being collector of the church at the time of his death.

WALES.

H. E. Shaw took some fine pickerel through the ice this week, having one which weighed upward of three pounds.

Dr. E. W. Royce died at his home here last Saturday, aged 43 years. He was born in Wales, and when about 20 years old began to make medicines of various kinds and peddle them. Soon he fitted up a large team and hiring a man to help him traveled, selling large quantities. Then he began to study medicine and commenced to travel making some wonderful cures. Later on he opened an office in Hartford, Ct., where he did an extensive business. Finally he discontinued that and has for ten years, with the exception of the three last years, traveled in Vermont, lecturing and practicing medicine. The last few years he has had an office in the Glendower Hotel in Springfield, where he has carried on a large practice. He is supposed to have amassed quite a large estate. He has been very benevolent to his friends at home, especially to his brother, who has been in feeble health, his mother and four sisters. One brother survives him. Dr. Royce's health had been breaking down for the last two years, and he gave up entirely about three months ago. He was a great sufferer most of the time until his death. His funeral was attended Tuesday by Rev. Isaac Booth of Vermont, an old acquaintance of his. Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Norcross of Monson sang two appropriate pieces, and his body was placed in the tomb.

WARREN.

The young society people of the town contemplate giving a dress ball next Friday evening.

Dr. and Mrs. Hamlin of New York city were in town Tuesday, the guests of Everett Sherman.

Mr. Johnson of Springfield is moving into town, to the farm recently purchased of John McKinstry.

Miss Jennie Livermore and Miss Fannie Gates are home from teaching in Chicopee and West Springfield.

The personal property of the late Ursula J. Shaw will be sold at auction at the town hall next Tuesday at 10 o'clock a. m.

John Noyes was confined to the house this week with the grippe, but is improving and will leave soon for New York, to resume his business as commercial traveler.

Communion services will be held at both churches next Sunday, at the First church immediately after the morning service, and at the Second church at 1 o'clock.

The year's supply of ice is being harvested, and the neighborhood in the vicinity of the pond had a lively appearance on Wednesday and Thursday. The ice is nine inches thick, clear and firm.

The high school opened its winter term Tuesday, with Prof. Earle as principal, and Miss Wood of Boston and Mr. Sparhawk of Randolph, Vt., as assistants. The reception and entertainment given by the members of the senior class at the close of the fall term was well attended, and a pleasant evening passed.

Probably few if any people in town now will remember the original of the following sketch, taken from a New York paper, dated Dec. 28: Hosea Sprague of Homer, in this county, is to-day 100 years old, and is the oldest man in the county. He was born in Brimfield, Mass., but has lived in Cortland since 1821. He is very active, and is quite a wrestler even now in his old age. His wife is 83 years old. This morning they walked half a mile to a photograph gallery and were photographed, and then walked back home.

WILBRAHAM.

The following are the names of the officers of the Congregational Sabbath school for the ensuing year: Superintendent, James Phelps; assistant, Mrs. Lurien Potter; secretary, Bert Eaton; treasurer, Lillie Phelps; librarian, Walter Bliss; chorister, Frank Gurney.

The following Wilbraham people were at home for the holidays: Harry Clark and Frank Howard of Amherst Agricultural College, Prof. L. M. Brewer of Leicester Academy, Dr. C. S. Merrick of Worcester high school, Miss Mabelle Phelps of Concord, N. H., high school, J. Wesson Phelps of Harvard College.

Charles Knowlton, an employe of the academy, was considerably hurt last Friday while leading a bull to water. The animal attacked him and knocked him down, but he pluckily held to the ring in the creature's nose and got him back in the barn without assistance. Dr. Webber dressed his wounds, one in the face requiring six stitches.

The home of Dexter Phelps was the scene of a very pleasant gathering last Friday evening, the occasion being a musicale given by Mr. Phelps complimentary to Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Chapman of Meriden, Ct. Mr. Phelps has been in business connection with Chapman & Co. for the past nine years, and has recently been chosen one of the company's directors. The following was the programme:

For that tired feeling resulting from a sluggish system drop coffee and use Ayer's Hygienic.

No one in ordinary health need become bald or gray, if he will follow sensible treatment. We advise cleanliness of the scalp and the use of Hall's Hair Renewer.

During the past half-century—since the discovery of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the average limit of human life in civilized countries, has been considerably lengthened. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is everywhere considered the standard blood purifier, the Superior Medicine.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

The promptness with which Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stops a hacking cough and induces refreshing sleep is something marvelous. It never fails to give instant relief, even in the worst cases of throat and lung trouble, and is the best remedy for whooping cough.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

The Track of Progress.

In all the scientific advancement which has been made there is nothing which has attracted more attention and certainly nothing which is of more vital consequence to all than that which has been made in the treatment of disease. There are thousands of sick persons and invalids all over the country who have until recently been unable to avail themselves of the most scientific medical aid.

Through the thoughtfulness and kindness of that great benefactor of mankind, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., all those who are suffering from any form of disease all over the land through letter correspondence. People can consult him by letter absolutely free of charge. Dr. Greene is the most successful specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases; he is the discoverer of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters received by him and writes the patient a full description of the case. The Doctor uses nothing but harmless vegetable remedies and has had wonderful success in curing disease through letter correspondence. Send for one of his symptom blanks and he will write you a full description of your disease and give you advice in regard to its cure, free of charge.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. SPRINGFIELD, MASS., January, 1894.
We want everybody to have a copy of our Book Catalogue for 1894; free.
It gives our prices for books. Book-buyers everywhere ought to know our prices.
Fashions for 1894 is going to be so good that every woman ought to have it twelve months in the year.
Send 50 cents in silver or stamps.
Just now we think the virtue of economy is uppermost in peopless estimation. Just now, therefore, we are going to see how low we can sell goods.
Friday, January 5th, we open the greatest special sale of muslin underwear ever made in this market. The bargains to be offered have never been equalled, and must command attention from all over the western New England.
Every garment will be worth more money than anything you ever saw at the price—worth more in work, worth more in style.
Make up your mind to be present either Friday or Saturday.
South entrance.
About 400 jackets will go at prices just one remove from nothing—$2 apiece, some of $4.50, $7, $9.50 and so on. Every jacket is worth at least twice its price; some jackets three or four times that probably.
The early comers will pick out the best of them; but the rest will be cheap enough after the best are picked out.
Main floor, Pynchon street building.
Stock-taking causes us to put down prices of dress goods suddenly and savagely; not all sorts and not much of any sort; but sorts enough.
Fancy jacquard effects go down from 37½ to 25 cents; all wool suitings go down from 50 to 25 cents; Scotch cheviots, English checks, two-toned hop sackings and other fancy weaves of many sorts go down from 75 cents and $1 to 50 cents; fancy weaves of fine wool go down from $1 and $1.25 and $1.50 to 75 cents and $1.
It requires some pluck to mark down so; but that has to be done in a quick store, if it is to be kept quick.
Left aisle.
Stock-taking causes us to sell various items in linens, and the linens are just as well worth full prices as anything we've got, so far as we can see.

Doctors Discouraged, Relief Found.

Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kaikaska, Mich., writes: "I am as certain as I now live, that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease." If you are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetes, or any urinary trouble, you should use this only cure.

"I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors but got no relief. Upon advice, I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; a few bottles entirely cured me." 40

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I [illegible] my own work. On my recommendation [illegible] bers are taking this valuable remedy." [illegible] Morgan, 669 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

Woman's Sense of Humor.

Women's got no sence o' fun, thet's as true as true can be.
Don't know nothin' 'tall 'bout wit, 's anybody well kin see.
Take a joke like them o' mine—finest jokes I ever knew—
I can't make no woman laugh; jokes is things they can't see through.

I upsot a pail o' soap—softest soap man ever seen—
Over old Bill Tompkins' head, two years gone last Halloween.
Marthy never seen the fun; said 'twarn't nothin' but a trick
I should be ashamed on. Bah! Folks like that—they makes me sick.

Then I bought a punkin pie—scraped the punkin out of it,
Filled it up with salt—haw! haw!—and of pepper quite a bit.
Sent it round to Wilkins' last Thanksgivin', Made a fight.
Wilkins knocked my hat off, and Marthy said it served me right.

New Year's eve I stoled a hoss, for a joke on Silas Gale,
Marthy saw the fun 'o that—when Si had me stuck in jail.
Queerest creature, Marthy is. Never sees my jokes at all;
But when stupid folks does things, my! how she will laugh and bawl!

So I says that them as says women's got no sense o' fun
Hits it right, as sure as wheat, sure's the moon is not the sun.
Can't see jokes onless they be flat, an' stupid, 'thout a bit
Of any substance in 'em that resembles true and A1 wit!

FATE.

If Charley Jherkins had not determined to economize he would have dined down town instead of setting his face resolutely to the west and walking firmly homeward.

If he had not been walking home he would not have met his cousin Mabel, who, with a friend, was standing on a street corner.

If he had not met them he would not have heard Mabel's wistful comments on the theatre.

If he had not heard those comments amply enforced and corroborated by her friend he would not have invited the two girls to the theatre and afterward to supper.

If he had not been down town after the theatre the cable car would not have stopped (so Charley says), and he would not have been compelled to hire a carriage, making a grand total expense for the evening of $17.35.

Thus, if Charley had not firmly determined to economize he would have dined down town at a cost of 75 cents; whereas, he did decide to economize and expended $17.35.—New York Recorder.

The Bridge of Sighs.

It Was Dreaded More Than Death.

They Who Crossed it Never Returned to the Sunlight.

What Connection Has It with the Present Generation?

The celebrated Bridge of Sighs has always been looked upon as the acme of suffering and misery. With what a feeling of horror we think of the thousands of victims who have crossed it never to return. But there is another bridge, almost as old as the world itself, and which is as prolific of suffering to-day as in the early ages. There is a bridge connecting health and disease which has caused more sighs in the history of the world than any structure built by the hand of man. It is a subject for universal sadness when we think how many are daily crossing this bridge. Can we return, or must we leave the sunlight of health forever behind us? This is indeed a fearfully important question. This query interests us as it interested a young lady of our acquaintance named Miss Jessie McVey, who resides in Irvingtown, Ind.

"I had always been rather robust and well," she said, "until the last two or three years, when it so happened that I overtaxed my strength in trying to do too much work. I had a spell of nervous prostration and was so weak all the time I could scarcely get around.

"I have also been troubled with rheumatism more or less for a long time, which grew worse after my nerves became weak. Of a morning I would feel more tired than when I went to bed, and on going upstairs I would give clear out by the time I reached the top, and my heart would flutter and feel as though it was up in my throat.

"My head also troubled me a great deal. My face would flush up in a moment and my eyes would burn and hurt, and my head would feel as though it would burst; at the same time my feet and hands would be cold.

I was also troubled with catarrh for several years.

MISS JESSIE McVEY.

"I got medicine from several doctors, and it seemed as though it helped me some at the first, but in a little while I would feel as bad, if not worse than ever. I began to be discouraged when I saw an advertisement of how Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy helped others who were worse off than I was, and I concluded to give it a trial. Before taking half a bottle I began to feel better. I did not feel so tired and nervous. My head felt better and my appetite improved. I have taken three bottles and keep on improving. I think this wonderful medicine cannot be praised highly enough, for it makes the weak strong and the old feel young again."

Thanks to this remarkable medicine, they who have strayed from the paths of health and started to cross that perilous bridge leading to fatal disease, may return to the bright sunlight of a happy life, free from the sighs and sorrows of suffering.

The world is filled with sickness and suffering, with persons who are in need of just such a valuable medicine as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

If you are troubled with nervousness, headache, palpitation, stomach, liver or kidney complaints, all of which indicate a more or less exhausted condition of the nervous system and disordered state of the blood, take this remedy, which is purely vegetable and harmless, and which has been made famous by so many remarkable cures and by healing the sick and suffering all over the land. It has entered thousands of homes, the occupants, stricken with disease, worn out with care and bowed down with sorrow, hardly knew where to turn next for a helping hand, and it has raised up the sick, strengthened the weary watcher and brought happiness to all, and has indeed transformed the mournful, sorrowful abode of disease into a happy, healthy home.

Dr. Greene, the great specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted at his office, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free of charge, personally or by letter.

Dear Golden Lil.: I am surprised
And shocked at your behavior,
You don't appreciate the work
Of him who'd be your savior.

A pretty mess you've made of it,
Why don't you take your throne back?
If you won't let me restore your crown,
I'll let you take your own tack.

Here I've been sending out such men
As Willis and as Blount is,
And told them that to root for you
Their duty paramount is.

And they did root, majestic Lil,
You'll back me up in saying that.
But I can't do the job alone;
That's what, alas, I'm praying at.

I'm running these United States
With hardly any aid at all:
And it keeps me mighty busy, too,
I tell you, royal jade and all!

For I have congress on my hands,
A bilious job for any man;
These vassals always think they know
As much as Grover Cleveland can.

Consider all the pains I've had
To raise your measly throne again;
And after all the work is done,
You won't accept your own again!

It is not right! It is not just!
Do think the matter over now,
And notify without delay,
Your great and good friend Grover now.

ASTONISHING FACTS.

One gallon of water weighs ten pounds, so the number of gallons in the Pacific is over 200 trillions, an amount which would take more than a million years to pass over the Falls of Niagra. Yet, put into a sphere, the whole of the Pacific would measure only 726 miles across.

The Atlantic could be contained bodily in the Pacific nearly three times. The number of cubic feet is 117, followed by seventeen ciphers, a number that would be ticked by one million clocks in 370,000 years. Its weight is 325,000 billion tons, and the number of gallons in it seventy-three trillions. A sphere, to hold the Atlantic, would have to be 533⅓ miles in diameter. If it were made to fill a circular pipe reaching from the earth to the sun—a distance of 930,000,000 miles—the diameter of the pipe would be 1,837 yards, or rather over a mile; while a pipe of similar length to contain the Pacific would be over a mile and three-quarters across. Yet the distance to the sun is so great that, as has been pointed out, if a child were born with an arm long enough to reach the sun, it would not live long enough to know that it had touched it, for sensation passes along our nerves at the rate of 100 feet a second, and to travel from the sun to the earth at that rate would take a century and a half, and such an abnormal infant is an unlikely centenarian.

The rest of the sea includes the Indian ocean, the Arctic and Antarctic seas, and various smaller masses of water. It covers an area of 42,000,000 square miles, and would form a circle of 7300 miles in diameter. The average depth may be put at 2000 fathoms (12,000 feet), and the contents at 95,000,000 cubic miles. It weighs 390,000 billion tons, and contains eighty-seven and one-half trillion gallons, while it would form a column, reaching to the sun, 2000 yards in diameter.

If we combine into one vast whole these various figures, we arrive at some stupendous results in answer to the question, "How big is the sea?"

Its area of 140,000,000 square miles could be confined by a circle of 13,350 miles across. The relative size of the areas of the whole surface of the earth, of the whole sea, the Pacific and the Atlantic, are represented by circles the diameters of which are in the proportions to one another of 158, 133, 95, and 62, respectively, or by a crown for the surface of the earth, a half-crown for the surface of the whole sea, a shilling for the surface of the Pacific, a threepenny piece for the surface of the Atlantic.

Supposing the sea to be formed into a round column reaching to the sun, the diameter of the column would be nearly two and a half miles. The Pacific would form 53,000,000 miles of its total length of 93,000,000 and the Atlantic 18,000,000.

If it were a column of ice, and the entire heat of the sun could be concentrated upon it, it would all be melted in one second, and converted into steam in eight seconds, which illustrates the heat of the sun rather than the size of the sea.—Boston Gazette.

HIS SCIENCE AT FAULT.

A phrenologist who has been touring the country and giving lectures in the art tells the following "good one" on himself. He was in the habit of inviting people of different avocations to come upon the stage, and he would dilate upon and expound their cranial construction. He had come to that portion of his lecture where he dealt with the criminal form of crania, and addressed the audience:

"If there is any person present who at any time has been the inmate of a prison he will oblige me by coming upon the platform."

In responce to this invitation a heavily built man went up.

"You admit that you have been in prison, sir?"

"I have, sir," was the unblushing answer.

"Would you kindly tell us how many years you have spent behind prison bars?"

"About twenty years," unhesitatingly replied the subject.

"Dear, dear!" exclaimed the professor. "Will you sit down, please?"

The subject sat down in a chair at the center of the stage. The professor ran his fingers rapidly through the hair of the subject and assumed a thoughtful expression.

"This is a most excellent specimen. The indications of a depraved character are very plainly marked. The organs of benevolence and esteem are entirely absent; that of destructiveness is developed to an abnormal degree. I could have told instantly, without the confession of this man, that his life had been erratic and criminal. What was the crime for which you were imprisoned?"

"I never committed any crime," growled the man in the chair.

"But you said that you had been an inmate of a prison for twenty years?"

"So I have, but I never committed any crime."

"Will you tell us why you were there then?" persisted the professor.

"Why, you fool, I am a jailer!" snapped the subject, as he left the chair.—New York Herald.

A GUN TOO BIG FOR THE COUNTRY.

The rulers of the miniature republic of Andorra decided recently that the country should possess a cannon. Krupp, therefore, was ordered to manufacture one of the most modern type. The great gun arrived at its mountain destination a short time ago, and was placed on the highest point in the "country," so that the citizens could see that the valley was well protected. A day was appointed to try the cannon, which was able to send a ball 18 kilometers. Just as the two artillery men of Andorra were ready to fire it occurred to one of the prudent citizens that the shot might cause some trouble. The territory of the republic of Andorra does not extend over more than six kilometers. To direct the shot, therefore, toward the surrounding mountains would be the same as firing at France or Spain, as the ball would necessarily fall on the territory of one of these countries. A war might be the result. It was then decided to shoot the ball in the air, but some one suggested that it would endanger the lives of too many people in descent, and possibly bore a great hole in the republic of Andorra. Good council prevailed and the two artillerymen were commanded to unload the gun. The shot has not yet been fired, and the good republicans are uncertain what to do with the expensive gun.—New York Tribune.

PEANUTS AND THEIR USES.

The "goober" industry of Norfolk is unique. Here a little city in Virginia has become the greatest distributing center of peanuts in the world. A peanut is a pretty small item, but an annual crop of something like 5,000,000 bushels, worth millions of dollars, makes a pretty big item. The demand for goobers has doubled within the last five years, and the supply does not fill the growing demand.

Few people know the curious uses in which the goober has been put in trade of late years. No other single plant raised in this country is used in so many different ways. The Chinese say that the cocoanut palm has as many useful properties as there are days in the year. The goober is not so universal as that; but it has as many valuable qualities as there are days in the week. The solid part of the nut is peculiarly nutritive, and supplies fruit and food for many a family. The vines make fine fodder, some say as good clover hay, while hogs fatten on what is left in the fields after the crop has been gathered.

If you grind the nut you get a sweet quality of flour, with which the housewife makes delicious biscuit. If you squeeze it you will obtain a valuable oil, resembling olive oil, and used for similar purposes. This oil also enters largely into the manufacture of the better grades of soap. The kernels are roasted for coffee. The roasted kernels are used also in the manufacture of some kinds of chocolate. The confectioner helps to ruin our digestion in boyhood days with peanut candy; the Georgia cook alone knows how to make rich pastry of pounded peanuts. The artist, with paint brush, silks and satins, creates novel and beautiful ornaments, so that peanut dolls and other curios may now be seen in the shop windows of New York, especially around holidays. These are some of the ways in which the leguminous nut is useful to us.—New York Independent.

INTRODUCTION OF ENVELOPES.

The late Henry L. Lipman of Philadelphia recently gave this interesting statement regarding the early use of envelopes in this country. About 1842 ungummed envelopes made their first appearance as a new importation from France, and I was the first to begin their manufacture in this country. Shortly afterward I improved them by adding gum to the flaps, and the gummed envelopes I made were the first which had been seen anywhere, and the first envelopes of any kind used by the United States government were made by me. The demand at first was very small; envelopes were as difficult to introduce as any new invention or improvement is at the present time, and they were considered only as a temporary fad which would soon go out of fashion again. That is the reason I did not patent or push them very hard, especially as I had a good trade in seals and sealing wax, and feared that envelopes would interfere with them. At first they were only used for business purposes, and it was some time before they were employed in social correspondence, as a person was considered lacking in respect to a friend when he had to lick the gum on the envelope sent him. I also made the first mucilage known in the United States, and when postage stamps were introduced, the contractor had to come to me to learn how the gum was made, and I gave him the information gratis.

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

THE FATNESS OF HEALTH.
How to Attain It.

If you are getting thin you are sick, though you may not know it.

If you are losing weight steadily, there is something wrong about you which needs looking to.

If you have always been thin, it doesn't follow that you are sick, but that you might be healthier.

You might be fat and plump, and strong, and hearty.

You can't be strong if you're thin.

Thinness isn't necessarily a sign of sickness (unless you commence to get thin and keep getting thinner), but it's a sign that you are in danger of being sick. It's a sign that if you get sick it may be hard for you to get well; that the least chill may cause a cold, the least cold become something worse. A sign that out of a small ailment may come gout, rheumatism, diabetes, consumption, rickets or scrofula, and many other sad diseases, which might have been prevented by healthy fatness.

Try, then, to be healthy and fat. It's not difficult. If you know how, the trying is both easy and pleasant.

In a few words, getting fat consists in eating proper food, food that contains the proper nourishment, food that digests easily.

Till a few years ago, doctors, as well as ordinary people, had a great many funny notions about the stomach; about how food was digested, and about what became of it after it was digested.

No one knows any better; no one had studied right. Not till some very eminent men gave the subject their special attention, did we get any real knowledge.

Most people (and many doctors) still think that everything you take into your mouth is digested in your stomach. This is wrong.

The only foods that are directly digested in the stomach are the albumens, and these, while important, are, if anything, the least important of the foods we digest.

To understand how to get fat, you must try to remember the following explanations:

All of the foods we eat belong to one of the four following divisions:

1. The Starches.
2. The Fats.
3. The Albumens.
4. The Salts.

The salts undergo no digestion at all, so we will not speak of them further.

The starches and the fat of the body are sometimes called fuel foods, because they supply our energy, our motive power. We burn them up in our daily life as the engine burns coal. Our fat is our reserve fuel. The starches, well-digested, make us fat.

The albumens are used in our body for the repair of worn out tissue, of which a small portion goes to waste every day.

The starches, then, form the fuel for our engine, the albumens repair the wear of machinery. With a good engine we need more fuel than repair material.

So unless you do hard labor, you need little albumen, but always plenty of starch.

Thin people often have better appetites than fat people, may even eat more; but still they don't get fat. What is the reason?

The reason is generally: bad digestion. Indigestion has of late years been proved to be the cause of a great proportion of all our diseases.

Indigestion can be cured without drugs, by eating proper food properly. Curing indigestion means getting normal fat.

You probably know what foods contain starch. If you want to get fat, these are the foods to eat.

If you want to know which of these to eat, consult your palate. Do you like it? Does it agree with you?

If not, don't eat it.

The old idea was, that to get fat, you must eat fat. Fat meat, fat oils, cod liver oil. This is wrong.

Starchy foods will make you fatter than oily foods. You could live without oily foods altogether, if you wished.

Starchy foods are generally more easily digested than oily foods, hence are better for the people who wish to get fat. If people are too fat they should not eat starchy foods. All doctors admit this.

Paskola is a starchy food. It's use will enable you to get fat, when all the starch and fat foods you eat do not help you. The reason for this is that it is already digested before you take it.

Paskola saves your digestive organs from having to work. When it reaches the intestines it is absorbed at once.

We said that getting fat consisted in eating proper food, food that would digest easily. Paskola is that food.

For a thin person, the certainty of getting fat depends almost entirely upon Paskola.

Most people eat enough in their daily meals to become fat, but the fattening food is not digested.

The old doctors told their patients, if they suffered from dyspepsia, that drugs would cure them; that drugs would help them get fat.

Even now many of them give pepsin and cod liver oil.

Pepsin won't digest starches or fats. It only digests albumen (lean meat, white of eggs, cheese, etc.)

Albumens are not fattening. If they don't agree with you, don't eat too much of them. Then you won't need pepsin.

Modern science has discovered that starchy food is the food for thin people. Paskola is the outcome of the most modern science. It is the best starch food. It is composed of the finest and most nourishing flours, artificially digested.

Paskola is pleasant to the taste. No cooking or other preparation is necessary. It contains no drugs or medicine. It has simply been digested by being treated with the substances which, in the healthy man, are used by nature to digest starch foods.

Paskola is nothing but natural food.

Consumption is wasting away and losing of flesh. It is but one of the many diseases we suffer from, caused by bad digestion.

Bad indigestion can be cured, the consumptive can gain flesh and strength, and this will help the doctor to cure the disease.

The way to do it is for the consumptive to take Paskola. Paskola will make anyone fat; even a consumptive.

Fatness, happiness and health. They all go together. How seldom do we see a fat unhappy person!

On the other hand the unhappy thin people: the dyspeptic, the consumptive, the nervous invalid. Why can they not all be fat? They would look so different. They would feel so different.

They could be fat, if they tried. The could even be well if they tried.

The way to get well would be to get fat; the way to get fat would be to take Paskola.

Paskola is for sale by all reputable druggists. Price 50 cents per packet.

The Sabbath Bells.

The snow without is falling,
And frost is in the air,
Yet the Sabbath bells are calling
Us all to praise and prayer.
The dove her way is winging
To the tower where she dwells,
Where she rests and hears the ringing
Of the soothing Sabbath bells.

What though the stars are falling,
With pleasure I'd applaud
The bells that now are calling
Souls to the house of God.
Up in the belfry swinging,
Their melody compels
Us to vibrate to the ringing
Of the solemn Sabbath bells.

How good on Sunday morning
Unto God's house to go,
To hear the preacher warning
Feeble ones against the foe.
O how sweet to hear the singing
That up to heaven swells,
Of which the prelude is the ringing
Of the sober Sabbath bells.

O were those bells in heaven,
How gladly we would go
On the first day of the seven
Christ to see and know.
Though to earthly steeple clinging,
Yet the tone of these foretells
That some day we'll hear the ringing
Of the heavenly Sabbath bells.

MOSES TEGGART.

THE SPELLING MATCH.

The first spelling match of the season was to be held in the Pickett schoolhouse on the evening of the 10th of November, and all the young people on the farms for twenty miles around were greatly excited over it.

At Rose Addison's appie-paring frolic the week previous the coming contest was the principal subject of conversation, and everyone present had something to say about it. There was no reasonable doubt as to the two who would be elected to "lead sides," for George Channing and Henry Libson had never failed to receive the greatest number of votes and took their honors as a matter of course.

But nothing was known as to their probable choice of followers, and some anxiety was felt on the subject, particularly among the girls, with whom George, by reason of his handsome person and pleasing manners, was a great favorite.

Henry Lisbon was a tall, shy, rather awkward looking young man, who was elected a leader principally because he was an excellent speller and inspired his followers with courage and confidence. It was flattering, of course, to be chosen his first assistant; but it was considered a far greater honor to be thus chosen by George, and there were several girls who would have felt very glad had they been sure of standing next to the latter during the match, the sharer of his hopes and fears as to its probable result, and the recipient of his smiles and whispered confidences.

George was greatly amused at the unusual attention he received from the girls at the paring frolic. He knew very well what it meant, but he kept his own counsel and gave no one any satisfaction as to his intentions.

"I haven't made up my mind," he said to Lindy Wheeler, who, made bold by anxiety, at last asked him to relieve the general suspense. "It is a grave matter, and requires careful consideration."

The evening of the 10th was clear and cold, the wheeling was excellent, and as carriage after carriage emptied its load of young people at the old school house, it became evident to every one that the spelling match would be one of unusual interest and competition.

At eight o'clock the voting began. Every one present was required to write on a slip of paper the name of the one he or she wished to lead, these slips being dropped into a hat. When counted, the two gentlemen receiving the greatest number of votes were declared elected.

In view of the popularity of George Channing and Henry Libson, this voting was a mere form, and George, sure of the result paid no attention to it after depositing his vote, which, of course, was for Henry.

He was mechanically counting the number of people crowned on one side of the forms near him, when it suddenly occurred to him that it would be well for him to decide whom he would favor for the "first call." With this purpose he looked about him, meeting, as he did so, half a dozen almost penetrating glances, from as many pairs of bright eyes.

His inclination pointed to Rose Addison, but he knew such a choice would arouse a great deal of ill-will and jealousy, for he had chosen Rose on several occasions the previous winter.

"Bother the girls!" he thought, "there's sure to be a fuss no matter how I choose."

As the words formed themselves in his mind his eyes fell on the tall, gaunt form of Debby Rawley, a girl apout 16 years of age, who had never appeared in a spelling match, but whom he knew quite well, nevertheless, having had occasion to call several times on her grandmother, with whom she lived.

Debby was called "odd" by her neighboors, and perhaps they had some cause to think her so, for her poverty obliged her to dress in all sorts of outlandish garments which had belonged to various dead relatives, and her consciousness of her grotesque appearance caused her to assume a cold and reserved manner, which, while it protected her from open ridicule, was calculated to give the impression that she was both rude and sullen.

She was attired to-night in a faded, shrunken, green worsted dress, trimmed with shabby ball fringe. About her shoulders was a rusty black shawl, and her head was covered with a red woolen hood of her own manufacture. She sat in a corner of the room, her bare red hands wrapped in one end of her shawl, and her feet tucked out of sight under her dress to conceal her worn and patched shoes. She looked as she felt, very lonely and ill at ease. No one present had recognized her by so much as a look, and her heart was filled with bitterness and pain. She wished most earnestly that she had not come, had not exposed herself to such coldness and neglect. But she was too proud to go home. That, she thought, would be a too open confession of her pain and chagrin.

George's eyes sparkled with mischief as he looked at her.

"I'll do it," he thought. "It will be a capital joke, and will give the girls something to talk about for the next six weeks."

At this moment the counting of the votes was concluded, and the school master announced that George Channing and Henry Libson had been elected by a tremendous majority.

Amid the loud applause the two successful candidates took their places in the two first forms, on each side of the room.

There was a breathless hush. The room was so still that the big clock over the blackboard could be distinctly heard. George had received a few more votes than Henry, and, therefore, had the privilege of the first choice; but, for a moment, both men were silent. Then "Debby Rawley" cried George, in a clear, ringing voice.

Poor Debby! She could scarcely believe her ears. Her face flushed, then grew deadly pale. It did not seem possible to her that she had been honored with the first call by this handsome young fellow with the laughing brown eyes. She made a motion to rise, then sank back in her seat again, trembling all over.

George saw her confusion and was touched by it.

"Come, Debby," he said kindly; "I'm waiting."

She rose and then took her place by his side, too much dazed and bewildered to see the contemptuous glances which were directed toward her.

There was a subdued whispering among the girls for a moment, but it ceased as Henry Libson called for Rose Addison, and the rest of the choosing proceeded rapidly until all were enrolled upon one side or the other.

The schoolmaster took up the spelling book and the battle began, those who misspelled a word being obliged to sit down at once. One by one they were vanquished, until at the close of the hour and a half, Henry Libson, George Channing, and Debby Rawley were the only ones left standing.

The excitment ran high, and all eyes were riveted on the remaining contestants. Debby's cheeks were flushed, her eyes shone like stars, and she had forgotten her shabby clothes and the neglect with which she had been treated in the beginning of the evening.

"We mustn't be beaten, Debby," whispered George, as the schoolmaster paused to turn over a leaf. "I depend on you, remember."

"I'll do my best," whispered Debby in return, smiling up at him.

The spelling continued and opinion was about equally divided as to which would win; but at last Henry Libson failed on a common word of only two syllables, and a deafening cheer resounded through the old schoolhouse, as with a forced smile he took his seat.

All was confusion at once; everyone crowded around George to congratulate and shake hands with him; but he was not too much engaged to notice that Debby had left his side and was trying to force her way through the crowd to the door.

He hastened after her and stopped her just as she was going to open the door.

"Surely you are not going yet!" he said.

"Yes, I must," she answered; "grandma will be anxious about me."

"But you ought not to leave me to bear the burdens of our honors alone," he said laughing. "You ought to stay and take your share. If it hadn't been for you our side would not have won. You surprise me, Debby. I didn't think there was anyone in Grundy county except the schoolmaster who could spell down Henry Libson."

"I study at home at night," said Debby in a low, unsteady voice; and with a little nod she walked away from him and went out into the night.

At 10 o'clock the school house was empty, and the first spelling match of the season—which was to have a result of which George little dreamed—was over.

The next day George had occasion to go to town. His way led him by the small farm of Debby's grandmother, which, badly managed for many years, yielded but a meager living for the two women.

Debby was at the window of a front room as George drove by; but the next moment she had thrown open the door, and, without hat or shawl, was flying down the path that led to the gate.

"Stop!" she cried, "I want to speak to you."

George shouted "Whoa!" pulled up his horses, and jumped out of his wagon.

"Anything wanted in town?" he asked.

"No, no," said Debby. "I—I only wanted to thank you for choosing me last night." The tears sprang into her honest eyes. "It—it was so kind of you," and the tears falling fast by this time, she rushed back into the house before he had time to say a word in reply.

He stood still a moment, staring after her, then climbed into his wagon again and drove on. He didn't resume the whistling of "The Last Rose of Summer." which Debby's appearance had interrupted. His face was grave and thoughtful.

For nearly a mile he let Dobbin and Whitefoot choose their own gait. Then just as the wagon was entering town, he aroused himself with a start.

"Confound it all!" he muttered. "I wish now I had asked her out of kindness."

There were several other spelling matches held in the Pickett school house during the winter, but Debby did not attend them, and George, who entered college in the spring, saw her only at long intervals during the next five years.

At the end of that time Debby's old grandmother died, and Debby, after selling the farm to a Norwegian who had recently come into the neighborhood, left her old home forever, telling no one whither she was bound.

Seven years later, George Channing, who had become a lawyer and was enjoying an excellent practice in Detroit, was disturbed one morning while engaged in his office on a brief, by the entrance of a tall, good-looking, well-dressed lady, who, instead of returning the business-like bow with which he greeted her, advanced toward him with both her hands outstretched.

"You don't know me?" she cried. "You don't recognize Deborah Rawley!"

Deb! Little Deb, of Grundy county?" exclaimed George. "It can't be possible."

"Be a little more respectful sir, in addressing me," laughed Deb. "Dr. Rawley, if you please," dropping him a little courtesy.

"Dr. Rawley!" repeated George. "Oh, nonsense!"

"It's true," said Deb, still laughing. "Sit down and I'll tell you all about it."

And then, in a few words, she gave him the history of her life since she had left her old home. With the proceeds of the sale of her farm she had gone to college in Michigan and taken the medical course, graduating at the end of three years with high honors.

Her money was exhausted by that time, but an old professor who had taken a warm interest in her from the beginning paid her expenses to New York, where she spent a year in the hospital, learning much that she could never have learned anywhere else. Then she began the practice of her profession at Chicago, had soon been able to pay off her debts, and now, after three years of hard work, was taking a much-needed rest of a few weeks among the lakes and rivers of Michigan.

"Look at me," she said. "I am not yet 30, and I am in the possession of a good practice, and I am on the road to fame and fortune. Don't you think I have cause to be thankful to you, Mr. Channing?"

"To me?" said George. "What do you mean? I've had nothing to do with your success. It is due entirely to your talent and perseverence."

"No," said Debby, "it is due to the kind words you spoke to me at that spelling match nearly twelve years ago. I had never had any attention or tenderness shown me in all my life before, and when you, in the kindness of your heart, honored me—poor, despised and shabbily dressed as I was—with 'first call,' I knew how to appreciate it. And when you told me afterward that I had surprised you, I made up my mind to surprise you still more some day. I lived on those words for five years, studying harder than I had ever done before, and then the chance came to me to have the instruction I so ardently desired. I seized it at once, and behold me a flourishing physician!"

She ended with a laugh, but there were tears in her bright, dark eyes.

"I refuse to take a particle of credit to myself," said George, with great earnestness. "Please don't accord it to me even in your thoughts."

"'Honor to whom honor is due,' always," she said, rising to go. "If it hadn't been for you I should probably have vegetated on that little Illinois farm all my life."

George went to the window and watched her as she walked away. There was a look of pain and chagrin on his handsome face.

"I would give a thousand dollars this minute," he said, speaking aloud, "if I could only feel that I had asked her out of kindness. I couldn't look her in the face when she was telling me about it, and I felt as it I deserved a ducking under the nearest pump. My conscience will never be easy until I tell her the truth, though of course she will despise me forever after."

But though he made it a point to see Debby whenever business took him to Chicago, he never had the courage to make his confession. And perhaps it was just as well that she never heard it.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

HIS ANGEL.

Summer after summer the writer had noticed an old man sitting on the stoop of a tumble-down cottage in the suburbs of one of our seashore watering places. He sat day in and day out alone, and in the same position, smoking his pipe. It was evident that he was poor, and that he was led to the house by some disease. Yet he always seemed cheerful and interested in things about him. This summer we missed him from his stone step and thought no more of it.

Within a few days an accident in which this man had a part has come to our knowledge. It is worth repeating. To more than one mind and heart the knowledge of it had been a stimulus and benefit.

One of the families summering by the seaside town has for several seasons driven almost daily past the old man's house. Several children were in the family, among them an observant girl of thirteen.

No one else in the carriage had given the stranger more than a moment's notice; but she began to watch for him whenever the horse turned the corner that brought his little one-story cottage in sight. He looked so ill and patient and helpless that she pitied him. Toward the close of the season her sympathy led her to bow timidly as she passed. The old man returned her salutation, and for the few fall days that were left a smile passed between the gray invalid and the little summer girl.

But the child did not forget her new friend all that winter, and when the family went to the seashore the next spring, she bought a package of fruit, the best she could get, and was very silent about it.

On the way from the station when the carriage came opposite the family cottage, she called to the coachman:

"Stop here, Joe! Tell him to stop, mamma!" and springing from the carriage she ran up to the steps and laid the fruit on the old man's knee.

"I'm glad to see you sitting in your old place," she said. "I have thought about you all winter."

"Thank you for the fruit, miss," said the old man. "Thank you heartily. I'm mighty glad your 'round once more. I missed you when the cold weather came."

"May I call and see you again?" she asked timidly.

"Maybe it'd be too much trouble, miss, but it would do me a world of good," replied the invalid. He watched her to the top of the hill until the carriage sank out of sight.

From this time, Freda began to call at the cottage once or twice a week, and took the sick man little presents, and read to him as well as she knew how. He fell to calling her his "little angel," and his wife said he became restless to see her on the days she was expected to call. She too grew fond of him. He must have been a rough man once, but he had become gentle and tender as a woman.

His helplessness and his eager joy to see her were a constant stimulant and delight to the child.

Last fall, before the family went to the city, Freda noticed that he was growing feebler. So with her mother's permission she began to write to him after her return home, and he wrote a few letters in reply.

By the time cold weather came he was confined to his bed.

On the approach of Christmas Freda went to a fashionable grocery store and with her mother made up a box of dainties, such as are nourishing, and that tempt the appetite of people who are sick; and such too, as only a rich and self-denying person would select. When the expressman took this box of canned soups and fruits and jellies and wonderful modern delicacies into the sick man's house, it was received with astonishment and delight.

Such a package had never before entered there. It was hardly known there were such dainties. The invalid was so much excited that he had the empty box put beside his bed, where he could constantly see it.

One evening he called wildly for his "little angel." His wife brought a picture of the child, which had been sent to him, and with his eyes fastened on the portrait of perhaps the only person but his wife who had gone out of the way to do him a kindness, he passed gently away.

The old man lived on the only road that leads to a settlement of about a thousand summer visitors, who each year pass his house, and amuse themselves only a mile away. Out of the thousand this child was the only one to notice the invalid and do this Christ-like deed. We should be sorry to think that the usual proportion of practical Christianity to summer boarders is no larger.

This experience, which became more than an incident in the lives of a happy family, may afford a hint and an inspiration to most of us who can do as much, or more.

GETTING INTO LINE.

"Did yez notus phwat's happened to us?" said Mr. Dolan, as he raised his eyes from the account of the recent election.

"Troth, an' Oi did," replied his companion.

"Be gob, an' Oi think Oi'll change me polliticks."

"Yez ain't goin' to be a Republican, are yez?"

"Divil a bit. Do yez moind phwin the Republicans was in, the chappie with a bang they sent away?"

"William Walter Phelps?"

"That's the duck. An' now wid the Democrats, do yez notus the plum that goes till the gent wid the windy glass in his oye?"

"Van Alen, yez mane."

At Night.

At night
The whirl of life grows still;
The throbbing of the noisy mill,
The pulsing brain and hands that till,
At night grow still.

At night
The stars come out and keep
Their watch through all the hours of sleep,
O'er dreaming land, and solemn deep,
And those who weep.

At night
We rise above the care
And pettiness that all must bear,
And breathe the sweet and purer air
That angels share.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

MRS. CHANT ON AMERICAN WOMEN.

"Talk about nervous prostration," said Mrs. Chant, as she chatted after a recent meeting of Sorosis over her cup of 5 o'clock tea, without which the English woman doesn't seem to be able to exist. "I call nervous prostration just a fashionable name for la

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 12, 1894.

It is an unusual thing to find Massachusetts town officials before the courts for neglecting to provide suitable schools, and yet the selectmen of Becket were placed in such a position last Saturday. Massachusetts has a better reputation than that.

How true it is that it's an ill wind which brings no one good. While sharp cold weather will bring additional suffering to some, it would be a blessing to the 15,000 men and boys who are waiting for the Hudson river to freeze hard enough to allow their employment at harvesting the ice crop.

Now that two cremations have taken place in Massachusetts, the first being the body of Lucy Stone on December 30th, and the other that of Frederic A. Henshaw of Waban last Friday, others will doubtless follow. Taken altogether this is the most desirable of all methods of disposing of the bodies of departed friends, yet it cannot be expected to be generally adopted all at once.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has gone out of the business of restoring deposed queens to their thrones, at least until Congress advises him what to do. Minister Willis, it seems, secured the consent of Liliuokalani of Hawaii to all the conditions imposed by the president in the event of her getting back her power, and then the demand was made on the provisional government to step down and out. But this it declines to do, alleging that it is amenable to no foreign power on earth, is perfectly capable of taking care of itself, and has never offered to submit its rights to the United States or any other power. The game of bluff didn't work, and Willis is presumably obeying his instructions to await further orders. Meanwhile the president has turned the whole matter over to Congress and washed his hands of it. It is likely to take him some time to get the odor off.

It may well be questioned whether indiscriminate feeding of all who apply under the guise of "out of work," is calculated to accomplish the best results, and whether it is not more likely to do harm rather than good. Chicago seems to be having an experience which would indicate that such a course is quite likely to operate disadvantageously The city has made arrangements to feed all who ask at soup houses, and as a result contractors cannot get men to work, though plenty of labor is to be had on the drainage canal at 15 cents an hour. It may not be luxurious wages, but many a man supports a large family on no greater, and in these times it certainly would keep body and soul together. Milwaukee is having the same experience, the men refusing to work as long as they can get fed for nothing. Possibly a withdrawal of the rations might encourage the men to do a little something for themselves.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 10, 1894.

The wheels of the new state government are running so smoothly that they cannot be heard in the reporters' gallery of the House of Representatives. Private Secretary Thomas takes readily to the duties of his new office, for it is natural to speak first of the man with whom we come most in contact, and the governor seems to be getting rapidly accustomed to the duties of his office. To be sure, he has not reduced his hours to the system which Gov. Russell observed, but doubtless this will come as soon as he realizes how much of his time will be taken up by office-seekers, unless he reduces them to terms. It is said by one of the oldest attaches of the executive chamber that, taking the different administrations as they come and go, it will average that half of the governor's time is consumed in hearing personal applications for office, or in reading or answering letters on the subject. This shows what a great waste and detriment to public business our chronic office-seeker is, to say nothing of the distastefulness and annoyance it must be to the governor. It was a practice of Gov. Ames, so he once told me, to have a successor always picked out for every man in public office, so that if an emergency arose by the sudden death or resignation of any of them, he could have his new man ready and could say truthfully to all other applicants that the office was filled already. In this way he stole a march on the office-seekers and kept up the service of the state to its high standard. Ames used to give about half his time to his gubernatorial duties, his business habits making it easy for him to dispatch business. Besides this, he had in Col. Geo. H. Campbell an unusually efficient private secretary.

The annual report of the state civil service commission, which was made public Wednesday, is right in line with the agitation which the reformers have kept up for years. After showing that in the past year there has been a larger number of examinations, or applications for certified clerks, and a larger business all around for the commission than in any year before since it was established, they make a warm argument to the effect that if the reform had been impracticable, if it had discriminated unjustly against any worthy class of men or women, if it had operated to the detriment of the service, then this would have been proved in the nearly 10 years that the law has been on trial. But the truth is there has been no agitation whatever for the repeal of the law, nor has there been any desire expressed, as far as known, that it should be repealed. On the contrary, there has been a warmer support for the law during the past year than ever before, and it has been extended in its scope until it is now carried about as far as it can be in the state and city service. If the cities which do not have it in their labor service wish to employ it there, the commission will help them to the extent of about $200 apiece a year.

The state pension agent has some interesting facts in his annual report, bearing on the policy of the national administration in regard to the payment of pensions. He says that many pensioners were thrown off the lists because, under the rulings of the new commissioner, it did not appear that they were entitled to receive aid from the government. These pensioners, believing that they could furnish the new proof of disability demanded by the government, went to work and collected it. This threw a great deal of work upon the Massachusetts pension office, but it was so successful that the agent reports that only six pensions in all the state, as far as he knows, have been permanently left off the rolls. He urges men who want pensions to transact their business through his office, rather than to burden their congressmen with it, for he has as good facilities for getting favorable action as any member of Congress. The record of the pension office shows a large amount of business for the past year.

Corporation matters are likely to be very prominent before the present Legislature. There has been created a joint special committee on corporation laws, and there seems to be no doubt that the measures which were defeated at the last session, those to regulate steam and street railway corporations, water companies, and gas and electric light companies, will be pressed hard again this year. The railroad situation has already opened with interest, for there has been introduced in the Senate by Mr. Fitzgerald of Suffolk an order for an investigation by the railroad committee into the relations of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad with the New York and New England road. It is about the same order as was adopted last year, and may not lead to anything, but it is important that the matter is brought forward so early in the year.

There has been sent to the Legislature the many petitions to the state board of education for the establishment of a new state normal school. They make a very large package, and they will doubtless receive the careful attention of the Legislature. Many towns in the north of Worcester county are represented in the list, but the petition which was circulated in Franklin county was probably the most shrewdly drawn, for it asked for a school in the county, without specifying the town. Greenfield would probably be chosen, and thus the whole county would be satisfied.

Holders of gas and electric light stock need to keep their eyes open, for a measure is pending which will extend the powers of cities and towns to take existing plants or to duplicate them. It is a favorite idea with the nationalists that the cost of duplication should be the measure of the price which a city or town should pay for any existing gas or electric light works.

Both branches are holding very short sessions now, for the committees have not begun their hearings, and there are no reports to act upon. Now is the chance to expedite business by beginning hearings in good earnest, as soon as possible. LANDON.

PALMER NEWS.

TO RELIEVE NEEDY POOR.

A Committee Appointed to Look After Deserving Cases of Destitution.

There was a good attendance Saturday evening at the meeting called in the court room to consider the best method of relieving such cases of need among the poor as were worthy, but which disliked to apply to the overseers of the poor for aid. Dr. W. H. Stowe was chairman and F. B. Pope secretary. Among those who addressed the meeting were Dr. Stowe, Mrs. William Merriam, W. H. Brainerd, J. C. Wing, C. E. Fuller, Rev. F. E. Jenkins, F. B. Pope, Rev. S. T. Frost, H. C. Strong and Rev. H. F. Moulton. How to relieve the people who might be suffering for necessaries in the way of food or clothing, but who were too proud to apply to the overseers of the poor, seemed to be the question under advisement, and it was claimed that many such cases existed. Dr. Holbrook, however, doubted that there was a case of actual want in town; the town had always cared well for its poor, and he thought none would sufferer for necessaries rather than apply to the overseers. Others thought that if there were no such cases in town, Palmer was an exception to the rule. Finally a committee consisting of C. E. Fuller, Rev. W. H. Hart and G. H. Hastings was appointed to take care of any cases which may be reported. The committee has organized with Mr. Fuller as chairman and Father Hart as secretary. Mrs. Maria Lawrence has given the use of the vacant store in the Lawrence block on Main street, and the committee has already commenced to receive contributions. These will be listed and placed in the room; when application is made to any of the committee for any article it will be taken from the stock on hand and crossed off the list, no record being made of the matter. In this way persons who are really in need of aid can receive it without the fact being made a record of to be handed down in the town's archives. Responsible persons who know of cases of want can get the key of the room from some member of the committee and select such articles as are needed, not even the committee knowing to whom they go. Articles of all kinds are solicited, either food or clothing. One merchant has promised to give ten bushels of potatoes, and deliver them wherever desired. If more is received than is needed in Palmer, there are plenty of places to which it can be sent and used to good advantage.

Rev. S. T. Frost, of the Baptist Church, Does Not Suit All the Members.

For some time there has been a growing dislike among the members of the Baptist church to the pastor, Rev. Mr. Frost, who came here from Ashland a year ago the first of this month. Mr. Frost is a decidedly outspoken man, and is not always judicious in his remarks or the time and place of saying them. The first of the open dissatisfaction developed one Sunday last summer, when differences of opinion were exchanged in the evening prayer meeting between the pastor and one of the church members, the latter being somewhat criticised for certain of his actions. At a recent exchange of pulpits with another pastor he made some sharp animadverting statements which his own church members thought at least unwise under the circumstances, and later at a union meeting again pursued the same course. Mr. Frost is very determined in his ways, and some of the members of the church thought he was doing more harm than good by his course, and that it would be better for all if he were to go. At the annual meeting on Monday of last week the matter was brought up, but as there was no article in the warrant under which it could be legally acted upon, an informal vote was taken, resulting 29 to 20 in favor of the pastor. The money for the expenses of the church is raised by pledges, and the amount promised fell off materially, only a little over $6 per week being available if Mr. Frost was to remain. At the adjourned meeting Monday evening of this week a motion was made to appropriate $500 for pastor's salary, instead of $900 as last year. Mr. Frost was moderator and declared the vote a tie, casting the deciding ballot in the negative. A motion to make the sum the same as before was announced carried, 18 to 16, after which he refused to entertain a frankly expressed doubt of the vote. The meeting was not altogether harmonious, and another meeting has been called, to see if the pastor will be given three months' notice that his services are no longer required, as by the terms of the contract with him either party must do.

A Prosperous Year With the Palmer Savings Bank.

The incorporators of the Palmer Savings Bank held their annual meeting Monday afternoon. Enos Calkins, who has served as vice president, trustee and member of the board of investment for a number of years, declined a re-election, and his place on the board of trustees was filled by the election of James S. Loomis. The officers elected are: President, H. G. Loomis; vice presidents, George Mooers, T. D. Potter, C. E. Getchell; secretary, W.W. Leach; treasurer, H.W. McGregory; trustees, James B. Shaw, George Mooers, H. G. Loomis, T. D. Potter, H. P. Holden, E. G. Hastings, C. L. Gardner, R. C. Newell, F. F. Marcy, H. Waid, W. W. Leach, C. H. Hobbs, C. E. Getchell, G. E. Buck, A. L. Hills, William Holbrook, J. S. Loomis; board of investment, George Mooers, C. E. Getchell, T. D. Potter, H. G. Loomis, E. G. Hastings, James B. Shaw, C. H. Hobbs; auditors, W. W. Leach, A. L. Hills. While many other banks have reduced their rate of interest during the past few months the Palmer bank has not done so. Its deposits during the year were $15,000 greater than the previous year, while in spite of the hard times it paid out only $9000 more than in the preceding twelve months. The bank carried $3500 to its guaranty fund during the year, and is in every way better than ever before. The statement January 1st was:

Home Missionaries to Meet in Palmer.

A Home Missionary rally will be held in the Congregational church next Thursday afternoon and evening, with the following programme:

2 00 p. m. Devotional exercises and address by pastor.
2 30. Home Missions from a Woman's Standpoint.
Woman's Home Missionary Association.
Miss Anna A. Pickens of Boston.
Woman's Work in Our Great Cities.
Miss M. D. Moffatt of New York.
3 30. Our Work at Home.
Secretary Joshua Coit of Boston.
4.00. The Opening of a New Country.
Rev. J. H. Parker, Supt. Oklahoma.
7.30 Home Missions Through a Stereopticon.
Secretaries Puddifoot and Shelton.

As will be noted, the first hour of the afternoon addresses will be given by women, though it is not exclusively a women's meeting. The stereopticon views to be shown in the evening illustrate the home life of the immigrant previous to his coming to this country, and give a most comprehensive idea of the work of the Home Missionary society in the great cities, among the poor whites at the South, and in all parts of the great West. The churches invited are: Indian Orchard, Monson, Brimfield, Warren, West Warren, Thorndike, Three Rivers, Belchertown, Wilbraham, North Wilbraham, Ludlow, Ludlow Center, Ware, Gilbertville, and Hardwick. The ladies of the Palmer church will furnish tea and coffee at 6, and the visitors are expected to bring their own lunch.

The Journal's Art Series.

In the last two columns on this page will be found the announcement of an art work which the JOURNAL has arranged to furnish to its readers. It is entitled "The Magic City," and is a series of photographs of the buildings and exhibits at the World's Fair, and scenes on the Midway Plaisance, with a description of each. The work will be issued in 16 numbers, one each week, each number containing twelve to sixteen fine half-tone views, the size of the page being 11 by 13¾ inches. A heavy coated paper is used, and the work is in every way first-class, not inferior and muddy, as in the case of so many similar works now being put out. The subscription price of this work is $25 per year, which would be almost 50 cents per week, but by special arrangements with the publishers, the JOURNAL is able to offer it at a greatly reduced rate. The JOURNAL next week will contain a coupon, which when accompanied by ten cents will be accepted for part No. 1 of this fine work. After next week two coupons and ten cents will be required. The parts can be had at this office, or can be mailed to any address without additional expense. A sample copy of part one can be seen at this office, and those who wish an accurate and artistic souvenir of the World's Fair should not fail to get these numbers.

Downfall of a Former Palmer Man.

George E. Potter, who was architect for the Flynt Building and Construction Company in this place at the time of the formation of the company 10 years ago, was sentenced by the police court at Hartford Tuesday to four months in jail for drunkenness and breach of the peace. It is said that Potter has had a very severe attack of the grippe and is mentally unbalanced. When brought into the court room he presented a curious appearance. He could hardly walk because of rheumatism, and he was very poorly dressed. In his hand he carried a Bible, while he had a large bunch of keys attached to the cane with which he supported himself. Potter has been going down hill fast for the past five years, and his downfall seems to be complete. He was a good architect before he took to drinking, and did considerable work in Springfield, including the Five Cents Savings Bank block, Madden's block, the old Hope church chapel and other structures. He also drew plans for about twenty-five churches in New England. His son lives in Hartford, and the father has been living there, but lately the latter has been threatening to kill his daughter-in-law, and his children were afraid to have him around.

A New Electric Company.

A new electric company was formed in this place yesterday afternoon. Its name is the Central Massachusetts Electric Company, and the stock is $150,000. The officers are: President, A. M. Young of Waterbury, Ct.; vice president, R. S. Hicks of Stafford Springs, Ct.; clerk, W. W. Leach of Palmer; treasurer, C. B. Fiske of Palmer; directors, George Flynt of Monson, Rufus Flynt and C. E. Fish of Palmer, N. D. Grannis and A. M. Young of Waterbury. The Palmer and Monson Electric Company is to sell out to the new concern, which proposes to furnish Warren and West Warren with lights at an early date.

Mrs. A. H. Willis of Boston visited friends in town yesterday.

A number of Palmer people attended the Masonic ball at Ware last evening.

Holden & Fuller's woolen mill shut down yesterday noon for the rest of the week.

Buck, C. A. LeGro, Rufus Flynt, H. W. McGregory, W. H. Small, C. E. Getchell, R. C. Newell and C. H. Hobbs.

Mizpah Chapter of the Golden Rule Alliance met at the house of H. Lawrence Tuesday evening and elected these officers: Judge, O. P. Allen; associate judge, S. H. Brown; treasurer, E. J. Wood; scribe, Mrs. A. E. Wood; collector, C. W. Cross; chaplain, H. Lawrence; warden, Mrs. H. Lawrence; sentry, Mrs. O. P. Allen.

J. E. Amidon has traded his farm on the road to Brimfield, near Cooley's Crossing, known as the Weeks farm, to E. H. Fisk of Westfield, who has sold it to Porter Plympton. The latter sale was made through the D. F. Holden agency of Palmer, which has also this week sold the Austin farm between South Spencer and Charlton.

At St. Paul's Universalist church last Sunday the Sunday school made choice of these officers: Superintendent, F. A. Royce; assistants, Edward Brooks and O. M. Graves; treasurer, W. W. Leach; librarian, George Sumner. Next Sunday Rev. H. F. Moulton will commence a class for young men, and W. H. Small a young people's Bible class.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Palmer National Bank Tuesday afternoon L. E. Moore declined a reelection as president, and these officers were elected: President, James B. Shaw; vice president, E. Fairbanks of Warren; directors, J. B. Shaw, E. Fairbanks, C. B. Fiske, J. F. Holbrook, C. D. Holbrook, Dr. G. H. Wilkins, G. M. Atkins; cashier, C. B. Fiske.

E. R. Pierce of the Converse House gave his employes a supper and dance Tuesday evening in token of his appreciation of their faithful services in his behalf. The supper was served by Landlord Sullivan of the Nassowanno House in the dining room of that hotel, after which, with a few invited guests, dancing was in order in the Nassowanno House hall. A merry time was had by all present.

The officers of the Grand Army post and the Woman's Relief Corps were installed Wednesday evening in the presence of a number of invited guests. After the installation exercises, which were very pleasing, refreshments were served, an entertainment programme of singing and recitations was rendered, there were speeches by several members of both orders, and a social good time until a late hour.

Clifton Elmer, whose mother is housekeeper for Newell Taylor and whose father lives in Greenfield and tries to collect the boy's wages, was in town again last Saturday to see his mother and get his clothes. He claims to have enlisted in the Brazilian army, and expects to start soon for that country. Elmer is divorced from his wife and claims that she and Taylor have enticed the boy away from him.

A change of time on the Boston & Albany road last Sunday now brings the western express to Palmer at 9.03 p. m. instead of 8.40, as formerly. Since the change a few weeks ago the New York express at night passes the accomodation at West Brimfield, instead of Palmer, which is not relished by those east of Palmer who formerly could take the accommodation to this place and then the express here, which now cannot be done.

At the adjourned meeting of the Baptist Sunday school last Sunday the following officers were elected: Superintendent, A. S. Campbell; assistant, Mrs. G. W. Camp; superintendent primary department, Mrs. H. C. Strong; secretary, Miss Bertha Eastman; treasurer, Mrs. Cambridge Moulton; librarian, Cambridge Moulton; organist, Luther Cobb; assistant, Miss Anna Spaulding; chorister, E. B. Taylor. The treasurer reported about $20 on hand.

The wires for the Postal Telegraph service are strung, and the office will be ready for business as soon as the instruments arrive. They have been promised for a number of days, but have not yet put in their appearance, though expected every day. The office will be connected with the telephone exchange. A door has been cut between the room used by the electric company as an office and the room west of it, the latter now being the office of the electric company.

The case of destitution which was reported as existing on Fox avenue last week was not nearly as bad as appeared from the story after it had been repeated a few times. Certain articles of clothing were needed, and some articles of food which are usually found in the majority of families, but that the family was starving to death or had not sufficient clothing to cover them had no foundation in fact. The number of children also shrunk from 13 in the story to five on investigation.

Miss C. A. Marsh, who has been one of the assistant teachers in the high school for about two years, has resigned and gone to Somerville, where she has a much better position, with an increase of salary. Miss Marsh has proved an excellent instructor during her stay, winning high enconiums from the committee and many words of praise from both parents and pupils. She has made many friends while in Palmer, all of whom will regret her departure but rejoice at her advancement.

The district court has issued a warrant against George Starkey of Brimfield, charging him with setting fire to the barn of F. E. Cook at that place on the night of Nov. 29, last. Starkey is serving a sentence of two months in the house of correction for drunkenness, and will be released February 4th in the ordinary course of events, but as he may have gained time by good behavior the warrant has been lodged with the officials of the jail at Springfield, and when his time is up he will be brought here.

Remember the reading by Prof. Hibbard at the opera house next Friday evening. He comes under the auspices of the senior class of the high school, and the proceeds will be used to defray the expenses of graduation. The pupils of the school are selling general admission tickets for 25 cents, which can be exchanged for reserved seat tickets at Allen's drug store after next Monday noon by paying 10 cents additional. Prof. Hibbard is one of the best of entertainers in his line, and all who attend may be sure of an evening of pleasure.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at its annual meeting Tuesday afternoon elected these officers: President, Mrs. S. T. Frost; vice president, Mrs. C. E. Dewey; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock; recording secretary, Mrs. H. Lawrence; treasurer, Mrs. L. M. Shaw. The union has held 16 meetings during the year, with a good average attendance. The treasurer's report showed the receipts of the year to have been $191.59, and the expenditures $144.85, the largest item being the drinking fountain established on the corner of Main and Walnut streets. The meeting was adjourned for two weeks, when further business will be transacted.

The Second Congregtional parish held its annual meeting Monday evening and elected these officers: Moderator, Dr. William Holbrook; clerk, O. P. Allen; treasurer, G. A. Rice; prudential committee, H. G. Loomis, A. L. Hills, G. H. Hastings; auditor, H. P. Holden. The appropriations for the coming year were: Pastor's salary, $1500; supply of pulpit during pastor's vacation, $50; music, $450; janitor, $200; incidentals, $500; fuel and lights, $150; total, $2850. The total expenses of the church, parish and Sunday school for the year 1893 were $3160; adding to this the sum of $1027, contributed for missionary and benevolent purposes, makes a total of $4187 expended by the church and society.

These officers were installed by Palmer Lodge of Odd Fellows last Friday evening: N. G., Charles E. Shumway; V. G., J. H. Shaw; R. S., G. H. Bray; T., C. T. Brainerd; P. S., L. G. Parkhurst; trustee for three years, J. B. Shaw; conductor, E. C. Buffington; warden, J. V. Clark; O. G., L. W. Parkhurst; I. G. William Taylor; R. S. N. G., Richard Russell; L. S. N. G., E. Sharratt; R. S. V. G., E. E. Walker; L. S. V. G., H. B. Coyle; R. S. S., W. F. Waite; L. S. S., L. R. Holden; chaplain, G. H. Miller. After the installation the members adjourned to the new banquet rooms on the floor below the lodge rooms, and partook of a collation served by the Daughters of Rebekah.

The shade tree committee held another meeting yesterday afternoon at the house of Dr. Stowe. A representative of the Palmer and Monson Electric, company the worst offender in the matter of indiscriminate trimming of trees, was present, and on the matter being laid before him agreed that no more mutilation of trees should take place. The question of damages to one set of trees in Thorndike was left to a committee for adjustment, as was also the question of remuneration for several trees belonging to Dr. Stowe on the road between Thorndike and Bondsville. The Doctor had bought them when the land was being cleared, so as to have a few trees along that piece of road, and in a few days found that they had been cut down with the rest.

A clever trick to gain admission to houses and make sales is being worked in town by a vender of lace, who is of foreign nationality. She calls at a house and asks for the lady of the establishment, calling her by name, and saying that she has been sent by the lady's sister remarks, "Er—er—I not remember the name," when of course the lady of the house is supposed to take pity and help out with the sister's name. The same course is gone through with in gaining a knowledge of the sister's residence, and then the vender talks glibly of how many yards the sister bought, and wished the seller to be sure and call on her sister in Palmer if she came here. The scheme doesn't always work, however, and at one place where the lady of the house, in spite of the statement that "I French, you know; I not speak English pretty good; I afraid I not make you understand," she thought she did take in the situation readily, and declined to suggest where her sister lived, although admitting that she had several, and after trying one town and not getting it right the would-be lace seller gave it up and withdrew as gracefully as possible.

A case of rather stubborn insubordination developed in the grammar school a few days ago. The teacher detected a boy eating candy and ordered him to desist, receiving a flat "I won't" for an answer. In reply to an order to bring the candy to desk he replied "I'll be darned if I will." He was then suspended from school until he should bring a written order from the superintendent, but came back the next morning with his father, who roundly abused the teacher and insisted that the boy be allowed to stay in the room, which he did, no attention being paid to him by the teacher. The next morning the superintendent sent the lad home and upheld the teacher in her actions. The committee backed up the superintendent, with whom the boy has since settled, and is back in school again. It may be of interest to some to know that the boy's father laid himself liable to arrest and the penalty of a fine by his course in abusing the teacher, the law being quite severe in such matters, section 23 of chapter 207 of the public statutes reading: "Whoever wilfully interrupts or disturbs a school or other assembly of people met for a lawful purpose, shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail not exceeding thirty days, or by fine not exceeding fifty dollars."

State Primary School Notes.

Mrs. Wheeler is very ill with the grippe.

The legislative committee visited the school to-day.

The superintendent has presented a magic lantern to the boys' club.

Mrs. S. A. Gesford returned Monday from a two-weeks' visit in Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Nichols went to Hazardville yesterday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Nichols's brother.

An entertainment under the auspices of the Boys' Improvement Club will be given this evening, and a pleasant time is anticipated.

District Court.

Saturday was civil entry day, and these new cases were entered: C. L. Gardner vs. Ella A. Brown, et al., Taft for defendant; E. C. Swift vs. Jerry Shea of Bondsville, Kenefick for plaintiff, J. B Carroll for defendant; Louis Katz vs. Jerry Shea of Bondsville, Kenefick for plaintiff, J. B. Carroll for defendant. In the case of Lewis L. Clark of Monson against C. W. Johnson for seizing liquors which belonged to Clark, the plaintiff was non-suited, but appealed. In the case of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co. of Monson against Nelson Goudette of Monson, the defendant was defaulted.

In the criminal court the case of T. F. Fuller and Miss Celia Doliver was by the consent of the attorneys for both parties continued until to-morrow. M. D. Hess paid $5 for being drunk.

Monday night John Ryan, William Cranston and Thomas Purcell, all of whom protested that they were looking for work, were entertained at the Hotel Allen in the basement of the bank block, but declined to crack up a few stone Tuesday morning in payment for their accommodations, and the state farm at Bridgewater will receive the benefit of their services during the coming year. Cranston claimed to "follow the water" for a living, but his outward personal appearance would scarcely indicate an intimate acquaintance with the fluid at any recent date. William Henry Harrison Ryder, for being drunk, was put on probation until February 3d. His last appearance was some time ago, and on being released he promised to take a drunk cure, and did start in on one, but after taking about two-thirds of the treatment was evidently fearful that it would have the effect claimed, and concluded that he didn't want it, at any rate he declined to continue.

Yesterday morning James Turner of Three Rivers, who said he procured his liquor at the drug store in that place, was for drunkenness placed on probation without date.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. E. J. Kelly and son are visiting friends in New York.

The Foresters held their regular meeting Tuesday evening and installed officers.

Mrs. Burpee, who was reported dangerously ill last week, remains about the same.

A Polish wedding party from Three Rivers had a dance here on Saturday evening at Union Hall.

E. G. Murdock, the groceryman, and one of the oldest residents of the place, is quite low with the grippe.

Daniel J. Sullivan has arranged to represent Grey & Lambert, undertakers of Monson, and any one desirous of his services will receive prompt attention.

A large number from this village attended the exercises of the forty hours' devotion, which were held in St. Anne's church, Three Rivers, during the past week.

Joseph Wrlpirt, who is quite well known in this place, opened his new clothing store in the Clinton House block on Monday, and will carry a fine line of hats, caps and gents' furnishings.

The Columbia Orchestra will furnish music for the entertainment and dance to be given February 2d by Molloy and Ronan. Mr. Flannigan of the Marlboro Orchestra will prompt.

A pleasant and real surprise was held at Mrs. Kinnevan's home in Palmer Center on Saturday evening, when she was presented with a fine dinner set. Mrs. Kinnevan was away from home when the party arrived, and when she returned found that the company had taken up the carpet and were enjoying a dance.

Miss Margaret A. Moriarty, formerly of Monson, but who has been living with her sister for a few months, died at the home of the latter on Monday morning, after a lingering illness of several months. Miss Moriarty was well known in Monson, and had many friends who will miss her greatly. Her friendly disposition and kindly manner won for her the respect of a large number of friends in this place. Her funeral took place from the home of her sister, Mrs. John Fay, on Wednesday afternoon and was largely attended.

BONDSVILLE.

Miss Hattie Kirk is quite sick with the grippe.

C. R. Russell has just received another new lot of goods for his store.

Dannie Sullivan of Amherst College spent Sunday with his parents here.

Miss Maggie Moriarty, who has been sick with the grippe, is on the gain.

Miss Edith Hobson spent Sunday with Miss Oro Parent at Northampton.

The W. C. T. U. will meet next Thursday to elect officers for the coming year.

Mrs. Edgar Dunlap of Bridgeport, Conn., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Mark Culver.

Miss Eva Day of Conway was the guest over Sunday of her friend, Miss Alica Armstrong.

Mrs. Henry Morgan was the guest of her sister, Miss Lucy Fairbanks, Wednesday at Enfield.

Mrs. Mellin, wife of the Overseer Mellin of the Boston Duck bleachey, is very sick with heart trouble.

Mrs. Louis Gaboury, who has been visiting in Millbury the last three weeks, returned home Monday.

Mrs. W. H. Noble, who has been confined to the house for three or four weeks with grippe and heart trouble, is somewhat better.

P. J. Sullivan, who was popular in musical and dramatical circles here and leader of the Sullivan Drum Corps, has accepted a position in Fitchburg.

Miss Mattie Smith, a former teacher here, but who now has a position in the Northampton schools, called on some of her friends here Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Crocker, principal of the grammer school here last year, now principal of the grammer school in East Weymouth, spent Saturday and Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Armstrong.

Mrs. O. A. Parent and Miss Mabel Ryther gave their Sabbath school classes a supper Friday night with a sawdust pie, in which was a present for every scholar. The little ones enjoyed it immensely and all went home happy.

Jerry Shea, the merchant, has filed a voluntary petition in insolvency, and the first meeting of the creditors will be held at the court of insolvency in Springfield to-morrow afternoon at 2.30. The assets consist of a stock of goods, $950 in cash, real estate, horses and wagons. The heaviest creditors are: Lucius Moore of Hudson, $570; L. W. Caryl of Palmer, 101; Eugene Lynch of Boston, 755; Ware Beef Co. of Ware, 414; Smith Carr Baking Co. of Northampton, 110; Cutler & Porter, 209; H. L. Handy, 476; George Nye & Co., 201; Perkins & Hatch, 120; West, Stone & Co., 633; Norton & Warren, 257, all of Springfield; Murry, Spink & Co. of Providence, 112; C. D. Holbrook of Palmer, 705; Palmer National Bank 500; Charles L. Gardner 1500; total indebtedness, 7794.

THREE RIVERS.

Mrs. Gravelle is away on a month's visit among friends in Canada.

Frank White has been confined to his house by illness during this week.

It is said by all that we have now the neatest post office yet seen in our village.

Miss Mattie Goshen, who has been quite ill with the grippe is able to attend to her duties once more.

Charles Ruggles and Mr. Knox caught some fine pickerel this week, some of which weighed 2½ pounds.

Miss Cora Clark is quite ill with the grippe and her position in the grammer school is being filled by Miss Lizzie Twiss.

In spite of the hard times H. D. Geer is rushing business at his horse radish works, having put up about 1000 dozen thus far this season.

On next Tuesday evening will take place the annual meeting of the Union Evangelical church. Supper will be served as usual by the ladies of the society.

The forty hours devotion service was held in St. Anne's church during this week. A large number of clergymen from different parts of the state attended.

Last Saturday evening nine couples, members of a whist club of Springfield, were entertained by Miss Jennie Kendrick at this place. The party took a special train to the city, when the small hours had commenced to go by.

Officer Lavine was called upon Wednesday to take charge of a man whom the ardent had left in a helpless condition. It seems that he had been working for L. B. Kendrick during the last few weeks, and was paid off one day this week, whereupon he immediately paid his respects to the saloon, and after having obtained something to create conviveality was advised by the proprietor to go on his way rejoicing. He had said that he intended to go to Providence, where his home is, and started for the station, but found when he got there that the train had just left. Then he returned to the saloon to drown his sorrows, but was refused further accommodation. However, the man procured a quart bottle full from another business man here, who, perhaps some may think, is not violating the statutes of Massachusetts.

The debate which was held Monday evening by the Monday Evening Club was an interesting affair. A large audience was present, and was highly pleased with the evening's entertainment. The question was: "Resolved, That environment has more influence than heredity in the formation of character." Miss Adelaide Walker ably represented the affirmative, and Miss Clara Greene creditably contended on the negative side. Frank Lavene, Lewis Barker, Miss Eva Forte and Gilbert Forte also made telling remarks on the subject. Miss Kate Twiss, William Gannan and Charles Ruggles were appointed by the chair as judges, and after the question had been warmly discussed for an hour and a half the judges decided in favor of the negative side, the house unanimously sustaining the decision. Not the least entertaining part of the exercises was the excellent music furnished by the Messrs. Gauthier and Fredette, who, every member of the club is hoping, will favor the Monday evening meetings by their presence and assistance on future occasions.

MARRIED.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Miss Lee of Springfield has been the guest of H. M. Graves for several days.

R. Clifford Millar, who has been sick with the grippe, is able to be at work again.

Charles L. Stiles, who is employed in Providence, is at home sick with the grippe.

Mrs. F. S. Hatch was taken dangerously ill Sunday, and is still in a critical condition.

Swift Long of East Boston was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Albert M. Guilford over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Swift Long and daughter are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Buffington.

The Woman's Relief Corps will hereafter meet on the second and fourth Wednesday evenings of each month, according to the vote taken at the last meeting.

It is expected that the Endeavor societies of the Methodist and Congregational churches will soon hold a meeting together in the Congregational church chapel.

The Payson Male Quartette of Easthampton will give a concert, with readings, Jan. 23d at Memorial Hall, under the auspices of Monson Lodge of Odd Fellows.

The superior court has granted an injunction against Asahel Abbott in favor of Lee Blanchard, to restrain the former from cutting wood and timber on a certain tract of land the title of which is in dispute.

Miss Ada Smith and Earl B. Francis, class of '94, were quietly married at the bride's home Wednesday morning by Rev. F. S. Hatch, and left shortly after for a trip to Philadelphia, the home of Mr. Francis.

Mr. and Mrs. George Seymour were called to South Manchester, Ct., Sunday on account of the illness of their son Arthur, who died soon after their arrival. Their remaining children, Miss Annie and George, left Monday afternoon to attend the funeral.

Mrs. Robert Murphy died Monday morning at her home on State street of dropsy, after a long illness. The funeral was held Wednesday morning at St. Patrick's church, and the burial was at Thorndike. Mrs. Murphy leaves a husband, several sons and one daughter.

G. Henry Flint of Lincoln, Mass., formerly a teacher in the academy, and now at Yale Seminary, taking a special course, has accepted a call as assistant pastor to the Phillips Congregational church at South Boston, and begins his work Feb. 1. This is a large church, and he will have a large field of usefulness. The many friends of Mr. Flynt in Monson wish him every success.

The union meeting of the junior and senior societies of Christian Endeavor Sunday was largely attended and intensely interesting. The most impressive part of the sermon was the address by Mr. Stephanoff, the student from Bulgaria. His very presence was inspiring, and as he tried to express himself, his heart overflowing with love, everyone in the audience felt moved and helped. There were 40 juniors at the meeting.

There will be a union meeting at the Congregational church at six o'clock Sunday evening. It is customary in some meeting connected with the week of prayer for the churches to consider the "Christian work as carried on in other lands," and Dr. Shephard, head physician in charge of the medical college and hospital in Aintab, Turkey, will address the meeting, giving an account of the medical work as it is carried on in that region.

The Windsor Club, Charles W. King, president, gave a very enjoyable "house warming" to their friends Tuesday evening. About two hours were devoted to whist, then followed refreshments consisting of ice cream, cake, grapes and lemonade, after which the parlors were cleared and dancing filled out the evening's programme. Booth's orchestra furnished music. The new quarters of the club in the bank block are very handsomely filled up, and exceedingly pleasant.

Wednesday afternoon as William Wilcox was driving S. F. Cushman, Jr.'s, horse on Main street, near Heimann & Lichten's shop, he saw Miss Polly Lewis stepping backward across the road; he called to her, but she did not hear; then giving the horse a sharp cut with the whip he succeeded in passing her enough so that she was struck by the rear wheel only, being thrown to the ground and receiving a flesh wound on the back of her head. She was taken into the shop, but soon recovered sufficiently to go home, and will probably be all right in a few days. It was a very narrow escape, however.

Last evening District deputy Fuller of Palmer, assisted by E. W. Wall, G. M., G. H. Bray, G. W., C. T. Brainerd, G. S., A. A. Babbitt, G. T., J. N. Graves, G. I. G., installed these officers of Monson lodge of Odd Fellows: N. G., R. C. Millar; V. G., E. H. Graves; recording secretary, S. F. Howard; permanent secretary, F. A. Bills; treasurer, John Cross; W., H. O. Crosby; O. G., F. J. Flynt; I. G., J. H. Hale; R. S. N. G., A. A. Babbitt; L. S. N. G., C. E. Smith; R. S. V. G., H. M. Smith; L. S. V. G., Delmore Pease; R. S. S., H. N. Butler; L. S. S., H. Howe; conductor, G. W. Adams; chaplain, C. F. Clough.

Academy Notes.

Principal Burke has found it necessary to form a system of demerits, similar to that which is used in all the leading academies of the country. This is not due to anything that has arisen in the school, but simply that the academy standard might be raised in this respect, the same as it has in many others this year. A record of 70 in deportment is the lowest any student can have and not be suspended. In reckoning demerits, five marks for misconduct constitue a demerit, and the number of demerits will appear on the report cards at the end of each half-term. The number will be carried over from one term to another throughout the entire school year. Whispering or communicating has been prohibited in all the recitations and study rooms.——At the regular meeting of the senior class last Friday the following officers were elected: President, Miss Florence J. Deverell; vice president, George H. Stone; secretary, Miss Ethel Newton; treasurer, Miss Mary C. Fitzgerald; entertainment committee, Arthur H. Orcutt, Mabel F. Gates and Ephraim B. Flint.—— The regular meeting of the literary societies comes this evening at 8 o'clock.

WEST WARREN.

Fred Kendall of New Hartford is visiting at home.

John Carey, who has been very sick, is now thought to be out of danger.

Services have been held in the M.E. church every night this week except Saturday.

H. H. Hebert is carting away the rubbish from his four tenement house, burned Dec. 31, and will rebuild.

Mrs. Griffin, who has been blind for many years, died at her home Tuesday morning. A requiem mass was held Thursday morning. Interment at Warren.

Yesterday afternoon while returning from Warren Agent Brown's horse shied at a paper blowing about in the street and overturned the carriage, throwing the occupants, Inez Bearce and Minnie Collins, out on Chapel street. The horse ran, smashing the carriage badly, but no one was seriously injured.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Gates are contemplating moving to Springfield.

Several of our citizens are confined to their homes with the prevailing epidemic.

A year ago the Cutler Company decided to divide its profits with its employes, and last Saturday distributed the second semi-annual dividend, the amount being about twice as much for each employe as before.

Killed by the Cars.

Charles A. Davis, 19, an employe of the Collins Mfg. Co. of this place, was struck Saturday evening about one mile east of here by the passenger train due here at 6.24, being instantly killed, having the back part of his head crushed in and one ankle broken. It appears that Davis, with two companions, S. H Calkins of Palmer and T. W. Nichols of Monson, had been fishing near the village, but were on their way to Palmer and took the track in preference to the main road. Before proceeding very far an eastbound freight overtook them, which they attempted to board. Before this could be accomplished the passenger train passed on the other track. Calkins and Nichols perceiving it stepped out of the way, but Davis did not notice it, and before he could be warned was struck, being thrown to the outside of the track. The body was brought here and Medical Examiner Breck immediately telegraphed for, who came and viewed the body, which was removed to Ludlow, the young man's home, a little later. The funeral was held in Ludlow Tuesday at 1 p. m., the interment being in Ludlow Center.

BELCHERTOWN.

There were 37 births, 20 marriages and 52 deaths in town during 1893.

Miss Jennie Bridgman is seriously ill at Nyack, N. Y., with pneumonia.

A. L. Burt of New York, a native of Belchertown, has sent a case of 100 books to the Clapp Memorial Library.

Mrs. Susan Bridgman, who was to start for Florida last week, was taken suddenly ill and will probably give up her Southern trip for the present.

Rev. T. C. Richards of Dudley will supply the pulpit of the Congregational church next Sunday, Rev. P. W. Lyman of Fall River, a former pastor, the 21st, and Rev. W. B. Allis of Waltham the 28th.

The creamery association has chosen these officers: President, F. L. Stebbins; auditor, Guy C. Allen; treasurer, W. E. Bridgman; clerk, Solomon Shumway. The yearly report shows: Spaces of cream, 1,186,179; pounds of butter, 169,385; received for butter, $48,247; received for cream, $3486.24; buttermilk, $489.18; received for sundries, $113.80; total receipts, $52,285.24. Resources of the association, $7281.12; liabilities, $6265.03; balance, $1016.09.

The Congregational church has elected these officers for 1894: Clerk, G.W. Longley; treasurer, A. D. Randall; committee of the church, A. D. Randall, P. T. Slauter, M. E. Williams, Mrs. P. T. Slauter, Mrs. Maria Longley; standing committee, C. B. Southick, P. T. Slauter, D. F. Shumway; deacon for eight years, Charles B. Southick. The Sunday school has elected: Superintendent, F. L. Stebbins; assistant superintendent, M.W. Bardwell; secretary and treasurer, Miss Julia Smith; musical director, G. W. Longley; directors, A. L. Blackmer, G. W. Longley, Mrs. Maria Longley, C. B. Southick; librarian, H. A. Hopkins. The total amount of contributions of the church for various outside objects was $298; expended for the church, $1232.

Belchertown Wants the Normal School.

Belchertown would like to have the new normal school located within her borders, and offers an attractive location for it, the scenery and atmosphere of the hill town being unusually fine. A citizens' meeting was held Wednesday evening to consider the matter, and Nathaniel Dwight, E. S. Bridgman and George E. Sanford chosen a committee to consider the purchase of a desirable site. A soliciting committee from the various districts was also chosen: Center, G. W. Longley; South Center and Washington, George Kent; Liberty and Franklin, A. C. Smith; Rock Rimmon and Chestnut Hill, D. F. Shumway; Lake Vale and Union, G. R. Dickenson; West hill, Great hill and East hill, David Ward; Blue Meadow and Laurel, E. A. Randall; Mill Valley and Cold Spring, A. H. Bartlett. Another meeting will be held next Thursday evening at 7.30.

WARREN.

Miss Kittie L. White gave a dancing party to about 40 of her friends last Friday evening.

The Grand Army post and the Woman's Relief Corps had a joint installation of officers last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Slater gave a whist party at their home last Friday evening, eighteen couples being present. The first prizes were taken by Mrs. George P. Aborn and William H. Hitchcock, Miss Nell Cutler and Charles S. Hitchcock receiving the second. Refreshments were served, and dancing was indulged in.

A Frenchman and his 12-years-old son had a narrow escape from drowning at the No. 4 mill last Friday afternoon. The boy broke through the ice while crossing the river above the dam, and the father broke through while trying to help his son out. He clung to the ice until rescued by Frank Lasond, the mill watchman, and Mr. St. John.

Liquor Dealers Caught, but the Spotter Turns Thief, and is Caught.

Several successful raids were made last Friday night on the illegal liquor sellers. Officers Tomlinson, Sibley and Smith called at the pool room of Patrick Hartnett and arrested Daniel Killigrew, who was in charge, for selling without a license. Saturday William Ratigan was jugged for selling at his pool room at the old skating rink on River street. The evidence against them was obtained by a spotter, Ernest Bush, who turned over to the officers a half-pint bottle of whisky purchased of Killigrew, also some purchased of Ratigan. C. G. F. Schenneberger, another engaged in the business, left town Friday night. Ratigan was found guilty by Justice Tyler and fined $50, but appealed and furnished bonds in the sum of $300. The spotter first made his appearance in town some time ago, claiming to be a tree agent.

Tuesday afternoon he returned to Warren, but this time with a pair of handcuffs on his wrists and in charge of Deputy Sheriff Putnam. During Bush's work in this vicinity he struck the West Warren hotel, proceeding to make the aquaintaince of the proprietor, George F. Sikes. He and Mr. Sikes soon became warm friends. On Thursday night of last week he and Mr. Sikes were in the latter's room talking, and during the course of conversation Sikes told his guest of the loss of his wife, and spoke of what a loss her companionship was to him. He took from a bureau drawer five diamonds, a ruby and a sapphire, set in two earrings, two studs and a finger ring, and remarked that although he was now much poorer than when he bought them for his wife, nothing would induce him to part with them. After admiring them Bush handed them back and the two men soon parted for the night. Friday night Mr. Sykes remained in his office, and Saturday morning found that his diamonds were missing. He mistrusted that Bush had them, and a search in the room which he had occupied revealed the chisel with which he had pried open the door. Sunday night Bush was located in Charlestown, and Deputy Sheriff Putnam and a Boston officer awaited his arrival in his room, as he was out when they called. When he saw them he started down stairs, but was easily caught. He denied the crime until one of the studs was was pulled from his pocket with some papers, after which he had little to say. Wednesday morning he was arraigned before Trial Justice Bush of West Brookfield and bound over to the higher court in the sum of $1000, in default of which he was sent to the Worcester Jail. Bush's employer, James P. Wade of Boston, testified that Bush had been in his employ three years, and had always been considered trustworthy. The defence was that Sikes trumped up the charge against Bush for fear that the latter would testify against him for liquor selling, and that he might have dropped the stud on the floor of Bush's room when he went in with the officers. Little is know of Bush's past history.

WILBRAHAM.

Wilbraham Grange took in eight new members this week.

The week of prayer is being observed at the Congregational church.

Mrs. Larned and Mrs. Shaw of Chicopee spent last Sunday in town with friends.

Mrs. Bronson of Providence, R. I., is the guest of Mrs. Stebbins Foskit this week.

Rev. Fayette Nichols gave the first of a series of talks on the "Pilgrim's Progress" Sunday evening.

Robert Allyn, LL.D., a former professor in and afterward president of Wesleyan academy, died at Carbondale, Ill., Sunday night at the age of 77.

The remains of Mrs. John M. Merrick, an old resident, who died at the home of her son, Dr. W. F. Warren, at Cambridge, were interred in Woodlawn Dell cemetery on Monday.

The Young People's Christian Association of the academy has made choice of these officers: President, C. H. Phillips; vice president, Miss Mary Woodruff; secretary, Miss Lottie Clark; treasurer, J. H. Marriott.

The fourth annual reunion of the alumni of Wesleyan Academy will be held next Monday evening at the United States Hotel in Boston. All former students are invited, and those who expect to attend are requested to send their names and address to the secretary, F. N. Bardwell, 81 Union street, Boston.

An Epworth League has been formed in the Methodist church with these officers: President, Mrs. F. M. Austin; vice presidents, Alice Farnham, Marian Herrick, Lee Rice; secretary, Will McGuire; treasurer, Grace Atkins. The league has 35 members, and will hold half-hour prayer meetings Sunday evenings at 6.15, with semi-monthly meetings Monday evenings for social and literary work.

"Old Club" society of the academy has chosen these officers: President, J. C. von Bast; vice president, H. L. Hannah; secretary, B. T. Russell; treasurer, R. E. Clark; critic, B. G. Barton; auditor, R. T. Jones; librarian, H. E. Wright. The officers of "Philo" are: President, S. L. Hubbard; secretary, L. N. Clark; treasurer, Q. D. Esgate; critic, W. J. Merwin; librarian, H. B. Thompson. "Athena" has elected: President, Miss L. M. Clark; vice president, Miss Frances Hill; secretary, Miss Lena Culver; treasurer, Miss Mabel White. "Pieria" has chosen: President, Miss L. H. Evans; vice president, Miss L. D. Fordham; secretary, Miss Helen Hyde; treasurer, Miss E. L. Catlin; critic, Miss M. C. Dyer.

A Supreme Court Decision of Interest to Wilbraham People.

The supreme court Saturday handed down a rescript in a case which involved the estate of Samuel J. Goodenough and wife, Urania M. The former died December 28, 1891, and Judge Copeland was appointed administrator of his estate, which was afterward reported insolvent. Urania M. Goodenough, the widow of Samuel J., died January 20, 1892, leaving a will which was executed before her death. Geraldine G. Strout was appointed administratrix of this instrument, which was regularly admitted to probate. Mr. and Mrs. Goodenough lived together in Wilbraham for many years. They had no children, and for some years before his death the husband had no regular employment or business by which he earned any money. Mrs. Goodenough, between April 25, 1891, and May 29, 1892, received a legacy under the will of Noble Maxell of $78,330.60, of which some $33,000 was paid her in money, and the balance in various stocks. After the death of Goodenough Judge Copeland found that Mr. and Mrs. Goodenough had jointly hired a deposit box, to which each were provided with keys, in the vault of the Springfield Safe Deposit and Trust company. In this box he found two bank books, one issued by the Springfield Institution for Savings to S. J. and U. M. Goodenough," the other issued by the Springfield Five Cents Savings bank to "S. J. and Urania M. Goodenough." A number of bonds and stocks were also found in the box. Four suits were brought, the first by the Springfield Institution for Savings, praying that the defendants, Copeland and Strout, be decreed to settle and adjust their rights to the funds deposited there. The second suit was brought by Geraldine G. Strout, to have Copeland transfer certain stocks and securities standing in the name of S. J. Goodenough. The third and fourth cases were against Copeland and the Five Cents Savings bank, and the John Hancock National bank, asking for the transfer of the funds in deposit in these places. Some of the securities found in the box were marked only with initials of one or the other of the Goodenoughs. It was impossible to tell to whom they belonged, except possibly by these marks. The case was tried before T. M. Brown as master, and by agreement and request of those concerned, was reported to the full bench for consideration. That body decides that the money in the Springfield Institution for Savings is to be credited to Mrs. Goodenough's estate, because it appears to be the property of her estate. In the two cases of Strout against Copeland, for the money in the Five Cents Savings and John Hancock banks, the plaintiff is found entitled to it, because it appears to belong to the estate of Mrs. Goodenough. In the matter of the stocks and bonds, it is decreed that such of them as stand in Mr. Goodenough's name or bear his initials, belong to his estate. The other securities belong to the estate of Mrs. Goodenough.

WARE.

The bridge near Gibbs' Crossing has been impassable for nearly six months. What's the matter that the new one is not put on?

The Gilbert Mfg. Co. has shut down the mills to eight hours a day three days in the week, starting at 7 30 a. m. and closing at 4.30 p. m.

Joseph McHenry, aged 64, died at his home on Friday of last week. The funeral was on Sunday, and the remains were taken to Wilkinsville on Monday for burial. He leaves a widow, three sons and four daughters.

There were only four fires in Ware in 1893, one at Rohan's store, at the mill of the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co., D. S. Kennedy's barn, and A. Vigeant, lumber. Total loss paid on buildings was $610, and on contents $1241.96, not including the Gilbert fire.

Charles Loughlin, 23, of South street, was adjudged insane by Drs. Miner and Ryan and was taken to the insane asylum at Northampton on Monday. He was very violent at the time of his arrest, making an assault upon Chief of Police Fitzgerald.

Wheeler B. Parker, aged 60, died on Wednesday morning at his home on Church street. He was well known in town and highly respected. He had for years been in charge of the farm work at the George H. Gilbert place. He leaves a wife and son.

It is reported that F. P. Clark & Co. have the order for the furniture for the new high school building, and the warrant which is posted for town meeting contains an article to see if the town will authorize the school committee to purchase furniture as needed.

Mrs. William Cummings, aged 67, died at Ware Center on Tuesday of heart disease. She leaves a husband, one son and two daughters. The funeral was held this afternoon at the Center church, the burial being at the old Baptist burying place in Hardwick.

The installation of the officers of the Sons of Veterans on Monday evening was a pleasant and most enjoyable affair. The G. A. R. and ladies were guests of the Sons. Past Captain W. N. Newcomb was installing officer, and J. W. Schoonmaker toastmaster at the literary feast which followed.

The first entertainment of the Ware Popular Lecture Course is to be given next Wednesday evening at the town hall by President Gates of Amherst College. Subject: "A Young Man's Fortune." Tickets are now on sale at Mulvany's at $1 for the course; single tickets 25 and 35 cents.

Last Sunday Rev. James Boyle, rector of All Saints' Catholic church, made his annual financial statement to the congregation as follows:

Receipts—Balance from last year, $980; from pew rents, 4480; building fund collection, 2270; from church fair, 1922; sale of cemetery lots, 387; rent of tenements, 385; collection for fuel, 110; collection for the pope, 85; collection for students, 30; entertainments and donations, 184; total, 10,833.

Expenditures—Salary of priests, $1100; salary of organist, 220; salary of janitor, 420; collecting pew rents, 140; interest on debt 2300; light, heat and water, 334; insurance, 214; music, printing and cartage, 81; altar supplies, 112; new vestments, 178; sent to bishop and chancellor, 237; general repairs, 150; repair to tenements, 223; town taxes, 102; work on new church, 715; frescoeing church, 1534; miscellaneous, 103; horse hire, 50; care of cemetery, 50; balance on hand, 2570; total, 10,833.

Weber, the evangelist preacher, vocalist and actor, commenced a series of meeting, Tuesday evening at the Methodist church. As a preacher he is not like anyone else ever heard in this town. One does not have to guess at what he means when he has finished a sentence. He keeps his audience in rapt attention by his queer ways of saying things, moving them to laughter and then to tears. As a singer he has the most powerful voice ever heard here, being distinctly heard above a large chorus and the whole congregation; and his hearers know what he is singing about every time. As an actor he excells, by this means bringing vividly before his hearers the illustrations which he uses so freely. Thus far, the three first evenings, he has talked to professed christians. He says if they expect a revival and souls converted because he is here without the help and coöperation of the christian people, they are terribly mistaken. He has no sympathy with the so-called christians that nobody knows anything about, and says if one is a true christian everybody with whom they come in contact, even to the cat and dog, will be sure to know about it. He evidently knows the blessedness there is in serving the Lord, and is terribly in earnest that others may know by experience and not by hearsay, Go and hear him, as he must be heard and seen to know much about him. It has been arranged to hold union meetings largely in the town hall during his stay, commencing next Sunday afternoon at 3.30, with another at 7 in the evening, and at 7.30 on Monday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening, and in the Methodist church on Tuesday evening on account of a previous engagement of the hall.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

The Best Known.

That which is the most widely known is sure to give the greatest satisfaction. When we are sick and in need of a physician, we send for the one who is known to be the most skillful in his profession. It is only recently that people all over the land had the opportunity of obtaining the best medical consultation and advice without charge.

Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., is without question the best known and most skillful physician in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He is the discoverer of the wonderful cure, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and has lately adopted the plan of treating the sick from far and near by means of letter correspondence. His success is simply wonderful. People can consult him by letter, free of charge.

He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, answering all questions and thoroughly explaining your disease so that you know just what is the matter with you. For this, there is no charge whatever. The doctor uses only harmless vegetable remedies, and has the greatest success in curing disease through letter correspondence. Send for his symptom blank, and he will write you a full description of your disease and give you advice and directions how to cure it, free of charge.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

Doctors Discouraged, Relief Found.

Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "I am as certain as I now live, tha Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease." If you are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetes, or any urinary trouble, you should use this only cure.

"I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors but got no relief. Upon advice, I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; a few bottles entirely cured me.' 40

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL.B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

How It Is in New England.

Summer girl in gay attire
Sits with Jack upon the strand,
Wondering if he can mean business,
While he gently holds her hand.

Gossip says that she's an heiress,
Cash she will have by and by;
Rumor has the young man waiting
For his rich old pa to die.

Then the young man breaks the silence;
"Dearest Dolly, be my bride!"
"Oh, but, Jack, this is so sudden!"
Says the young girl at his side.

"But my darling, don't you love me?"
Thinking of her heaps of tin;
For this outing costs him something,
And the bills are coming in.

But, Jack dear, what are your prospects?"
Says the young girl on the sand;
"For you know I leave to-morrow.
I'm a waitress at the Grand."

O'er his face there spreads a paleness,
On his brow an ugly frown;
Then it seems we're both mistaken,
I'm a clerk for Smith & Brown."

Thus they part, each sadly thinking
Of the wasted summer days—
But they both have learned this lesson:
Not to trust what rumor says.

OUR POETS.

Powerful Words and Noble Thoughts.

How Closely Are They Related to Our Daily Lives.

What One of Our Foremost Ladies Thinks About It

Henry W. Longfellow has said in one of his most popular poems that "All things come round to him who will but wait."

How true it certainly is that if we have but the patience to wait and struggle for that which we so much desire, the prize will surely be ours. It is not enough, however, to sit quietly down and remain inert, but if we would accomplish great results we must possess untiring perseverance.

At least one person appreciates the full significance of the great man's words. Miss S. Cohen of 554 South 6th street, Camden, N. J., has for months been waiting, longing and striving to regain that health without which life is at least but a dreary existence.

She has been constantly treating with different remedies and physicians, but never once lost courage, for she had made up her mind that there was a remedy which would cure her and was determined to find it. She succeeded so well and is so filled with gratitude and thankfulness that she wishes the whole world could know of her wonderful cure.

The following is a letter written by her for the public benefit:

"I suffered for over a year with severe pains in my head, and could not keep anything on my stomach. I was so nervous and weak that I could not hold a glass in my hand, and the doctors pronounced it nervous prostration. I changed doctors and found no relief. My friends advised me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and after using four bottles I experienced a great change. I am now entirely cured and am anxious to recommend this valuable medicine to every one suffering from similar complaints I hope it will do as much good to others as it has to me."

MISS S. COHEN.

What more beautiful interpretation of our beloved poet's remark, than to be suddenly restored, after long suffering from pain, to a life of happiness and usefulness.

Have not all cause to thank Dr. Greene, who gave to the world this fountain of hope and health!

Why indeed should we suffer, with such a remedy at our command!

If you are sick with any form of nervous or blood disease, indigestion, dyspepsia, kidney or liver complaint, take this giver of health, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Take it when the first symptoms appear. If the disease is advanced delay no longer. It is purely vegetable and harmless. It is not a patent medicine, but one which the doctor has employed in his practice for years.

Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., is one of our most eminent physicians in the treatment of all nervous and chronic diseases. He is pleased to talk with any who wish to consult him.

If you live out of the city and cannot call, write him a description of your complaint and he will return an answer free of charge, advising you just what to do to get well.

A CLEVER SCHEME.

Entering the service of the Missouri Pacific railway in the year 1881, as express messenger, was a satisfactory arrangement, as my route from Benica to Omaha was wild, hilly and romamtic. I never checked book nor carried bond for a prettier run, and my love of adventure was stimulated by numerous stories of road agents and eastern-bound trains held up for robberies.

Comprehending the danger of my situation, I determined to prepare myself for any emergency; to keep well armed, to cultivate no friendship with outsiders, and, above all, to let no one step inside the car.

I had been running on the line about a month when I had one of the deepest plots "put up" on me that was ever perpetrated on a company of any kind. One evening, just after entering my car to make some preparations for my night trip, a slight rustle in the doorway caused me to glance in that direction. A man of fifty or so was standing there, smiling as if it pleased him exceedingly to intrude upon my solitude. I walked forward to keep him from coming inside, and he said pleasantly,—

"Good-evening, sir. I owe you an apology for appearing at the door of your car, but I really have good reasons. Here is my card."

I took the dainty bit of pasteboard and read, "Sir Ralph Lockwood, Marling Castle, England."

"I am happy to meet your excellency," I said with a polite air several degrees below zero. "What can I do for you?"

"I wish to ask a trifling favor of you, but an important one to me. I have had the good fortune to kill a large buffalo, and have paid quite a sum of money to get it stuffed. I want to ship it to England, so that I can place it on exhibition at Marling Castle. I am sending it by express to New York, and am anxious that it should not be injured during the first part of the journey. It is worth a voyage across the ocean to kill an animal of this description, and I am very proud of this exploit. In fact, I value this great curiosity beyond any other I have run across in America, and I wish you would look to it while it is in your charge, and see that it is transferred carefully to the next agent on the route."

I was quite relieved when he finished his statement, and readily promised all that he had asked.

"When are you to send it?" I inquired.

"To-night, of course. My man, Stoddard, will be here directly with it, so that I can see it safely aboard the train. I think he is coming now."

True enough, a dray was in sight, and the gentleman left me to superintend its approach to the car. I thought, as they backed up and made ready to unload the animal, that it was a remarkably fine buffalo, and looked as natural as life. It took four of us to lift him into the car, and there was no end to the fussy orders of the Englishman about handling him.

When he was placed in a proper position I gave the owner a receipted bill, and refusing to accept the V. he offered me for any extra trouble I might experience from watching the huge beast, I shook hands with his lordship or excellency (I am not particularly posted on foreign titles), and he went away.

We pulled out on time, and for an hour or two I was pretty busy with my books and money packages. The bank of Benica had sent a fifty-thousand-dollar package to the Omaha National, and I rejoiced to think, as I saw it safely stowed away in my heavy safe, that no one but myself and the proprietors of the bank knew of the shipment.

When my business matters were arranged, I bethought myself of a friend of mine who was working on the Michigan Central as baggagemaster, and as I was indebted to him for a letter, I set about writing him one:—

"DEAR ROB:—This is the dawn of my second month on my new run, and everything is quite lovely. To-night I am carrying eastward fifty thousand dollars, and a stuffed buffalo from the plains. Wouldn't you like a description of the kingly beast? Color, chocolate brown; hips, large and shapely; shoulders deep and massive; with large horns dropping suddenly to a small tip. His eyes—"

Here I turned for a look at the animal to help my description. Great Heavens! the eye on the right side moved while I was gazing at it!

I dropped my pen in astonishment, picked it up and looked again. There was a peculiar look about the eye, a look of life, and it certainly was smaller than the other one. I was conscious of a creeping sensation along the spinal column, and could not refrain from watching the buffalo. I had a feeling of helplessness, as if some one was holding an invisible wand over me, and ten or fifteen minutes passed by before I arose, put away my half finished letter, and tried to regain my composure.

After walking about the car I went back to my seat, and looked again at the creature's eyes. The spell was gone. Both seemed alike, and I smiled at my vivid imagination.

We stopped at Hillside for supper, and I sprang off with alacrity, turning my car over to the watchman while I partook of a cup of coffee and a sandwich. Upon my return the young fellow, noticing my approach, gave me an O. K. signal and went about his work. Pausing a moment with my hand on the car door, my first glance inside came near bringing an exclamation of astonishment to my lips. A dark hump between the shoulders of the stuffed buffalo seemed to descend into into his body and disappear entirely. What manner of beef was this to be sent to England?

Before I had fully realized the danger that might menace me the train had pushed out again, and our next stop was twenty eight miles ahead.

I went straight to my old seat and pulled a San Francisco daily from my pocket, holding it pretty well up before my face, so that I could watch the animal while pretending to read. In less than twenty minutes the right eye suddenly disappeared, leaving a hole which was immediately occupied by a living and a human eye. I saw, too, that the position of the creature had changed during my absence. Everything was plain to me now. "Sir Ralph Lockwood" was a clever villain, and the valuable buffalo was "stuffed" with a desperate train robber, who would, unless defeated, rob the express company and kill, or ruin me.

I wondered if it would be possible to escape from the car and give an alarm. As I asked the question of myself it was answered by a small shining tube that found its way out of the buffalo's shaggy shoulder, and looking into the muzzle of a six-shooter, I did not doubt that an attempt to leave the car would cost me my life.

A cold wave flitted over me as plan after plan flitted through my brain, each one suggesting some avenue of escape and some way of saving the money in my charge; but none of them could be carried out. I felt that the man inside the buffalo must not know that I had discovered him, and began to whistle a tune that no one ever heard before or ever will again, to convince him that I was not aware of his existence, but my lips were too dry and stiff to finish the melody.

While my jaws were open an inspiration came to me. There must be a secret spring that controlled an opening in the animal's back If I could get to his side without arousing the robber's suspicions I could mount him, and by exercising all my strength, hold the opening together so the wretch could neither get out nor shoot me.

We were in a wild, lonely part of the country, and he must be on the eve of springing out, so I knew I could not delay any attempt to capture him. Grumbling something about the fire, I aroused, stretched my arms, and picking up the coalhod, walked to the stove and turned the contents of the hod into it with a rattling sound. Then I went toward the animal and patted his neck admiringly.

"A long ride, old fellow," I said jocosely. "I'm afraid you'll get tired before you reach Marling Castle."

The revolver was not visible, and the next instant I was astride the buffalo's body with a cry of triumph. I heard a click, and the whole of the top of his back parted beneath me; but I pressed the sides back again, and half smothered oaths accompanied another trial for escape. As long as I kept that long seat from opening, the man could not turn in his narrow quarters. I wound my legs around the creature's neck, and clutching my hands into his flanks held on for life and death, in spite of the terrible efforts that my captive put forth.

I had never quite understood why I was put up with lower limbs so unusually extensive that the boys at school called them "bin-"binder-poles," but now I was more than reconciled to them. Indeed, they were my main dependence in holding my prisoner in his den.

I had been in this position about ten minutes when I heard the train whistle for the big bridge five miles from Stormwave, and that gave me fresh courage. The robber heard it, too, and after one more desperate struggle to push his way out, fired his revolver at the wall just beyond my chair to frighten me.

Then he began to threaten, then to plead and offer bribes in a muffled tone, but I was too excited to answer him. When the shriek of the engine that announced our arrival at Stormwave died away I began to yell, and I kept yelling till we stopped at the depot.

Soon a group of trainmen and citizens gathered at the door, and forcing the lock they fell back for the conductor to enter first. When he saw his express messenger riding a dead buffalo with his face in the wrong direction and his hands and feet wound about the beast, he at once decided that he was either drunk or crazy. Of course everything was explained and understood as soon as I left off yelling long enough to tell my story, and after the road agent was secured the buffalo was given to me as a pleasant little souvenir of the occasion. He never saw Marling castle, but stands in my library "at home," and a little five-years-old boy often tries to ride him, "just as papa did."—Archie R. Eggleston, in Waverly Magazine.

TAKE ANOTHER.—In a small village in the south of Scotland an elder in the Parish Church was one day reproving an old woman, who was rather the worse for liquor, by saying:

"Sarah, don't you know that you should fly from the tempter?"

Sarah (not too well pleased)—"Flee yersel'."

Elder—"Oh, Sarah, I have flown."

Sarah—"Aweel, I think ye'll be nane the waur o' anither flutter."—Scottish American.

"It's de bes' joke on Miss 'Liza I ebber did see," said one of the girls who were having a good time in the kitchen. "She was standin' in de middle ob de pahlor, an' yuh couldn't shove 'er away. She stood undah de chandelier for mos' half an hour befoh she foun' out dat when she wasn't lookin' dey done move de kissletoe from ober her haid to de nex' room."—Washington Star.

Two cabmen a short time ago had a fishing match for half a sovereign and drinks. Suddenly one of the jarvies fancied he had bite, and being over anxious had the misfortune to fall into the river. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

PASKOLA.
A Flesh Forming Food.
(Artificially Digested.)
While this is an artificially digested food it appears to increase the appetite in a most remarkable manner, and what is more gratifying it causes the food to be properly digested so as to give strength, vigor and plumpness to the body. All unpleasant feeling after eating are prevented and refreshing sleep restored; weariness and exhaustion give place to health and cheerfulness. The emaciated should use Paskola. It supersedes Cod Liver Oil and is far more effective. It never rises in the mouth after being swallowed. It creates an appetite at once. Send for pamphlet. Address.

A Dream.

I dreamed, and lo! upon the silent earth
(That ever swings, as from its misty birth)
I kinless stood! and all the streams that erst
In joyous measure sang me forth their tale
Sank to a murmur; even while there burst
Upon mine eyes that straightway turned me pale!
I looked and wondered, and I grew as chill
As though their fated touch had froze my blood;
As far beyond that living, green-clad hill,
In breathless awe mine eyes were turned, I stood
Appalled! Forth from the bosom of the deep
There rose a wondrous chain of towering cliffs,
Clear as the lake upon whose mirror sleep,
Light-poised, all tenderly, the skiffs;
While rays of light played o'er their polished sides,
As slowly rose and sank they on the tides.
Kissed by the sun they grew; their colors sheen
Of rose and emerald-touched tips, between
The amethyst deepened to a royal tone
Of purple—and I stood and gazed alone!
I knew that naught of earth was left save me
To look upon that strange and glorious sea!
And, as I gazed, wild flames leapt up to seize
The icebergs' glow and melt it to their will;
Naught could their hungry rage of greed appease,
While luridly and sullen burned they still.
What, then, does it portray—this onslaught fierce
Of flames upon those sunlit cliffs of ice,
If it be not that Evil seeks to pierce
The armor thrown about the soul?—device
Of all powers that wage unceasing war,
And ever seek to gain what lies afar
Above them! "O souls of just men perfect made,
Yield not," I cried, "for here a mortal stands
Alone and helpless in those alien lands;
And yet on mortal lips, I know, is laid
The burden of a knowledge far above
All thought of human gain or human love!"
And crying thus, I woke, nor ever knew
If to fruition my bright vision grew.
—Miriam Lester.

NEIGHBOR GOODWIN'S STORY.

Nephew Nathan was always gentle. I doubt if he ever knowingly trod upon a worm, and I'll venture no word ever escaped his lips that he would wish to recall. It is, as I now call to mind, some eighteen years ago, as my spouse stood under the maple tree that is near our path, busy, as was her wont, with some dairy matters, that she heard the clatter of horses' hoofs, and looking up, whom did she see but her nephew Nathan. He rode up to her, and without dismounting, saluted her, bending low to do so, and after presenting her with a fat and neatly plucked fowl, made a discourse which I will repeat as nearly as my memory bears out what my wife did tell me:—

"My blessings are more than I can reckon, my Aunt Charity."

"Truly you do well to always bear that in mind, Nathan."

"Yet, I fear that through so many mercies I shall become attached to the things of time and sense, my Aunt Charity."

"You must pray to be delivered from temptation, Nathan."

"I have cast my eyes about seeking some means by which I may be tried as by fire, my dear Aunt Charity."

"What mean you, Nathan?"

"Toward Mistress Polly Prentiss, my dear Aunt Charity."

Now, if I know my spouse, neighbors, said Mr. Goodwin, interrupting the course of his narrative, and to judge of the terrible flash of indignation that was in her eyes as she told me this, the answer that she gave Nathan was not gentle. Her words were:

"Toward that shrew! Why, she hath it in her to afflict a man worse than him out of whom were driven seven devils."

"Yet knowing that I desire Mistress Polly in marriage, surely in that way if no other, I may make self-sacrifice, and be tried as if by fire."

"You are pleased to jest, Nathan."

'I never jest, my Aunt Charity; for every light word we are held to account. It hath come upon me with the force of conviction, my Aunt Charity, that I must have such trials as will wean me from the world, and if I marry this woman I shall have such trial ever present."

Thereupon my spouse, again Mr. Goodwin said, by way of interruption, did call him a stupid fool, and did pray heaven, afterward, to forgive her. She said to him, also, that to wed the woman would be to seek a grave or mad house. But he shook his head, and without a further remark rode away; my spouse did comfort herself with the thought that, determine as he might, two minutes' conversation with Mistress Polly would drive the notion from his head. A week later Nathan came again.

"She hath promised to wed you, Nathan? Have you in truth asked her hand? I could cry with vexation and sorrow."

"How else, my Aunt Charity, could she promise to wed me, unless I asked her hand?"

"How else? Why, the shrew, had she taken the notion, would not hesitate to go to any man and demand marriage. Of course she promised you. Little chance had she of a husband. Why, Nathan, did you not wed the widow Abigail Spence? Tell me that. A good woman, a thrifty housewife, and a gentle soul."

"Ah, my Aunt Charity, much did I desire to do so, but that would have been too great a blessing. Sorely was I tempted to ask the widow's hand on the day that her sister Lydia wedded young Spicer. I sat that evening in the kitchen by the window as she knitted, and marked her grace of manner and comeliness, and I made mention of Lydia's happiness, and when I did this Abigail turned to me with tender eyes and coolly said:

"'Will you not take pity on Lydia's lonely sister?' and for an instant, even many minutes, I did have sore temptation to woo her; but I judged by that remark she might, if urged, give me her hand. Then came the words of Scripture to me, to flee temptation, and I made great effort to quite her. I have not seen her since, except in church, where she does gaze on me with sad eyes."

"You are a wicked man, Nathan Appleby, to break the heart of a good woman and make up with a shrew. Still, having done so, Nathan, tell me of your wooing of Polly."

"It was on the evening of the last Lord's day, my Aunt Charity, as the sun went down, that I made my way to Mistress Polly's dwelling. I heard the sharp tone of her voice as I approached. If I mistake not she was speaking to one of her father's farm hands, and she said:

"'You great, seed-sowing numbskull!' Out of my sight, you ill-favored, hideous-ill-mannered clod!'

'And yet you persevered in your intentions, Nathan?"

"Truly I did, and heard her say, 'I hate a man, great, stupid, ill-begotten things.' Then her father replied, 'I fear you will never have an opportunity to do aught but hate a man'."

"And hearing that much you did not turn away, Nathan?"

"What I heard only satisfied me, my Aunt Charity, that I should find the tribulation I do greatly need. Mr. Prentiss came to me, and I spoke my mind without delay. I said that I desired his daughter in marriage."

"He answered that Eunice was a well-favored girl, and he could not deny her to me, if she chose to take me. I said that not Eunice, but Mistress Polly, I desired, and I confess that he did seem amazed, and did stare at me with a certain fixed expression that was painful to look upon. Then he approached me and said that he never heard I was imprudent in my drink, and I had trouble to persuade him that his suspicion wronged me. Then he looked at me again and even hinted that my reason had left me. As he quitted the room he seized my hand and said:

"'Nathan, I pray that she may send you from the house. It would be a blessing to you.'

"Mistress Polly came into the best room, my Aunt Charity, and as the door closed, she put her back against it and smiled, and I confess that the smile had naught of humor in it, but only scorn. I trembled at that smile, fearing that she would drive me out.

"'Speak, Nathan Appleby,' she said, 'for never since you were born did you speak louder than a cat mews.'

"If I remember aright, I answered her nothing, for I was confused.

"'Art dumb?' she said. 'Might as well be for aught you can say; your face is like a jack-o-lantern, and your tongue is as full of speech. What now, I say?'

"Didn't your father tell you?"

"'Had he told me you would not see me here. I'd like to know what you, whose spunk is less than a worm's, could have to say from your own lips. Not to give advice, I'll venture. You're no such idiot as to try that. Come, I'll have it out with you. Belike you would like to marry me.'

"She said this, my Aunt Charity, as in sarcasm; yet I am glad she said it, for my spirit seemed to melt like an April snow bank, and had I not taken her word on the echo I fear I could not have made known my errand. Her face as I said this was terrible, so that I turned my eyes to the window as if for a chance to escape violence. I cannot recall all she said, but I do bear in mind that she called me a beetle, and she said my legs were spindle-shanks, which is untrue; and she remarked contemptuously on the paleness of my face. I perceived, however, that the violence was only of the tongue, though that is enough for one person. She called me a pandora, whatever that may mean, and she said that I should marry her right away, and a sad day it would be for me, too. She told me to have no delay, to cause banns to be published next Lord's day, and as soon thereafter as the law permits to come for her, and she warned me to keep out of her sight till then. Other painful things she said, which I shall not repeat, my Aunt Charity, and thus she promised me."

"What do you think, neighbors, of such a wooing as that?" asked Mr. Goodwin.

"That your spouse did say rightly when she called him a stupid fool," said Mrs. Pantry.

"That it passes my comprehension," said Squire Whytyne.

"Well, I say," remarked Mr. Purchase, whose domestic experience was sad, "the man who knowingly put his head into such a yoke deserves to wear it always. Vinegar women are wont to be smooth-tongued during courtship and to make amends afterward."

"Well, tell us the rest," said Mr. Bloomfield. "They were married?"

"Yes, they were married on the Lord's day three weeks; and those who saw them as they quitted their father's house say that she berated him all the way to his home."

"And did he soon wish he was dead?" asked Mr. Purchase in such suggestive tones that Mr. Bloomfield again slyly nudged Mr. Goodwin.

"He bore her shrewness uncomplainingly for six months or more, though he grew pale and lost flesh greatly; and he did confess to me upon one occasion that he did not bear in mind when he married that death only parted husband and wife. His silence enraged her, but never did he speak a word in temper to her. Now I will narrate to you that which is most marvelous as well as amusing of it all. My spouse happened to fall in with Nathan's wife about a year ago, and I will say, neighbors, that my wife, though usually smooth spoken, can say a thing sharply if she so desires. She did tell Polly Appleby that it was a grievous shame for her to belabor that patient man Nathan."

"'Man!' Nathan's wife replied. 'Man, being of your blood, it's no wonder he's no man. He moans like a calf and purrs like a cat, and has less spunk than either. A calf would bunt and a kitten scratch!'

"'Well, as to that, Madam Appleby, sharp speech never made a calf to bunt nor a cat to scratch. Your speech is of no more account to him than it would be to them,' said my spouse.

"With that Mrs. Appleby became very wroth and did call my spouse a pandora.

"'Humph,' said my spouse, 'I could tell you that which would make you angry for cause. Did you know that the sharper speech you use the better he does like it?'

"At this Mrs. Appleby did open both her eyes, and, neighbors, as I sit here, for the first time in her life she answered not a word.

"'Do you know why he married you? Are you so stupid that you have not discovered that?' my spouse asked. 'I know, for he made a confidant of me before his wedding. He married you because he had no trials, these are his words, and he feared he would not reach heaven unless he had his share. Therefore he wedded you.'"

"'Aha! a good one,' said Mr. Pantry, as he tremblingly shook his head with laughter.

"'And what said she to that?' asked Squire Whytyne.

"Never did she speak so quietly, and for some time made no response; at last she said:

"'So that was the reason, was it? Well, I'll disappoint him. I'll—be—even—with him. I'll make him another sort of wife from this hour, for I will not be a pack horse to carry my husband to heaven.'"

Here Moses Butler snuffed both candles, and when the laughter of the gentlemen had subsided, Mr. Goodwin continued:

"When Nathan came in, soon after, what did his wife do but approach him and kiss him, and Nathan trembled, for never had she done that before. And she said, 'Dear Nathan,' and she did lovingly caress him, so that he was as one in a trance.

"Neighbors," continued Mr. Goodwin, "I have seen their babe, as I remarked, and saw Nathan gently stroking his spouse's brow, and did say soft words to her, to which she made loving response, and as she looked coyly over his shoulder to my spouse and me, she said: 'My Aunt Charity, you see what your words have driven me to. I am not any pack horse, am I, husband?' And Nathan did even in our presence kiss her, and if she returned not the kiss of love, then I never gave one myself."

"Would that I had known that thus she could have been conquered! For she was the comeliest lass in all these parts, and I would have put up with six months' gall for a lifetime of sweetness Had I known what I know now, her name would be Bloomfield, not Appleby," said Mr. Bloomfield in a sad tone.

"Aha, Neighbor Bloomfield, we have your secret now!" said Mr. Birchwood.

"No, you have not, neighbors."

"I tell you, you did betray yourself."

Here the tall clock struck eight, and Moses Butler, rising and snuffing a candle, said:

"Now, gentlemen, all of you, it is time to be in your beds. Go home and tell your spouses this tale. I'll venture they'll delight to hear it."

And with the usual authority, he sent the company away.

The members of the "Seven Choppers" must have taken Moses at his word, for of all the gossiping in the town there never was so much gossip among the matrons as there was the next day over Nathan Appleby's marriage and the result of it.

The Way of the World.

The whole world loves the modest man,
Whether he be great or small,
But yields up its plunks in great big chunks
To the man with a surplus of gall.

The whole world loves the quiet man,
Who's as silent all day as the owls;
But it's needless to mention that it gives its attention
To the fellow who gets up and howls.

The whole world loves the peaceful man,
Who sees no occasion to bicker;
But the full right of way, you'll permit me to say,
It gives to the strenuous kicker.

BAY PATH GLEANINGS.

During one of the opening days of November, when nature seemed to be making an effort to shake off the grasp of the coming winter king, and all the air vibrated with healthful energy, the writer had the pleasure to accept an invitation to take a drive with Mr. Aldrich, warden of the Spencer town farm, over many more miles of the old Bay Path. Our course led from Brookfield through East Brookfield, Spencer and Leicester to Cherry Valley, going nearly all the way over the Bay Path trail of the early days. Leaving Brookfield we soon passed the scene of the Spooner tragedy (which has been mentioned in a former paper), then ascended the Blanchard hill, where resides Mr. Charles Blanchard, the millionaire farmer, on the ancestral estate. Not far hence we came to the site of the old Woicott tavern, erected in 1723, but taken down a few years ago, near which place was the scene of an Indian onslaught in 1693 with fatal results to several families of the early settlers. A short distance brought us to East Brookfield, with its beautiful sheet of water supplied by Five Mile River. Beyond this for several miles there is little of interest, so we naturally fell to musing. Somehow the trees seemed to move slowly down from the hills and range themselves along the roadside to thicken, close up together, expand their branches and extend their trunks on high until we are shut in by the forest primeval. Our modern roadway has become the narrow trail of three centuries ago. Startled and awed by the silence, we pause and listen. There is a rustle among the dead leaves of autumn, as a son of the forest warily stalks past us, the vanguard of the painted warriors who follow in single file, alert on some plan of tribal vengeance. The scene changes; the pioneers of the white men come looking for lands on which to settle; the trail widens as the fallen branches are cleared away, and Pynchon and his men pass on to seek homes in the rich valley of the Connecticut. Another scene: We are startled by the war hoop of the red men; ambush, death and burning homes follow in their wake; but we quickly hear the tramp of serried companies as they march by for the defence of the border lands against the savage foe.

Slowly the years roll by, the times of peace have come, the forests fall away, homes appear again, the merry laugh of childhood rings out in the forest glades, fields wave with grass and grain, and plenty smiles where erst was solitude. Anon the tocsin of war is sounding in our ears, and balefires flare their boding light from answering hilltops, telling of the strife begun. We hear the dashing tramp of horsemen, the chief of the American armies passes us on his way to Boston; the weary years go by, when slowly by us pass the remnants of Burgoyne's proud host, the prisoners from Saratoga, the suspense is lifting; next passes us the first post boy on foaming charger telling of Cornwallis fallen and the long struggle ended. Time goes on and changes come, till we are aroused by the winding horn of warning as the lumbering stage coach sweeps past us with its merry passengers from Boston to New York. Still greater wonders surprise us as the steam propelled trains rush past from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Hush! What object causes that whirring sound? Is it a phantom, passing us without visible means of locomotion? No it is a car propelled by lightnings chained and obedient to the will of man. And here we are aroused from the changing dream of years, in the busy streets of Spencer, which has arisen lusty and full of teeming life on the very borders of the old Indian trail.

Turning off from the Bay Path we arrived at the Spencer town farm in time for a bountiful repast, after which we went out to view the premises. The farm contains some 200 acres, and under the care of the present warden had already assumed a thrifty appearance; the house is heated by steam, and is roomy and well appointed. The farm is one of the institutions in which the people of Spencer take pride. Just in the rear of the building, with graceful slopes rises Flat Top Hill some 1100 feet above tide water, the summit of which commands one of the finest prospects one often meets with, taking in, as it does, the entire circle, embracing views of Spencer, Leicester, Paxton, Oakham, Rutland, North Brookfield and Charlton, while in the far north loom up the forms of Wachusett and Monadnock. Near at hand to the right and left are the pleasing forms of smooth, round-topped hills, many of them cultivated to the very summits, and as there are no rocky bluffs in sight the scene is of the most pleasing type; add to this the benediction of a cloudless day of the dying year, and you have a scene not soon forgotten.

A portion of the day was spent in North Brookfield, where we called upon the general editor of the Brookfield Journal, and renewed the acquaintance formed years ago in Palmer. Some distance east of the village we were attracted by the quaint appearance of an old building in the rear of a modern house, and on inquiring found it was erected some 130 years ago, and served as a shop where hats were manufactured in the last century. The business was then carried on by Eleazur Bradshaw, a bachelor, who accumulated nearly $50,000 in the business; he died in 1810. The shop remains nearly in the shape in which he left it so long ago, and is now owned by Mr. Moreau, who takes pride in preserving a relic of a former century. Near here lives Mr. George Harwood, a survivor of 80 years, and a prominent citizen of the town, who related to us many reminiscences of the past.

Our next visit was to Johnson's Pond, located on the eastern border of North Brookfield. Here Isaac Johnson came in 1761 and bought the mills of the estate of Thomas Ball, and operated them until his death in 1769. His descendants removed to Vernon, Vt., where they are numerous today. The border of this town was either the site of an ancient Indian village or one of their favorite camping places, as Indian relics have been found there. During the past summer Mr. Austin Richards of Spencer picked up arrow heads, and the most perfect stone tomahawk the writer ever saw. The land hereabouts, now overgrown with trees, shows evidences of former cultivation by early settlers. November 11th we went to the village of Spencer to continue our route. This town has some remarkably fine private residences, bespeaking the thrift of the place. The largest shoe factory in the world is located here, the building being some 800 feet long, and in good times some 2000 workmen are employed within its walls. We were joined here by Mr. Jonathan Earle, who has large interests in New York but still retains his home in Leicester, where his ancestors had early settlements and were its most important townsmen. Mr. Earle is of the eighth generation from Ralph Earle, who came to Rhode Island in 1634. As we followed the line of the old trail he pointed out many interesting localities east of Spencer and in Leicester. After passing the old Muzzy house, now without a tenant, we came to the Robert Watson house, built in 1759 by him after the first residence had been destroyed by a hurricane the same year. It is said that the tornado transported some of the furniture nearly half a mile into an adjacent pond. The Tarleton house came next, 100 years old; then the Jonathan Earle house in Leicester, built in the last century. A part of this large house was used as a card factory when that business was in a flourishing state. Near the roadside in this vicinity Mr. Earle called our attention to a section of igneous rock containing veins of quartz, which had been polished nearly as smooth as glass, doubtless in the glacial period, by the agency of heavy boulders grinding across their surface.

We found the village of Leicester to be a pleasing, quiet town. Here we spent a pleasant hour with Mr. C. C. Denny, a life-long resident, who imparted much information concerning matters of local and geneological history. In the center of the town is the imposing structure once the residence of Dr. Wakefield of Palmer memory; and on the same street we passed the home of Mr. Russell, the late nominee for governor.

Some distance east of Leicester, near Cherry Valley, is the old Southgate estate, where Steward Southgate of early Palmer fame lived and died after leaving the latter place. After his death the

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19, 1894.

THE Louisiana Lottery held its last drawing in this country Dec. 30, but has located in Honduras, and will continue to find dupes here just the same as formerly.

GOVERNOR GREENHALGE has nominated Lloyd Everett White of Taunton to succeed Hosea M. Knowlton as district attorney for the southern district. The nomination lies over until the election next fall.

IT is reported that Queen Lil says she proposes to have her throne back, or nothing. With all due respect to Me and Blount and Gresham, her ticket in that lottery stands more than the average chance of being a blank.

AN Amesbury judge has been giving persons brought before him for drunkenness the choice between taking a certain liquor cure or six months in the house of correction, and there is considerable question as to whether he has a right to do so.

WHILE laborers are clamoring for work the farmers are seeking in vain for help on their farms. Pity that both should suffer when they might benefit each other, but eating free soup in the cities is not so fatiguing as getting up and milking the cows, hence the lack of each to secure that which they claim to want.

MASSACHUSETTS investors who planted their money in western farm mortgages have not always realized large rates of interest on their investments, or collected it when the rate was reasonable. Many loans were swindles, one case having recently come to light where a piece of land in Minnesota which is listed on the assessors' books for $7000 is mortgaged to Eastern parties for $70,450.

THE modest sum of $160,000 is asked for to fight the gypsy moth this year. The pest will cost the state $200,000 in the four years since its introduction, carelessly, but if left alone would cause a loss of $1,000,000 annually, so up to date the state is ahead of the game, though the experience comes high. It would have been cheaper to have paid the expenses of the entomologist to some other cliem while he was experimenting with this new bug.

A LANDLORD hard-hearted enough to put a tenant—a respectable woman with four daughters, the oldest 15—out on the sidewalk with the mercury nearly down to zero, simply because she was in arrears for rent to the small amount of $3, can hardly be conceived, and yet this was what happened right in cultured Boston last week. And the law gives him the right to do it in forty-eight hours after giving notice, simply by giving some one a lease of the place, it mattering not whether the holder proposes to occupy the premises or no, the "lease" being many times to make "legal" an action which certainly is against the principles of humanity and justice. There is something the matter with such a law.

PROVIDED that the New York, New Haven and Hartford road absorbs the New England, as it now seems likely to do, the stockholders of the Boston and Albany may well look with apprehension for the result. The distance between Boston and New York is considerably shorter by the New England route, and the New Haven road might very likely see the advantages of sending its passengers between those cities by that line, which would mean the cutting off of the fast trains on the Albany road. Should such an event take place there will be decided opposition on the part of the traveling public, and undoubtedly an appeal to the railroad commissioners for at least one fast train over the Albany road.

FOR all America's boast of leading foreign nations in nearly everything, she may possibly be able to learn something from France in the matter of trials of great criminals. Auguste Vaillante threw the bomb from the gallery of the Chamber of Deputies on the 9th of December. In the forenoon of January 10th he was brought into court, a jury was impanelled, he was duly tried, convicted and sentenced, the whole being over in time for the American papers of that evening to announce the fact. Compare this with the time used, weeks, in securing a jury to try the Chicago Anarchists, or Prendergast, who shot Mayor Harrison, and about whose guilt there could not be the slightest doubt, and the strenuous efforts to save the necks of such offenders. The French laws look first to the protection of society against the criminal, while here the law protects the accused against a possible excess of zeal on the part of the authority representing society. Reflect on the many failures of justice in this country, and consider whether we may not well take a few lessons from across the water.

ANOTHER chapter in the Stockbridge Savings Bank scandal; the receiver has stolen $21,000, and is in jail for having disobeyed the orders of the court. The receiver is C. H. Hobbs, who was formerly a clerk in the Amherst Savings Bank, and was appointed April 10th, 1891. From the first Hobbs antagonized the bank commissioners and the court, making all the trouble he dared and refusing to allow the commissioners to see his books. They finally demanded an accounting, but it was prevented on one pretext and another. Finally Hobbs was backed against by a coal wagon and announced that both legs were crushed, one so badly that amputation would be necessary, with the possibility of the same fate for the other. The thing looked suspicious, however, and an examination was ordered, the result being that one leg was found slightly discolored, while the other was apparently unhurt. Hobbs had been shamming. An examination of his accounts showed that he was $21,000 short, and in the supreme court at Boston Tuesday Judge Knowlton sentenced him to six months in jail for disobeying the orders of the court.

SHORT NEWS NOTES.

Mrs. Hannah Gorton of Central Village, Ct., died on Thursday of last week at the age of 101.

Another failure in the shoe trade at Boston, Lewis F. Tenney, with liabilities of $100,000.

Three men were taken from jail at Russell, Kan., Sunday morning and hanged for the murder of a neighbor last July.

Several of a gang of thieves which has been systematically stealing freight from the Fitchburg road have been captured at Greenfield.

A New York man who was determined to commit suicide Monday took poison, shot himself, and then jumped from a fifth story window.

The county commissioners estimate the county expenses for the year at $144,500; deducting the estimated receipts of $14,500, leaves $130,000 as the county tax of 1894.

Catherine Donahue, 37, of Medford, was found lying across the grave of her brother in Malden Sunday with an empty whisky bottle beside her and her legs, arms, face and ears badly frozen.

An improvised bridge at Long Island City gave way last Friday night, throwing some 60 persons into the water, five of whom were drowned. A rear-end collision on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road near Hackensack, N. J., Monday, killed about a dozen people and injured nearly 50. A passenger train collided with a wrecking train on the Bennington and Rutland road near South Shaftesbury, Vt., Tuesday morning, killing the engineer and fireman of the passenger train. None of the passengers were injured.

PALMER NEWS.

WISHED MRS. FULLER WAS DEAD.

Celia H. Dolliver Yearns to Have Her Out of the Way, so She Could Have Mr. Fuller.

The cases of Timothy F. Fuller and Miss Celia H. Dolliver, for lewd and lascivious cohabitation, were heard in the district court Wednesday, the trial taking all day. Both were bound over to the superior court in $500 each, which was furnished. W. W. Leach appeared for the commonwealth, S. S. Taft for Fuller and T. W. Kenefick for Miss Dolliver. This is the case in which the Dolliver woman caused so much trouble in the household for the third wife of the man for whom she had previously been housekeeper. Mrs. Fuller testified to her marriage to Mr. Fuller in May, 1890, and that in the following August Dolliver came to their house to live, remaining until September, 1892, and working at various places about town. Soon after her arrival Mrs. Fuller noticed things which made her suspicious that matters were not as they should be between her husband and the other woman. They would go to the barn together to feed the cow and be gone half an hour; for seven weeks Mr. Fuller took his meals in the barn, Miss Dolliver eating there also; finally Mrs. Fuller was ordered to move her sleeping room up stairs, while her husband remained below; she objected but was compelled to. Dolliver roomed up stairs, but seldom retired until after Mrs. Fuller, who would hear the door into the hall closed after she had gone up, and then hear the voices of the couple below. Being ill one night she came down and saw Miss Dolliver coming from Fuller's room; Dolliver helped Mr. Fuller bathe and change his clothing, even to his flannels; she frequently lay down on his bed, and one occasion, coming from Boston on the late train, went to his room and kissed him; Dolliver had abused her, and one day struck her four times with her hand. Another witness testified that she met Fuller and Miss Dolliver on the street one night, when Mr. Fuller spoke of Dolliver as "the wife I keep for my comfort." The defense was a general denial of all these statements.

The defense was given a black eye, however, by the introduction of three letters written by Miss Dolliver to Mr. Fuller:

Other letters were of the same character, she evidently being extremely anxious to have Mrs. Fuller out of the way. They show that she is a dangerous character to have about, and Mrs. Fuller may feel thankful that she has escaped without serious bodily injury from this woman.

BEST FARM FERTILIZATION.

Prof. Brooks of the Amherst Agricultural College Talks to the Farmers.

The first farmers' institute of the season, under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society, was held at the court room in this village Tuesday. Prof. William P. Brooks of the Amherst Agricultural College gave an interesting talk on "Manures and Fertilizers." He said a man should first study the soil he wishes to cultivate in order to best adapt it to the crop he proposes to raise therefrom. There are thirteen original elements which enter into and constitute plant life, the three principal of which are nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium. As an illustration giving the difference in certain soils, an acre of the common meadow land in Hadley one foot deep contains of nitrogen 7700 pounds, phosphoric acid 5200 pounds, potassium 1750 pounds, while the same amount of soil from the plain land in Westfield contains of nitrogen 3850 pounds, phosphoric acid 5600 pounds, potassium 2800 pounds. The land in Hadley produces large crops, while that in Westfield scarcely anything. The lack of crop-producing qualities in the Westfield soil is due in part to lack of nitrogen, but if that should be supplied there might be other factors to be added which would have to be left to the good judgment of the farmer. So that even an exact scientific knowledge is not all that is wanting to make the fields productive, although such knowledge goes a great ways in that direction.

How shall the deficiency in the soil of plant-producing material be supplied? Either by barnyard manures, or by chemicals which constitute such manures. The value of stable manure depends largely upon the way in which it has been cared for, as shown in the following schedule. The highest value is where it has been closely housed in the cellar beneath the stables, where it has received all the liquid accumulations of the stable, as follows: From five cords of manure, nitrogen 122 pounds, phosphoric acid 97 pounds, potassium, 155 pounds. The lowest estimate is from the same amount of manure thrown out of doors and left to the washings of the storms: Nitrogen, 90 pounds, phosphoric acid 40 pounds, potassium 53 pounds, making the value of the unprotected article worth hardly one-third that of the housed. Then again one should consider how much the annual crop removes from the soil, and be sure and replace the elements taken away; failing to do this the land is impoverished. If one is fortunate enough to gather 100 bushels of corn from an acre, the land is impoverished thus: Nitrogen 163 pounds, phosphoric acid 57 pounds, potassium 107 pounds; while 300 bushels of potatoes from the same land would take away nitrogen 37 pounds, phosphoric acid 12 pounds, potassium 53 pounds. Five tons of clover would carry off nitrogen 178 pounds, phosphoric acid 36 pounds, and potassium 182 pounds.

TheP rofessor said that as a rule it is cheaper to buy chemicals and mix them than to buy manure, but as soils vary it is necessary to make tests on each farm. The experiment station at Amherst is ready to furnish small sacks of chemicals suited to different crops to farmers who would honestly apply the tests, thus providing them with a means of finding out what their soil needed in the way of fertilizers.

We have given briefly some of the salient points of the professor's remarks, enough to show how much the farmers missed who did not attend the meeting. The next institute will be held at Monson February 13, of which notice will be given hereafter.

Rev. Mr. Frost Dismissed.

Rev. Mr. Frost of the Baptist church had a surprise in store for the members of the church last Sunday. They were requested to remain after the morning service, and his resignation was read. He demanded that it be acted on immediately, though such action could not be legal, and the vote was 19 to 16 in favor of retaining him. This could have no effect on the meeting which had already been called for Wednesday evening to see if he would be dismissed, and which was, contrary to the expectation, very harmonious, though the vote was 31 to 18 that he be dismissed after a three months' notice, as required by the terms of the agreement between pastor and people.

Miss Pierce, the new teacher in the high school, commenced her duties Monday.

Edward Carey gave a dance at his house above the carpet mill Tuesday evening.

The Sunday school of the Congregational church is to have a new library in the near future.

Revere chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star initiated candidates Wednesday evening.

Rev. H. F. Moulton will preach to the children at the state primary school next Sunday morning.

Miss Jennie Brainerd gave a birthday party Tuesday evening to a number of her young friends.

The installation of the officers of Good Cheer Rebekah lodge will take place next Tuesday evening.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club will meet next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. C. K. Gamwell on Park street.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Small entertained a small whist party at their home on Squier street Tuesday evening.

The Oronoco Whist Club met at the Converse House Tuesday evening with Mrs. B. P. Morse and Mrs. Oare.

The newly-elected officers of Hampden chapter of the Royal Arch Masons will be installed next Monday evening.

G. A. Rice has been at Belchertown this week on account of the illness of his father and mother, but both are better now.

Quaboag council of the Royal Arcanum installed officers Tuesday evening, and afterward enjoyed a collation, served in the room.

The wires of the Postal Telegraph were connected yesterday afternoon, and the office in Strong's block is now ready for business.

Fred Caryl sprained his ankle Monday while fooling in his place of business, and has been confined to the house for several days.

C. A. Brown & Co. are placing a combination hot water and warm air heater in the residence of Mrs. A. M. Smith on Thorndike street.

Some of the private ice houses in town have been filled this week with ice from the pond of C. T. Brainerd, the ice being about 11 inches thick.

District Deputy Mrs. S. A. Parkhurst and suite went to Springfield Tuesday evening and installed the officers of Morning Star Rebekah lodge.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will meet again next Friday evening, when H. C. Strong will present a paper on the settlement of the Dutch in America.

The Lend-a-hand society connected with the Congregational church will meet next Monday afternoon with Mrs. H. W. McGregory on Squier street.

Superintendent of Schools Small will attend the superintendents' meeting in Worcester next Friday, and there will be no "office hours" at his office on that day.

Miss Goldthwait of Boston, state missionary for the Universalist Young People's Union, has been in town a part of the week in the interests of the Bethany Home at Boston.

The directors of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural society will meet next Tuesday at 10 a. m. for the purpose of revising the premium list for the annual fair next September.

The Ladies' Social Union of the Universalist church will give an entertainment Monday evening, the 29th. The Phila May Concert Company of Boston will furnish the programme.

The social at the Congregational church Wednesday evening was the most successful of the season, the vestry of the church being crowded to its utmost. Nearly 200 took supper.

The firm of Hitchcock & Blanchard, plumbers and heaters, has been dissolved by the expiration of the contract between the two members, and Mr. Hitchcock will continue the business at the old stand on Central street.

Prof. Hibbard of Wesleyan University reads this evening in the opera house under the auspices of the senior class of the high school. He is one of the finest elocutionists in the country, and should be greeted by a large audience.

Miss M. E. Bacon of Boston, of the state board of charities, inspected the town farm to-day. She reports that the inmates are well cared for, but that they are overcrowded, and that some way of heating the upper part of the building must be provided.

At the meeting of Revere chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, Wednesday evening, the members presented their efficient secretary, Mrs. D. S. Davis, with a handsome gold watch charm, emblematic of the order, suitably inscribed with the emblems of the office.

Mrs. Helen Warren Auger is to continue as organist at St. Paul's Universalist church by unanimous vote of the committee, and G. W. Ely is retained for the coming year as director of the choir. There will be some changes in the singers.

A man and wife from Belchertown were thrown from their carriage in front of the Flynt company's office Monday noon by the breaking of the kingbolt. The woman was somewhat shaken up, though not seriously hurt. She was taken into Dr. Holbrook's office and soon recovered.

While the streets in the village and the roads hereabouts were devoid of snow and quite muddy Tuesday, in some of the roads in the Hog Hill district the snow was two feet deep, and a path for teams had to be shoveled out. There was little or no snow in the fields, but between the fences of the road it was drifted badly.

Charles Cooms of Palmer has sold his farm between South Spencer and Charlton, with 13 head of cattle, three horses, farming tools, etc., through the D. F. Holden agency of Palmer. The same agency has also sold the McDougall farm in the northern part of the town, formerly owned by J. Foley and known as the Hastings farm, to A. Miller.

A meeting of the citizens of Palmer is called for next Mnnday evening at 7.30 in the Congregational church to make arrangements for coöperating with the other parts of the town in the no-license campaign. The pastors of the town are expected to make short addresses, and practical methods of work will be considered. Everybody is invited.

Numerous applications for aid are coming in to the relief committee, and a considerable quantity of clothing, etc., has been sent out. The supply will need to be replenished, however, and all who have garments which they can spare are requested to send them to the committee, or they will be called for on receipt of notice sent to any member of the committee; C. E. Fuller is chairman.

The music committee of the Congregational church has engaged Mrs. Rufus Flynt as director for the year commencing April 1st, and she will have entire charge. The chorus choir which has sung for the past two years will be replaced by a quartete, composed of Miss Georgia Packard, soprano; Mrs. Rufus Flynt, contralto; H. W. McGregory, tenor; C. H. Clark of Thorndike, bass; organist, Mrs. W. H. Small.

A large buck deer was seen near the residence of C. R. Shaw on Hog Hill Monday. The animal was quite tame, and Mr. Shaw approached within about 50 feet of it, the deer standing and looking at him. It remained about in the vicinity all day. A doe was seen the same day near the farm of Josiah Stebbins. It will be well for sportsmen to remember that it is against the law to kill deer at any time in Massachusetts.

The record of school attendance for the month ending January 5, is as follows, not including the high school: Pupils enrolled, 844; average membership, 803; average attendance, 736; per cent of attendance, 91; amount of tardiness, 358; number of dismissals, 213; perfect in attendance, 208; hours lost by dismissals, 2185; days lost by absence, 1368; best attendance, Mrs. Leach's room, 97 per cent; best village attendance, Bondsville, 93.9 per cent.

Rev. H. F. Moulton will preach in the Universalist church Sunday morning on "The Relation of the Christian Church to the Present Labor Discontent." The second in the series of vesper services will be held in the evening at 7 o'clock. A short address will be given by the pastor on "The Relation of the Christian Church to the Social Distress," which will be followed by instructions in hymnology by George W. Ely, and the singing of familiar hymns. All are invited.

John Desmond slipped his shoulder out of joint in a peculiar manner Wednesday morning, the accident being caused by stretching his arms above his head while in bed, when he awoke and before he rose. Dr. Stowe failed to get it back and advised him to go to the hospital in Springfield. He started with a friend, but when near the institution remarked that he couldn't stand the pain a great while longer, at the same time giving his arm a twist, when the joint slipped into place again and he turned about and came home on the next train.

Business is lively at times in Palmer, if in no other place, and the matter of a few dollars difference is not allowed to spoil a trade. A herd of cattle was being driven along Main street yesterday morning when a man on the sidewalk called out to the owner. "How much for that last cow?" "Fifty dollars; what'll you give?" "Twenty-five." "She's yours; drive her up to his barn," this last to a helper, and the animal was separated from the rest of the herd and taken to her new owner's residence.

The sale of Overlook Farm did not take place Tuesday, as advertised, A. W. Lincoln of Warren having secured an injunction prohibiting it. Mr. Lincoln holds a second mortgage on the place, the first mortgage being $7000. When the barn was burned on the place in the summer of 1891 the insurance money, $4700, was given to Mr. Ely with which to replace the structure. Mr. Lincoln claims that only a small portion of this money was expended on the present barn, and thinks that the balance should have been applied on the first mortgage.

The subject of the morning sermon at the Congregational church next Sunday will be "Spirtual Losses Within the Range of Salvation." In the evening there will be a special service for men, but which will be interesting for all, under the direction of the Men's Sunday Evening Club. The musical part of the programme will be in charge of a male quartette consisting of G. W. Adams, C. H. Clark, W. A. Weld and H. W. McGregory. The following special music will be rendered: "Nearer, My God, to Thee," by John R. Sweeney; "The Shadows of the Evening Hours," by Albert J. Holden; "Over Yonder," by George C. Stebbins.

THE JOURNAL has decided to make a change in the plan of distributing its art work, the "Magic City", from that announced last week. Instead of requiring two coupons for each number, but one will be needed, and a new part will be ready for distribution each week. The coupons will be numbered, and will be good only for the part bearing the same number. The first coupon will be printed next week, and all should be sure and get the first number of this fine work, which is unusually well printed on heavy plated paper, making a handsome addition to the library or drawingroom. Numbers can be obtained at this office, or may be ordered by mail without extra cost. Be sure and get the first coupon and the first of the sixteen parts next Friday.

The Home Missionary rally at the Congregational church yesterday afternoon was not as largely attended as it should have been. "Home Missions from a Woman's Standpoint" was discussed by Miss Anna A. Pickens of Boston and Miss M. D. Moffatt of New York; "Our Work at Home" was dwelt upon by Secretary Joshua Coit of Boston, and "The Opening of a New Country" was outlined by Rev. J. A. Parker, superintendent in Oklahoma. In the evening a large audience attended to hear Rev. Mr. Puddifoot, who has been in Palmer before, but he was unable to attend on account of a blunder somewhere in sending him elsewhere on the same date. Secretaries Coit and Parker spoke in his place, and a large number of views were shown by the stereopticon.

The large pool of blood in the road at the top of Thorndike street Wednesday afternoon was not indicative of a tragedy, though it had somewhat of that appearance to the uninitiated. It was simply the result of relieving a horse of a bad case of the blind staggers. The occupants of a carriage going toward Thorndike were somewhat surprised to see coming at rather a high rate of of speed a horse attached to a carriage in which was a man. As the animal was swerving from one side of the road to the other they naturally thought that the man was "loaded" rather more heavily than was good for him. As he approached them, however, they saw that he was doing his best to stop the horse, but having about as much effect as if pulling against the side of a barn, while his face was as white as a sheet, and he was calling for help in a tone which indicated that he was somewhat concerned about his condition. The horse was stopped and the four men tackled him. They had a hard job to keep him still long enough to operate upon, but finally succeeded, and the driver went on his way rejoicing.

District Court.

In the district court last Saturday the civil case of George M. Stewart of Wales against Leander Fuzzy and another of Monson for action of contract, was tried, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff in the sum of $94.10 and costs. In the criminal court Monday there was a return of a search warrant served on the premises of Michael St. John in Palmer Center Sunday morning, no liquors being found. Wednesday John Conroy of Three Rivers paid $5 for assaulting his wife. Yesterday Elwin Bateson of Worcester was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for one year for vagrancy. The young fellow was only 18 years old, but had been "on the road" since he was 16, could not read or write, although coming from thrifty Scotch and English stock, and showed no care about bettering his condition.

State Primary School Notes.

Miss Mabel Moore is away on a two weeks' vacation.

The grippe seems to have fastened its grip on the officers of this institution. At present its victims are Mrs. E. G. Ward, Mrs. S. E. Prentiss and Mrs. Fanny Richardson. Mrs. Wheeler and Miss S. A. Luther are recovering from a severe attack of the disease.

E. E. Walker gave us a surprise Wednesday afternoon when he returned from a short vacation and frankly admitted that he was the "happy man" in a nuptial event which occurred in Saugus at 11.30 a. m. Monday. Mr. Walker has been connected with the school about four years, first filling the position of supervisor of the second division, but having a decided preference for outside work was appointed to the present position three years ago. During this time he has made many friends at the school and also in Palmer, where he is a member of the Odd Fellows. Hearty congratulations and best wishes for his future happiness are extended.

BONDSVILLE.

Mrs. John Dunn, who has been quite sick, is on the gain.

Miss Alice Armstrong is on the sick list, also Master Frankie P. Carroll.

Thomas Picard of Roxton Ponds, Can., is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse Reicso.

The W. C. T. U. had its annual meeting Thursday afternoon at Mrs. C. E. Getchell's.

Miss Hattie Fairbanks of Ware was the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Henry Morgan, last week.

Mrs. Ida Pasco was called home Monday to Blanchville, Ct., by the illness of her mother.

John Sullivan, Armond LaCross and Dennis Lynch shot a fox Monday on the quarry hill.

Miss Jessie Ryther of Springfield spent Sunday with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Ryther.

Miss Lizzie Fairbanks of Ware has been staying with her aunt, Mrs. Henry Morgan, the last two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Lorimer of Northampton were the guests over Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Shaw.

The first of the series of the Book Club entertainments was held Wednesday night at C. E. Getchell's residence.

Miss May Martin was unable to teach school Tuesday, and Miss Edith Hobson acted as substitute for her.

The friends of Vincent O'Regan will be sorry to learn that he broke his arm in one of the Otis Co's. elevators Tuesday at Ware.

Miss Sophia Thompson, who has been visiting for two months with her mother and aunt, Mrs. Richard Russell, returned to her home in Worcester Monday.

Felix Pelan, a little French boy, fell in the river by the bridge the other day, and would have been drowned had it not been for Johnnie Dunn, who saw him and got him out.

THREE RIVERS.

Mrs. O. J. Senton is quite ill.

Miss Annie Ives of Manchester, N. H., is visiting Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Ives.

Elmer Powell narrowly escaped drowning Wednesday afternoon while skating.

Bright new signs were hung this week at Shaw Bros.' store and at the post office.

F. L. White, two daughters and son Fred have been quite ill with the grippe this week.

Miss Cora Clark returned to her school Wednesday after a week's illness with the grippe.

Miss Clara Greene, who has been quite ill with the grippe, is able to attend to her duties once more.

C. P. Haynes has been filling his ice house this week with ice of very fair quality about eight inches thick.

C. P. Haynes's large white horse is still suffering from the effects of the accident Monday morning, by breaking through into the river while cutting ice.

The fishermen from all directions have sought Three Rivers this week, and several have secured fine strings of pickerel. Several fish weighing more than two pounds each have been taken.

Mr. and Mrs. Livy McMaster, former residents of Palmer, visited Mr. and Mrs. King Knox the first of the week. Mr. McMaster has been in the trucking business in Fitchburg for quite a number of years.

The high wind of last Friday tore a part of the tin roof from the brick block of the Palmer Mill Company nearest the railroad on Main street, and damaged the remainder so that it will all have to be replaced.

At the last regular meeting of the Monday Evening Club it was voted to give a "Ladies' night" in the near future. The ladies of the club will take entire charge of the meeting, and after the regular exercises will serve refreshments.

The members of Union Evangelical church held their annual roll call and supper at the church Tuesday evening, nearly 100 being present. After the supper the right hand of fellowship was extended to Mr. and Mrs. George W. Wright. At the business meeting which followed, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Butler, was chosen moderator, and the following officers were elected for the year: Clerk, S. B. Barnes; treasurer, E. F. Shaw; deacon for three years, O. B. Sikes; deacon for two years, G. S. Geer; standing committee, Rev. G. S. Butler, R. C. Newell, O. B. Sikes, A. S. Geer, S. B. Barnes, H. N. Fish, O. J. Senton; collector, F. E. Hillman; auditor, F. A. Upham; music committee, A. W. Warriner, G. W. Wright. The especially pleasant feature of the evening was the report of the building and parsonage committee, which was created over a year ago, and has collected and paid out for the building of the parsonage $2126.56 in cash, and $498.49 worth of stock and material. After making its report the committee presented to the society the parsonage all paid for, with the deed of the land on which it is built. The report of the treasurer was the occasion of considerable rejoicing, as it showed that the society is entirely free from debt and has a good cash balance to its credit.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 17, 1894,

The eternal agitation of the liquor question which characterizes our state will be continued this year. Without doubt the friends of the Gothenburg or Norwegian system will do all they can to have that enacted as the law of Massachusetts, and there is reason to believe that they will make a vigorous fight. They are sure to be opposed by the temperance people of the Faxon class, and the opposition will be as determined as the movement itself. On the other hand, those who dislike the present system have begun their work already, and Mr. Sullivan of Boston has introduced a bill to make a flat repeal of the law to limit the number of licenses according to the population. In the Senate Mr. Gage of Essex has put in a similar bill, but it raises the first class license fee so that it shall not be less than $2000, while the other classes are fixed as follows: Second and third, not less than $500; fourth, not less than $600; fifth, not less than $300; sixth, not less than $1.

Senator Lyford of Hampden has introduced resolutions for biennial elections of state officers and members of the Legislature, but not saying anything about biennial sessions of the Legislature.

State reports are usually bundled up and cast aside without due consideration, but the people ought to bestow more than a passing glance upon the annual report of the general superintendent of prisons, for it is full of instruction and warning against a popular folly. The honest but mistaken labor organizations of the state have long clamored against the competition of prison labor. They have said much about the destruction of honest labor by convict labor, until it would seem as if it were better for convicts to live in idleness and in the vice which it inevitably breeds than to do honest work and help to support themselves. So loud was the clamor and so great was the fear of the labor vote on the part of the politicians that the law of 1887 was hurried through, almost without debate, in the closing hours of the session, by which the contract system was abolished and the state account system substituted. Even then Gov. Ames would not sign the bill until it had been amended so as to take effect November 1, and it was the understanding then that the system could not get into operation before the Legislature of 1888 should be in session, when the law could be repealed.

But the session of 1888 did not repeal the law. A provision was made that the superintendent should not be permitted to sell supplies from one prison to another. So the system has been in force ever since. Every year enormous sums have been appropriated from the state treasury to sustain the prison industries, particularly at the state prison, enormous when compared with a self-sustaining basis. By looking over the appropriations for recent years I find the following "for maintaining industries" at the several institutions:

	State Prison.	Concord Reformatory.	Woman's Prison.
1889.	$250,000	$50,000	$20,000
1890.	220,000	50,000	5,000
1891.	210,000	40,000	5,000
1892.	180,000	45,000	4,000
1893.	140,000	45,000	4,000
Totals,	$1,000,000	$210,000	$38,000

Here, in the last five years, we see that a round million dollars has been paid from the state treasury for the state prison account alone, besides a quarter of another million for the other two state institutions. Yet the system has proved a great failure and has greatly increased the trouble of keeping good discipline.

Superintendent Jones says in his report: "The loss to the commonwealth has been so large since experimenting with the state account plan, the effect upon the discipline of this loose, careless, irresponsible manner of management so apparent, that it has been thought wise to gradually close up the departments running on the state account plan with as little loss as possible, and adopt the piece-price system. The departments have all been curtailed with that idea in view." Doubtless the state account plan would have made a better showing under a more competent warden than has been in charge during most of the five years, but the system itself is pronounced by high authority here to be wrong. After this costly experiment, the question is whether the convicts shall be made to work so as to contribute as much as possible to their support and to the good order of the prison. Meantime it has been clearly demonstrated that the outcry of labor against prison competition has been without reasonable cause, and has resulted in great loss to the state and a disgraceful scandal in the state prison.

The report says regarding the Hampden county house of correction:

The total number of prisoners Sept. 30, 1893, was 212: males, 190; females, 22. The highest number employed during the year was 174; the lowest number employed was 70. Chair-caning of a cheap quality is performed on the piece-price system. The amount earned by the prisoners for the year ending Sept. 30, 1893, was $4,754.06, an increase of about 15 per cent over last year. While the average number of prisoners employed has decreased, the earnings have increased, which I ascribe to the better discipline of the institution, Sheriff Clark having made changes which are shown in the higher standard of discipline attained. The use of tobacco has been abolished, which shows to advantage in the whole institution as well as in the workshop.

Universal interest is taken in the location of the proposed new state normal school. North Adams has practically offered to raise $50,000 if the state will raise $100,000 more and build the schoolhouse in that town. People in the adjoining town of Adams are eager for it, and have signed a petition in good numbers, asking that it be in North Adams. Now comes Lowell, greatly richer and more populous than North Adams, with a proposition to take $150,000 from the state treasury for the site and building. Other places which want it have as yet made no bids.

In consequence of the order of the Legislature, asking whether the state cannot now profitably give work to the unemployed upon something which must be done sooner or later, Lieut. Gov. Wolcott and Councilors Leeson and Barnes have been appointed a committee to meet the heads of different state institutions and see whether something cannot be done which will relieve much distress and at the same time be of advantage to the state. LANDON.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 19, 1894.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

George W. Brown has entered the employ of Dr. N. W. Rand.

The Woman's Relief Corps meets next Wednesday evening.

Miss Sargent of North Grafton is the guest of Miss Clara A. Wood.

Rev. W. H. Marble preached at the state primary school last Sunday.

The Ladies' Whist Club met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Ralph Clifford.

H. F. Miller gave a whist party to several of his friends at his home Wednesday evening.

Watson Shaw has been suddenly called to Granby on account of the sudden illness of his father.

Wilbur Holdridge has left the employ of R. M. Reynolds and entered that of Heimann & Lichten.

David Letter of Webster, a former resident, has been in town this week calling on old friends.

Ice Dealer Smith is filling his ice houses with the wherewithal to cool parched lips next summer.

All the school children are being vaccinated, thus keeping the doctors busy out of school hours.

The Dorcas Society of the Congregational church met with Mrs Alvin A. Gage Wednesday afternoon.

Peter Gould, for many years employed by R. M. & Theo. Reynolds, has resigned from the firm's employ.

Don't forget the entertainment by the Payson Male Quartette at Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening.

As soon as there is sufficient snow the choir of St. Patrick's church is to have a sleighride and supper.

Mrs. W. N. Flynt has returned from a brief visit with her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Lincoln, in Springfield.

The Congregational and Methodist societies held a reunion service Tuesday evening at the Methodist church.

Miss Mary Ritter of Monson and Richard Gunther of Wales were married at the groom's home on Monday.

The South Circle of King's Daughters will meet with Mrs. Bradway on Hampden avenue this evening at 7.45.

Mrs. Gage of Hartford, Ct., is with her daughter, Mrs. F. S. Hatch, who is still very ill with nervous prostration.

Frank McFarland of Willimantic, formerly in the butcher business in Monson, was in town buying poultry this week.

Miss Clara A. Wood, superintendent of schools, will attend the superintendents' convention at Worcester next Friday.

Miss Sarah Chaffee is taking care of Miss Eliza Smith, who is ill with bronchitis, Miss Julia Smith having returned to Springfield.

The many friends of Mrs. Fenton are glad to see her face again and welcome her return after a long visit with friends in New York.

The union meeting held in the Methodist church Tuesday evening was well attended, and a deep spiritual interest was manifested.

Herbert Haradon, who has been spending a few weeks with E. H. Brown of South Monson, has returned to his home in Brooklyn.

R. S. Coltman had a new piano placed in his home on Lincoln street Monday, the instrument being purchased of a Worcester firm.

Miss Esther R. Holmes and Mabel L. Anderson attended the home missionary meeting in Springfield Wednesday of this week.

The high wind of Friday blew down John Maguire's cider mill on Margaret street. Loss about $100. He has already commenced to rebuild.

Mr. Bramble of State Line has four four-horse teams drawing railroad ties for the Boston and Albany road. He has 6000 ready for delivery.

Officer Thompson has this week sent the two loads of beer which were seized from the Thorndike wagon last summer to the state police headquarters at Boston.

The union meeting of the Endeavor societies of the Methodist and Congregational churches Sunday evening in the vestry of the latter was largely attended, about 280 being present.

The social at the Congregational church, which was to have been held next Tuesday evening, has been postponed until Wednesday evening on account of the entertainment in Memorial Hall.

Murdock McPherson, who has been idle some time, has accepted a position with D. B. Wesson of Springfield, on his new building. Several other stonecutters from town are on the same job.

The ladies who sit at the table with Miss Mary Hobbs at R. M. Reynolds's straw works gave her a very pleasant surprise party Monday in honor of her birthday. They presented her with a set of fruit knives.

Martin Sedgwick of Belchertown, father of Mrs. Carlos L. Peck, Mrs. Edward D. Cushman and Mrs Rufus Fay of this place died of pneumonia Sunday morning at the age of 75 years. The funeral took place Tuesday.

Notice was given last Sunday to the people of the Silver street mission of the Congregational church that Rev. W. H. Marble will preach there next Sunday. These meetings are well attended, and great good is being done there.

Rev. Ira A. Priest of Somerville, a former pastor of the Universalist church, will occupy the pulpit of that church Tuesday evening, Feb. 6th. This is the first of the special meetings which are to be held every week during the month.

The young people of the Universalist church are rehearsing another drama, to be presented in the church January 30th. The ability of the young people ought to ensure them a full house. The plays is "Olds with the Enemy."

Some of the advantages of the situation of the State street schoolhouse are already apparent, for this very week three pupils, one girl and two boys, have sought for wisdom in the depths of the brook that sings merrily along beside the building.

The coal which was set on fire the morning of the 13th of November, when Central block was destroyed, is still burning and will doubtless last another week. Just think of it, a continual fire for sixty-seven days, and poor people all around us in actual want.

Two young men had a lively scrapping match Sunday evening. It seems that as they were passing a young lady, No. 1. jostled No. 2 against her and fled, which so aroused No. 2's indignation as to cause him to give chase, and upon catching No. 1 ensued the match. No. 1 has a pair of highly colored eyes as the result.

At a meeting of the St. Vincent de Paul society the following officers were elected: Spiritual instructor, Rev. J. F. Lee; president, Peter Barry; vice president, William Brennan; treasurer, John R. Cuddihy; visiting committee, Peter Barry, William Brennan, James Ferguson, William Corish, Thomas Corish, Edward Moore.

The cut which Joseph Dupleas inflicted upon himself Jan. 8th, and in which Dr. Rand took 16 stitches, is doing finely. Mr. Dupleas cut his great toe about half off, the gash extending into the side of his foot to the instep so that the toe hung dangling. He is able to walk on the foot now, and will return to work Monday, losing only two weeks by the accident.

What might have been a disastrous fire a few days ago was found and extinguished in time, so that little damage was done. The bookkeeper in Rogers's grocery store heard something cracking near him as he was busy at his desk, and looking round saw flames rising from a tin box in which the matches used about the store were kept. Mice were no doubt the cause of the ignition.

The following pupils of No. 1 grammar have been neither absent nor tardy for the first month of school: Albert Stewart, Jesse Maguire, Eddie Dalton, Frankie Maguire, Bertie Mumford, John Cahill, Ray Aldrich, Harry Leahy, Willie Birmingham, Carrie Flynt, Lena Crocker, Olive Morgan, Freola Osborne, Susie White, Jennie Beckwith, Mary Moore, Louisa Place, Hattie Stacy, Florence Moore.

On Tuesday evening Past Master Alvin A. Gage installed the following officers of Day Spring Lodge of Masons: W. M., R. F. Bradway; S. W., C. W. Darling; J. W., A. N. Shaw; treasurer, Dr. G. E. Fuller; secretary, N. A. Bugbee; chaplain, N. H. White; marshal, W. A. Charles; S. D., C. M. Gage; J. D., W. E. Shaw; S. S., A. N. Johnson; J. S., I. L. Jefts; tyler, J. M. Wright. Refreshments consisting of cake, ice cream, coffee and fruit were served after the ceremonies. About 100 persons were present, and a very pleasant evening is reported.

Sunday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, as Charles Hathaway with his brother rounded the Washington street corner, he noticed Jas Clark with Arthur D. Ellis's colt coming behind him, and thought that it would be an excellent opportunity to test the respective racing qualities of the two horses. He accordingly started up his horse, but as he did so the bit broke, and the animal sprang, throwing Mr. Hathaway out and bruising him badly. He was carried into the Monson House and Dr. N. W. Rand summoned. He was able to be taken home in an hour. The horse ran down Main street and up Cushman street as far as Calvin Pease's, where he jumped the fence, leaving the totally wrecked buggy behind, and sped to the woods, where he was caught. Mr. Hathaway was confined to his bed for a day or two but is now able to be out.

Miss May Warner played the organ at the East Congregational church last Sunday, and it is expected that she will occupy the position of organist for the present.

The Hibernians had a debate on the Wilson bill Monday night, with W. J. Reilley for John W. Clark against it. The affirmative side won by a unanimous vote.

There was a supper at the Unitarian vestry Thursday evening. The self culture club will discuss "The Sanctity of Property" at its meeting next Tuesday evening.

The fire department was called out about half-past one Monday afternoon to a fire in a bed in one of Dumas's tenements on Aspen street. There was but little damage except by water.

Next Sunday Rev. Newton Black of Chicopee will preach at the morning and evening service in the Episcopal church. Rev. C. W. Duffield, a former pastor, will preach the first Sunday in February.

The valuation and tax list of town of Ware is expected to be in the hands of the printer in a few days, and will make a pamphlet of about 100 pages. The last issue was for the year 1888.

There has just been completed at the office of C. W. Eddy a fine set of record books for the Cercle Canadien St. Jean Baptiste Society, with special ruling, planned and arranged by Henry A. Mongrain.

F. Lussier, who broke his leg last week, has notified the selectmen by his attorney, H. M. Coney, that he will claim damages from the town, as the accident, it is claimed, was caused by a defective walk.

Henry C. Davis and wife and B. F. Davis attended the funeral of their uncle, Rev. William P. Davis, at Schenectady, N. Y., last week. Mr. Davis was 87 years old. One of the services of the funeral was held in the church where he preached his first sermon 63 years ago.

Moody's evening school commences a new term at the OtisCompany's hall next Monday evening. Some specimens written by the pupils of the last term, at the commencement of their taking lessons and at the close, showing great improvement, are on exhibition in the post office window.

It is with regret that we announce the voluntary assignment of H. A. Smith for the benefit of his creditors, the assignee being Nelson Tucker of Boston. Mr. Smith has been with us about seven years, and we have yet to hear a lisp of any suggestion but what he has done all in his power to stem the tide of depression in business.

The first lecture in the course on Wednesday evening was a grand success. There was a large attendance, notably of young men. President Gates, the lecturer, was at his best, and every one went away greatly pleased at so rich a treat. The subject, "A Young Man's Fortune," was handled in a way that should benefit every hearer.

A would-be boy burglar by the name of Cote, aged 15, was caught in the act Tuesday evening, having entered the store of M. L. Lane through a back window. The clerks having discovered a window bar out of place during the day were in waiting, and he was easily captured. There were two others interested outside, and one called Busky was captured. Both were taken to Northampton.

The interest in the evangelistic services conducted by Rev. J. H. Weber has been on the increase since last week. Large audiences attended the services in the town hall Sunday afternoon and evening, and this week except Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, when the hall was engaged for other purposes. The programme for next week will be: Sunday, Jan. 21, at 10.30 in the Methodist church, subject, "The greatest chapter in the Bible;" Sunday afternoon at 3, address to men only, subject, "Bucking the Tiger, or Seeing the Elephant," Sunday evening at 7 at the town hall, "Eternity, and where shall you spend it?" Monday, 7.30 p. m., "My Conversion from Romanism," (dark side); Tuesday evening, 7.30, "My Conversion from Romanism," (bright side); Wednesday evening, 7.30, "Hell;" Thursday evening, 7.30, "Sneaks"; Friday, 7.30, "Shams."

The special town meeting Tuesday evening called out a large attendance. It was voted to authorize the selectmen to pay outstanding bills of the road department as they saw best; voted to authorize the school committee to purchase furniture for the high school building out of the contingent funds on hand. There was nearly two hours of discussion of the road commissioners' doings, and that after paying $307 for road roller and $500 for horses Mr. Morse had drawn on the pay roll $260 and Mr. Barnes $180; that the Maple street improvements cost about $746. There was a balance of $500 reported to the credit of the highway department. There is a balance of $337 to sidewalks; the West Main street bridge and walk cost $231.20. The Gibbs crossing bridge, which has been up so long, causing much criticism and great inconvenience to the traveling public, had its share of attention, the delay being reported caused by various circumstances. It is expected now to be put in place in the near future.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

An Awakening.

What is it that is awakening people all over the land and causing such a thrill of excitement and gratitude everywhere among the sick and suffering? It is the new departure by that greatest and most successful specialist in the cure of all nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who offers to the sick everywhere the opportunity of consulting him by letter, free of charge. Think of it, sufferers, you who have sought in vain for relief, or for a satisfactory explanation of your disease! By writing him about your complaint, this great physician will send you, free of charge, an exact explanation of your disease and what to do to be cured.

He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and makes you understand just what your complaint is. He is the discoverer of that great nerve cure, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and uses nothing in his practice but harmless vegetable medicines. The success which he is having in curing disease through letter correspondence is marvelous. Write him, then, all about your complaint and you will without doubt be cured.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

HENRY'S PRICES ARE REASONABLE.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., January, 1894.

We did wonders in jackets about this time last year. We are doing a different sort of wonders now. Then we sold odds and ends from our own stocks from half price up. Now we sold our pick of several manufacturer's stocks from half-price down.

The lowest price in this sale is $1, the next $2, next $4.50 and so on. Every jacket is worth at least twice its price, while many are worth several times what they'll bring.

Pynchon street building.

It is time to be looking about and educating yourself in carpets. There is no need of waiting. There is no occasion for haste. We don't concern ourselves about your buying yet. We ask you in to look.

Second floor of new building.

A New York house the other day would have been glad to buy every piece of whipcord serge we had at 50 cents a yard. There are no such goods under 75 cents anywhere in the trade, we believe.

Navy blue diagonal, 45 inch at 50 cents is another just such bargain. Bengaline, 38 inch, 37½ cents, is another.

The above three fabrics are all wool. The proper price of each is 75 cents. Samples sent,

Satin damask of four patterns that we have sold nearly 5000 yards of, 75 cents a yard. Napkins to match $2 a dozen. No wonder they go.

Fourth circle.

There's a way to gobble the trade in men's shirts. There's a way to gobble it with a jerk—to sell for nothing. Frankly, that's what we propose doing.

Here are the prices:

Unlaundered shirts 27, 37, 47, 67 and 87 cents; night shirts 47, 67 and 87 cents.

But there's a limit to this sort of advertising, and you had better be quick to respond.

Are You a Sufferer from Rheumatism or Neuralgia?

E. P. Tayer and Solomon Davis Speak to Victims of These Terrible Diseases.

E. P. Tayer, of East Nassau, New York, says: "I wish it possible to speak personally with every rheumatic victim, for I would tell them of my personal experience and the relief and cure I found in a simple remedy.

"When I first saw in the newspapers, 'Rheumatism can be cured,' I was loath to believe it, but when I found that the statement was made by Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., I inquired into it, and upon his advice I began to use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. My condition at that time seemed hopeless. I had suffered for fifteen[years with inflammatory rheumatism. My physician said I would be a cripple for life, but it was not ordained that way, for I had not used Favorite Remedy long before I was convinced that it was the right medicine, and in a short while I was cured. That was three years ago, and I have not felt a trace of the disease since."

Solomon Davis, of North Kortwright, N. Y., suffered awfully from neuralgia, and loss of sleep, as is frequently the case with elderly people; in speaking to the writer, he said: "I found that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy relieved the bowels, improved the circulation of the blood, and the old pain left me altogether."

As one of the Palmer physicians recently said, "There is no reason in suffering with rheumatism or neuralgia, for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will cure them." All druggists sell it. 42

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

A stranger,
Without a scent
And no capital
Except my blooming shape,
But I stood straight up
And held my head high,
And do yet.
And to-day myself
And my descendants
Are in the floral 400.
And the more
Frills
We develop
The more we're admired.

THE KISS THAT COST.

[A fair plaintiff, who brought a breach of promise action worth under ordinary circumstances at least £1000, had to be content with £100 because she had in the meantime been kissed by a new suitor.]

The gorse is out in kissing time,
And that is alway—so the saw.
But know from henceforth (and this rhyme)
This does not follow in the Law.
For she, who, jilted by her swain,
Brings him to court, and braves the laughter,
Must—if she longs for gold—refrain
From kissing Number Two—till after.

MEMORIES OF THE WAR.

The Horrors of Libby Prison Revived.

An Event Which Will Surprise Even old Soldiers.

The Most Wonderful Experience of the Army Ever Recorded.

We never tire of hearing of the thrilling adventures of the war and the wonderful escapes from Libby Prison. The recent removal of this famous jail to Chicago renders any facts about it at this time particularly interesting.

A most fascinating story has just come to us of a man who passed five months of agony in this prison. The experiences of this person during and since the war are the most remarkable that have ever been brought to public notice. This man is none other than the well-known Mr. L. W. Porter, of West Berlin, Vt. He writes the following interesting letter:

"Since my return from the war my health has been growing poorer from exposure and hard service and the horrors of a five months' imprisonment in Libby prison. I came home a complete wreck and was sick for a whole year, during which time I did no work at all, being confined to my bed for about half the time.

"After I got up I was so weak that I could not walk but a short distance, and then was obliged to stop and rest. About two years ago I found myself in a very bad condition with nervous prostration, the result of my long time poor health.

"I took most every kind of medicine

that I could hear of, with no good results until I commenced on Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which relieved me of nervousness and gave me strength so that I was able to walk and work. I consider Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy the best medicine there is for nervousness and to give strength to any weak person."

"Then personally appeared before me L. W. Porter, of West Berlin, Vt., to me personally known, and subscribed and swore to the truth of the foregoing statement."

CARLOS L. SMITH, Notary Public.

Well may Mr. Porter be called a hero, well may every inhabitant of the civilized world read of his experience and well may all mankind rejoice at its termination. The horrible sufferings which he experienced from disease were even worse than those of the war and prison. But he is a well man at last and cannot say enough in praise of this remarkable remedy. His restoration to health after so many years of suffering is indeed most wonderful.

If you are suffering from any form of nervous or chronic disease, indigestion, weakness, kidney or liver complaint, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will cure you.

Dr. Greene, the noted specialist in the cure of all nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted at his office, 34 Temple Place, Boston Mass., free personally or by letter.

THE MOONSHINER'S WIFE.

At midnight there came a sudden knocking at the door of the mountaineer's cabin.

"Who's thar?"

"Open the door, Bush! I have five men with me, and it's no use for you to resist. If we have to fire into the windows, some of your family will be killed."

"I'll come out. What ails yo' all, any way?"

"It's for moonshining, Bush."

"Huh! I'm not skeart of that. Yo' all would a-showed more sense to come by daylight. Reub Bush hain't been a hiding from nobody."

A deputy United States marshal and posse on one side, and the owner of a twenty-acre farm on the other. There's a still hidden away in some gorge of the mountain, but the marshal's men have spent days and days in a vain search. Some one has given information that Reub Bush is a moonshiner, however, and he is to be carried off to jail in hope that a case may be worked up against him. In ten minutes the mountaineer is ready to go with the posse. He betrays neither indignation nor surprise. His wife has few questions to ask, and no tears to shed. His three children have been aroused, but they rub their eyes and stare at the officers, and utter no word. "Who all did it, Reub?" the wife whispers.

"Dan Meachem, I reckon," he replies. "Him went to town to-day on his mewl. Him's jest that onery."

They handcuff him and hurry him away. The children drop back on their pillows and and fall asleep again and the woman blows out the candle and seeks her bed. Dan Meachem is a constable at the cross roads hamlet three miles away. The woman could recall two or three other cases in which he was believed to be guilty of giving information, and as her heart hardened she said aloud:

"If they all let Reub go it will be all right, but if they put him in prison Dan Meachem shall die."

There was no more thinking or wondering or planning. She had said she would do thus and so. Her resolution was unchangeable. She hoped her husband would return that day, but did not. Days passed and at the end of a week a neighbor told her that the government had a case against Reub and would hold him for trial. She did not fling herself down and weep. Her eyes were not even moist as she turned to her children and said:

"Children, y'or pop's gwine ter be shet up in jail fur a right smart while, and it's no use to look for him."

"What's jail?" asked one.

"Place fur pore folks who try to make a livin'. Scatter off to bed now, 'cause yo'r mam wants to think."

She sat in front of the log fire with her elbow on her knee and her chin on her hands until they were fast asleep. Then she rose up and reached down the long-barreled rifle from its resting place on the deer horns. It was loaded. She drew the charge, wiped the barrel clean and reloaded. Her face had worn an expression of sadness as she sat looking into the fire. She had no sooner taken down the rifle than a dangerous gleam came to her eyes, and she shut her teeth so hard that her breathing was labored.

"They all ar' gwine to hang to Reub," she said as she replaced the gun, "and to-morrer I'll ambush Dan Meachem."

That settled it. She was abed and asleep twenty minutes later. In the morning she would shoot the man who betrayed her husband to the officers. Why not? An eye for an eye had always been her maxim. Of course, she would shoot him. He no doubt expected her to do so. She never slept more soundly than on this night. After breakfast next morning she said to the children:

"Mam's gwine to the cross roads. Yo' all kin keep the cabin while I'm gone."

Dan Meachem was hoeing corn in a field half a mile from his house. At 10 o'clock, as he reached the west end of a row and leaned on his hoe to rest, a tongue of flame darted out of the bushes, a rifle cracked, and the man fell back dead, shot through the heart.

"I said I would, and I hev," whispered Reub Bush's wife as she stood up and looked over the hazel bushes at the man lying on his back three rods away. "Dan was onery. Him give Reub up. Him deserved it."

At noon she was home with her children. They were not observing children, or they would have noticed her pale face and compressed lips. She had work to do, but she laid it aside and sat down on the doorstep with her pipe. She had shot a man. She was waiting for men to come and arrest her for the crime. She had been seen on the highway with the rifle, and no one doubt she would at once be suspected. Very well; let them come.

An hour before sunset an officer drove up.

"Howdy, Mrs. Bush?"

"Howdy, Tom?"

"Got to go up with me fur shootin' Dan Meachem."

"Yass."

She put on her sunbonnet, refilled and lighted her pipe, and was ready. The children betrayed no curiousity—asked no questions. As she followed the officer she said:

"Yo' all shet up the cabin and go over to Uncle Jim's. They all is gwine to hang yo'r mam fur shootin' Dan Meachem."

She climbed over the wheel to a seat on the wagon and was driven away, never once glancing backward; not a word to the man who was driving her to her death.

A CONTRARY PEOPLE.

The philosopher who said that "our present civilization is an exact inversion of progress" should have lived in China, where they do everything exactly the opposite of our customs, and incidentally claim to be the only civilized nation. According to this philosopher they certainly are, for here are a few of the things that they do.

Note first that the Chinese compass points to the south instead of north.

The men wear skirts and the women trousers.

The men wear their hair long and the women wear it short.

The men carry on dressmaking and the woman carry burdens.

The spoken language of China is not written, and the written language is not spoken.

Books are read backward, and what we call foot-notes are inserted on the top of the page.

The Chinese surname comes first instead of last.

The Chinese shake their own hands instead of the hands of those they would greet.

The Chinese dress in white at funerals and in mourning at weddings, while old women serve as bridemaids.

The Chinese launch their vessels sideways and mount their horses from the off side.

The Chinese begin dinner with dessert and end with soup and fish.

These and other customs exactly fill the pessimistic bill of getting at perfection through exactly reversing the present order of civilization, allowing that our present civilization is "an exact inversion of progress."

Still, on the whole, would it be a good plan for the whole establishment of civilization to move into China and start all over again?—Boston Home Journal.

KANSAS WINS.—"I have had a most delightful evening," he said, as he took his hat and rose to go. "May I call again?"

"I shall be glad to see you," she replied, with a blush.

As he walked out into the hall he saw in the mirror of the hat rack a reflection of the roguish girl slyly throwing a kiss at him, and he turned back.

"I must have that in the original package," he whispered.

He was a Kansas young man, and he got it.

ALLEE SAMEE LIKEE MA.

"The other day," said a Congressman, "my wife was passing by one of the legations of the Orient. It was a bright, warm day, almost like summer, in truth. Out in the front yard was one of the ladies of the house, resplendent in complicated silks, and, with her blue-black hair thrust full of gold pins and ornaments in the guise of minature fans. But what caught the feminine eye of my wife was the baby this daughter of the sun bore in her arms. It had black eyes and black hair and looked like a little splinter of Asia. Of course my wife paused. No woman on earth could have done less. A new baby is always a subject of breathless interest to all women. But add to it the fact that it is of another and a far-off race and the natural feminine transports rise almost to frenzy. So, of course, my wife came to a dead halt. She smiled at the lady of the tea fields, and was smiled at softly in return. Then she looked at the infant. The gratified guardian, possibly its mother, approached so as to treat my wife to a fuller opportunity.

"How old is it?" interrogated my wife, who has ever had a consuming thirst for data of that sort.

"Eight mont," replied the tea lady with an accent.

"Is it a boy or girl?" continued my wife, pursuing her regular system.

"Allee samee likee ma," replied the other in a pleased, bashful way. The census being now complete my wife tendered her congratulations and left the Princess of fans and the little Prince to continue their afternoon.—Washington Post.

HOW THEY GOT DOWN.

"That was a pretty big storm we had here the other day," said the old salt, as he filled his pipe out of his listener's bag of tobacco, "but, lawky, it wasn't a patch on the one I was in down off the mouth of the Amazon in 1855. I was first mate on the brig Betsey Black and we were ridin' at anchor just outside the mouth of the river when there came up the greatest blow you ever see. It lasted two days an' then the brig went to pieces, and we had to take to the small boats. Well, sir, the water in that river riz so rapidly that it seemed as if we was goin' up in a balloon when we got out in our boats. We went up an' up, an' finally, as the wind was blowin' inshore, we went scootin' inland at a mile a minnit.

"The water was that high that there was no tellin' where we was. We slid along for half a day, an' then the water began to go down just as fast's it riz. First thing we were stuck in the top of a palm tree 240 feet from ground an' no branches to climb down on."

"How did you get down?" asked the listener, breathlessly.

"Why, our boat was one of these here canvas ones, an' we simply turned it over, made a parachute of it, an' came kown nice as you please."—Buffalo Express.

"There's one thing," said the new boarder, emphatically, "that will have to be settled before I make up my mind to remain with you." "And what is that?" inquired the landlady, anxiously. The new boarder paid a high price and paid it promptly. "The coffee," was his response.—Buffalo Courier.

Pat has offered his school-fellow a bite from his apple, and is astonished at the large portion measured off by Mike's teeth. "Here, I say, hold on there, hold on!" (Then, correcting himself) "When I say 'hold on,' I mean let go!"—Newport Daily News.

It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatuiency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Beyond the Mist.

Your face it was so thin and clear,
The night you said good-by,
It touched me with an awful fear,
As if a ghost were nigh.
But then you smiled and softly said:
"'Tis pleasant where I go,"
And out beyond the mist you fled;
Whither I do not know.

Oh, hidden are the ways of love!
Come back, sweet love, to me!
The floor of God, his roof above,
Can these a barrier be?
Or will love find between the stars
A path to where I wait?
Can no bold spirit leap the bars
And foil the guards of Fate?

Ah, maiden, whither fare you now
Beyond the mist of blue?
And are you happy? Tell me how
The strangers greeted you,
When through their gates you wondering went
And walked in stately guise.
As some tall, child-like angel sent Abroad in Paradise.

And did you pass by Avalon
To catch the fruit-perfume,
And fragrance blown 'twixt sea and sun
From apple groves a-bloom?
Oh, whisper back one word to tell
In what far lands you go,
On grassy glade or flowery fell,
Or where the lilies blow.

I must believe your feet are set
Beyond remotest space!
But have you reached or sighted yet
The city of God's grace?
Oh, is it cold, or is it warm,
Or clear or cloudy weather!
Dear soul, we felt not any storm
The while we walked together.

I hold my heart with both my hands,
And close my soul to doubt,
What time you stray in hidden lands;—
I vaguely reckon out
The sum of life, till I may find
The secret of your flight,
And come to you, as down the wind
Far music comes by night.

—Maurice Thompson, in the Independent.

IN A SCOTCH LOCH.

"Not shooting to-day, then, Gifford?" said a fair young man, leaning against the taffrail of a yacht, as he glanced critically at the dark blue yachting suit of his companion.

"Not to-day, old fellow," said the other, a tall, dark-bearded man, leisurely proceeding to roll a cigarette between his fingers. "Not to-day, I'm going to try those crags over there—a good scramble with my sketch-book, you know;" and he pointed across the loch where the mists curled about the jagged peaks of Blath Bhein.

"Oh! But it's a shame to waste a ripping day like this morning about with an old sketch-book!"

"Waste the day!" repeated Gifford; "a matter of opinion, Frank; a matter of opinion."

"Well, you seem a bit out of sorts this morning; what's up?"

Gifford did not answer, but smoked on thoughtfully for a few minutes, and Riley "took sights" at the gulls with a boat-hook which he had picked up from a seat near. Presently the latter remarked:—

"Lady Helen Desbrooke said last night she wanted to try to fish to-day. I suppose they'll go and trawl a bait. I heard old Macdonald say there was a lot of fish just round those rocks out there," and he pointed toward the mouth of the loch. "I've no doubt Wharton wouldn't mind going, too," he added; "but he's booked for the moors. He rather likes Lady Helen, I believe." And he laughed carelessly.

"Indeed?" replied Rex, and a curious expression came into his gray eyes as he threw his cigarette overboard. "Wharton be damned."

"Breakfast is ready, sir," announced a steward, coming up at this moment, "and Sir Charles and the ladies are in."

"There will be only Wharton, Dudley, and myself, then," said Riley, as they turned to go below. "Something was said about the ladies bringing lunch around to us. You'd far better change your mind, old chap, and come along, too."

But Gifford did not change his mind. "May I borrow the dingy, Sir Charles?" he asked his host after breakfast. "I should like to get a sketch or two here for my picture, the foreground is so good, and the effects are very fine to-day."

"Certainly, Gifford, certainly. So you don't mean to shoot? By-the-by, do you want a man?"

"No, thanks; I'll paddle myself, and keep the boat if you don't want her to-day."

"Alone at last!" cried Gifford, as his boat's keel ran up on the seaweed-strewn grass. "Why on earth did I come on this trip? My good resolutions are fated to be bowled over. Well, the matter must be thrashed out somehow, and now seems the best time." So saying he proceeded to make the dingy secure by fastening the long rope to a rock high on the shore, and with a resolute look on his handsome face started along the road leading to the head of the loch. Three o'clock found him lying on his back, with a pipe in his mouth. Beside him lay his sketch-book, with the color wet on its open page. The lonely nature of the scene accorded well with his mood. His brain was in a whirl, his heart on fire; he needed the stillness of the hills about him for his mind to work freely. His thoughts wandered back to the previous summer, when an old college chum, who was up in town for a fortnight in May, introduced him to Lady Helen Desbrooke.

"I have lived in a dream since that evening," Gifford told her some weeks afterward, "one long, strange dream; or rather it would be truer to say that that I only dreamed before I met you." Yes, he well remembered saying that, and how beautiful she had looked as he bent over her chair. Ah! could he but sleep once more!

Lady Helen had been attracted in spite of herself by the clever artist with the strange gray eyes. She had never met any one just like him before. His restless energy disturbed, while at the same time the power of his personality subdued and dominated her even more than she was herself aware. The world perhaps hardly guessed his devotion, for he did not forsake his old haunts, or, metaphorically speaking, lay his mantle on the pavement of Piccadilly for her to walk over and for society to laugh at. She did not love him, she assured herself; no, but her soul was free no longer. This man had come and troubled the deep waters of her being, and the consciousness of this was gall to her proud spirit.

She refused him almost point blank, but with a look in her beautiful eyes at which he wondered without understanding for many a long day. When he pleaded as he had never pleaded before, her face had grown white to the lips, but she remained firm. "I cannot—it is no good," she whispered. "I must not think of it." In the end she promised that if she should change her mind within two years' time she would let him know of it in some way; but she shook her head as she turned away.

He, on the contrary, was hopeful. It was something that he could see her again; that he was not banished forever from her presence. Meanwhile the world speculated a little—for Lady Helen's preoccupation had not passed quite unnoticed—but it knew nothing; and for want of food for gossip in that direction ceased to talk. And the months went by and took with them Rex Gifford's hopes.

They met at one or two country houses, but this fact lay unaltered and unalterable—she was Lady Helen Desbrooke, a peer's daughter, and he only Rex Gifford, a poor artist.

The conviction was slowly forcing itself upon his brain that Lady Helen was not for him; their social spheres were not the same. He began to realize that the verdict of society would undoubtedly be against him if he married, and though personally he cared little for the praise or blame of the small clique which with supreme egotism calls itself by such an imposing title, yet he understood that it must necessarily mean more to her than it could to him. But all the time he could not forget the look that was in her eyes when he had gone from her presence the summer before.

So matters stood when, meeting his old friend, Sir Charles Mackenzie, one day in Inverness, he had accepted an often repeated invitation to come for a ten-days' yachting cruise. "And why on earth he didn't tell me who his party were, and why was I such a fool as not to ask, Heaven only knows!" he muttered as he savagely pulled the end of his moustache between his teeth. I shouldn't have come if I had known she was on board—no, by Jove, I would not! Any fool can see she didn't want me. Any fool can tell that. Her face shows it in every line; her eye—her eyes——Wait a bit. Do her eyes say it?" He began to breathe harder. "No, as I am a living man, her eyes do not repel me! There is something in their depths I can't read. I don't understand it—but it isn't aversion. Stop—could it be—"

He sprang half up. About him was the stillness of the mountains the "sleep that is among the lonely hills," like the silence of a beautiful dream, and through it, as some deep thought, sounded the murmur of the burns in the hills. He pushed his cap back from his brows. "Can it be that she loves me? Ah! God, what could life not be worth if it were so?" And he lay back in the heather, and fell again to thinking.

For Rex Gifford had made up his mind to a mighty sacrifice, even to relinquish the hope of winning Lady Helen for his wife. Loving her with a passion and intensity of which his friends would have deemed his apparently cold, indifferent nature incapable, and which had even surprised himself, he could yet think of what might be best for her. Not once or twice, but often lately, had the question presented itself before him, Would a marriage with him be for this girl's ultimate happiness? He thrust the idea away at first, but it recurred again and again, till reluctantly he was forced to give it attention. But here was the difficulty. From society's point of view he was not her equal in position. "To be a gentleman is not enough," and he ground his teeth. "No!

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 26, 1894.

To-Morrow will see the opening of the great midwinter exposition at San Francisco.

The man who gave the order to fire the first gun at Fort Sumter, Col. John Branch, died at Union Springs, Ala., last Saturday.

"We shall live under the McKinley bill for another 10 years," says Robert R. Porter, of the New York Press, after a two-weeks' view of the situation in Washington.

The past week has witnessed the death of three persons well known in Massachusetts, ex-Gov. Gaston and Judge Thompson of the superior court last Friday, and Miss Helen A. Shafer, president of Wellesley College, on Saturday.

Evidently all that was needed to make cremation acceptable to Massachusetts people was someone to lead the way, as since the first incineration in Forest Hills on the 30th of last month something like a dozen others have followed.

An attempt was made yesterday morning to start up the hat shops at Danbury, Ct., which have been closed for nine weeks on account of labor troubles, as non-union shops. A few operatives returned to work, but not many, and the result seems to hang in the balance yet, though the manufacturers, who have been dictated to by the men for some time, say they will continue to run until they get a full force of help.

The Corbett-Mitchell fight took place in Jacksonville, Fla., yesterday, in spite of the efforts of Governor Mitchell to prevent it, an injunction having been granted restraining him from interfering, and Corbett won in three rounds, the contest lasting only nine minutes. Owing to the uncertainty of the outcome of the governor's attitude the financial part was a failure, and it will very likely be a long time before there is another fight in this country, the affairs having been driven from one state aft r another until Florida was the last resort in this case. It is to be hoped there will be no more.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

Boston, Jan. 24, 1894.

It has remained for Gov. Greenhalge to propose an answer to the much-asked question what the council is good for. He has a plan for setting them at work and finding out what they are good for. It is his purpose to give to the members of the council the oversight of the business and condition of the commissions and state institutions, so that, if a request comes to him from the Legislature as to any part of the state's administration, he will be in position to answer it. The plan does not appear to involve any curtailment of the present powers and privileges of the commissioners and heads of institutions, but only to increase the familiarity of the executive department with them and to enable the Legislature to learn what it seeks to know without delay.

Representative Bridges of Deerfield, a brother of Gen. B. F. Bridges, Jr., warden of the state prison, has put into the House a bill which raises the $1 liquor license fee of druggists to a minimum of $50 and a maximum of $500.

The report of the joint special committee on taxation, though voluminous, can be put in brief form as regards its conclusions. It has no favor, as a whole, for any of the recent movements for a change in the tax laws in the direction of further exemption. It disapproves the single tax theory of Henry George. It does not favor the exemption of municipal bonds, nor of foreign stocks, and it is so far in favor of taxing all the property which the assessors can find, both real and personal, that it recommends the repeal of the law of 1881 by which mortgages of real estate were exempted from taxation. A majority of the committee would tax incomes which are derived from property which is already taxed. All of them would exempt religious and charitable institutions as at present, except that Mr. Raymond of Westminster would tax the land on which the buildings of such institutions stand. On several points there are one or two dissenters, but the committee is more nearly unanimous than could have been expected. Now there will come a sharp fight. The report has been referred to the taxation committee, and lines are sharply drawn among interested parties among the outside public.

The annual report of the state board of education contains a high tribute of praise to Mr. John W. Dickinson, secretary of the board for 17 years until December 31, 1893, which is all the more remarkable because it must be what the board felt constrained to be Mr. Dickinson's due, although, for wholly unworthy reasons, they have forced him out of office. The report says:

"This year will be remarkable in the history of the board as the last in the long service of its eminent secretary. For 17 years Dr. Dickinson has devoted himself untiringly to maintaining the standards of education within the state, and his name is a familiar one beyond its borders. His salary has been small, his earnestness great. In the discharge of his duties nothing has been counted petty, laborious or distasteful. He has inspected schools, made himself acquainted with teachers, organized and addressed institutes, interviewed legislators. He has watched every channel of influence which might, in his judgment, increase the power of the normal schools. The board here records its sense of the value to the state of Dr. Dickinson's long period of service, and unites in praising his public spirit, his faithfulness to his ideals, and his persistent energy in carrying out his convictions."

The board is wholly at sea as to the choice of a successor to Mr. Dickinson. Two men are certainly working a regular campaign for the office, and are having letters written in their behalf to members of the board, but neither of the men, if he should chance to read these lines, is regarded as a big enough man for the place, and he and his friends might as well spare their postage. Superintendents Balliet of Springfield and Aldrich of Newton respectfully are urged for the place, but it's doubtful whether either of them could now get a majority of the board. Only two men have been mentioned who could be regarded as equalling Mr. Dickinson, and it is out of the question to get them. One is Prof. Wm. T. Harris, the national commissioner of education, and the other is President Andrews of Brown university. Some of the board have exerted themselves to find a suitable man, but in vain thus far. The salary of the office is now $3400 and travelling expenses. A bill has been introduced to make it $5000, not including expenses (which are about $400), so as to tempt some man able enough to fill Mr. Dickinson's place. Yet Mr. Dickinson could be had, if it were not for the personal feeling of two or three of the board.

The report of the free public library commission is most gratifying in its presentation of the growth of libraries. Nearly all the state is now supplied with them. The report says:

"The 44 towns that are still without free public libraries contain an aggregate population of 60,929, according to the census of 1890, or less than 2¾ per cent of the entire population. Thirty-six of them have a population of less than 2000, and 17 of them a population of less than 1000 each. One town each is in Hampshire, Nantucket and Worcester counties, two each in Dukes, Middlesex and Norfolk, three each in Barnstable, Essex and Franklin counties, five in Plymouth, six in Bristol, seven in Berkshire and eight in Hampden."

The great liberality of private persons to public libraries is shown by the fact that during the past year over $500,000 has been given by them to the purchase of books and the erection of library buildings.

The report of the savings bank commissioners shows that the aggregate of deposits is $399,995,590, a gain of $6,975,708 during the year. At the same time the amount withdrawn, doubtless during the hard times, exceeded the amount deposited by $8,675,601. The average rate of interest was 4.09 per cent, which is larger than in nine of the years since 1876.

LANDON.

PALMER NEWS.

Vital Statistics.

The number of births in the town of Palmer during 1893, as recorded at the town clerk's office, is 179, against 231 in 1892. Of this number 62 were males. There were four cases of twins, two of girls and two with one of each sex.

The hard times doubtless had some effect on the marriages, there being only 77, compared with 94 the year before. In two cases both bride and groom were only 18, but there were four brides of 17. The oldest groom was 56, and the oldest bride 50. It was the first marriage of both bride and groom in 70 cases, second of both in three, first of groom and second of bride in three, second of groom and third of bride in one. There were six marriages in January, four in February, five in March, eleven in April, seven in May, ten in June, ten in July, seven in August, eight in September, two in October, five in November, two in December. These clergymen officiated: Revs. Lynch, Marchand, and Donoghue, ten each; McKeany, six; Jenkins, five; Butler and Moulton, three each; Hart, two; Frost, Blanchard, Mullen, Hale and Weeks, one each; Judge Robinson, Justices Leach, Strong and Fitch, one each; out of town clergymen, nineteen.

The deaths numbered 162, an increase of 31 over 1892. Seventy-four were males. There were 12 deaths in January, 20 in February, 21 in March, 24 in April, 17 in May, 10 in June, 6 in July, 23 in August, 10 in September, 3 in October, 6 in November, 10 in December. There were two deaths under one year of age, and 24 between one year and five; between five and 10, 6; between 10 and 20, 4; between 20 and 30, 7; between 30 and 40, 8; between 40 and 50, 3; between 50 and 60, 8; between 60 and 70, 11; between 70 and 80, 14; between 80 and 90, 12. Two were over 89. Some of the principal causes were pneumonia, 14; old age, 8; bronchitis, 7; cancer and cholera infantum, 6 each; consumption and measles, 5 each; tubercolosis, 4.

The Magic City.

Part No. 1 of "The Magic City," the art portfolio which the Journal has arranged to give its readers, is ready for delivery, and can be had at the office of the paper or will be mailed to any address. In the latter case there will be a slight delay of four or five days, as these orders are filled direct from the publishing house in Philadelphia. A coupon for part one will be found toward the bottom of the last column on this page; cut it out and bring it to this office with ten cents in silver or two-cent stamps, and the part will be forwarded to you. Many have called during the week to see the sample copy, and all have been loud in their praises of the fineness of the work, the clearness of the views and the cleanness of the printing. This part contains 16 views: The Administration building, Lapland village, Chicago at the Fair, view east from Macmonnies Fountain, Manufactures and Fisheries buildings, Woman's building, Art Palace, Dahomey Cannibals, Government building, golden portal of Transportation building, Peristyle and statue of the Republic, Manufactures building from Court of Honor, bird's-eye view of the whole grounds, detailed view of Peristyle, and a fine picture of Samoan girls. Part two will be ready next week, and will contain at least sixteen more views, printed with fine toned ink on heavy plated paper. Try part one and see if it is not the best of the kind.

Next Sunday is Sexagesima Sunday.

Mrs. C. H. Atkins is visiting her daughter in Boston.

G. W. Lyman is painting his house on Pond street.

W. H. Williams is confined to his house with the grippe.

C. T. Brainerd has filled his ice house with clear 11-inch ice.

Mrs. E. B. Taylor is visiting her mother in East Hartford, Ct.

Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Wilkins are spending a few days in New York.

Miss May Fiske is spending a few days with friends in Rainbow, Ct.

Mrs. C. A. LeGro is visiting her sister, Mrs. F. W. Ellis, in Somerville.

Miss S. A. Jones of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson is visiting her brother, E. Goodes.

J. J. Helliwell is making numerous improvements in his house on Knox street.

A Junior Christian Endeavor society is being formed at the Congregational church.

Mrs. Joseph Pilkington of Waterbury, Ct., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Peck, on Pleasant street.

Mrs. William Merriam was called to Swanzey, N. H., last Friday by the death of a nephew.

The teachers from the Three Rivers schools visited the schools in this village Tuesday afternoon.

C. A. Brown, who has been confined to his house several weeks with rheumatism, is somewhat better.

Capt. Anderson of the regular army, stationed in Texas, with his wife is visiting Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Northrop.

The overseers of the poor have sent two French families aggregating twelve persons, state paupers, to Canada.

Miss Ida Colton of New London, Ct., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Fitch, and will remain about a month.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. McQuaid of Chatham, N. Y., formerly of Palmer, have been visiting friends in town this week.

Celig Whitney and wife of Springfield have been spending a part of the week with Mrs. William Merriam and Mrs. J. F. Holbrook.

The Woman's Relief Corps is arranging for a supper and entertainment, to be held in the rooms of the corps on the evening of February 22d.

Miss Mabel Sedgwick has been sick with the grippe since Tuesday, and her room in the grammar school building is being taught by Miss Julia Allen.

Preston Wellman fell on Fox avenue last Friday night while returning to his home and sprained an ankle, necessitating locomotion on crutches for a couple of weeks.

Joel Downey, one of the scholars at the grammar school, fell on the steps of the building Tuesday and injured his back so severely that he was unable to attend school for a few days.

Next Sunday is Young People's Sunday in the Univeralist churches throughout the state, and at St. Paul's Rev Mr. Moulton will take for his morning subject, "What Shall We Do With Sunday?"

A large audience attended the reading by Prof. Hibbard last Friday evening, and was well pleased with his selections. The senior class of the high school cleared a neat sum from the entertainment.

The primary department of the Congregational Sunday school is to give an entertainment and fair next Wednesday evening. Home-made candy will be for sale, also relics from the Souix Indians.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Social Union of St. Paul's church will be held in the parlors of the church next Wednesday evening. Supper will be served at 6, Mrs. C. E. Fish and Mrs. J. F. Holbrook entertaining.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Congregational church gave a reception to the new board of officers Wednesday evening, which was largely attended. Cake and cocoa were served, and a short entertainment presented.

The local post office has not yet received a supply of the new style of money orders, but has had several to pay. The new ones differ from the old in that the name of the payee appears on the face, instead of only on the letter of advice to the postmaster.

A change of time went into effect on the Ware River road Wednesday, affecting only the train previously reaching here at 10.50 a. m. from the north, it now arriving at 10.10, in time to connect with the accommodation for the west, which will be greatly appreciated by the patrons of the road.

C. F. Smith, inspector of cattle for this town, has examined 968 head of cattle, of which 790 were cows, 130 young cattle and 48 oxen, only one of which was quarantined. It was afterward examined by the local board of health and then by Prof. Stockbridge and ordered killed, being found to be badly affected by tuberculosis.

The Phila May concert company will give an entertainment in the Universalist church next Monday evening. The company consists of Miss Phila May, soprana, Mr. Louis Miller, tenor, Miss Helen Hubbard, reader, and Mr. Wilbur McColl, pianist. The company has an excellent reputation, has appeared several times in this vicinity, and should be greeted by a large audience next Monday evening.

The Ladies' Society connected with the Baptist church held its annual meeting in the church vestry Wednesday evening and elected these officers: President, Mrs. C. E. Fuller; vice presidents, Mrs. L. G. Parkhurst and Mrs. F. D. Thompson; secretary, Mrs. A. E. Fitch; treasurer, Mrs. L. W. Parkhurst. The customary supper was served at 6, and in the evening a number of boys from the state primary school gave an entertainment consisting of songs and recitations.

Thomas Lodge of Masons had a visitation Wednesday evening from Wolcott lodge of Stafford Hollow and Ionic lodge of Stafford Springs, there being 61 of the guests. The Master Mason degree was exemplified by both lodges, after which there was a supper and general good time. The visitors returned by special train. About 150 sat down to the supper, among them District Deputy Gage of Warren and three other members of the lodge there, also E. L. Derby of Orange, formerly of Palmer.

At the Congregational church next Sunday morning the pulpit will be occupied by Rev. F. S. Hatch of Monson, in exchange with Rev. Mr. Jenkins. In the evening the service will be in charge of the Men's Sunday Evening Club, and will be particularly for ladies, the address being by the pastor on "Three Women of Power." A double quartette of ladies will furnish the music. The quartette will be composed of Mrs. J. W. Lyman, Mrs. F. W. Harrison, Mrs. C. A. Brown, Mrs. William Oare, Mrs. H. E. Huntley, Miss Anna Shaw, Miss Grace Huntley and Mrs. J. C. Wing, and will render "Abide With Me," and "Peace I Leave With You," as special pieces.

The directors of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society met Tuesday and revised the premium list for the annual fair in September. With the exception of dropping the colt stake races, which have not proved attractive enough in the last two years to warrant the expense, there were few changes in the list. Five races will be presented, two for local horses, with such arrangements for the other classes as shall insure a large list of entries. A new departure is the offering of three premiums for the best displays by merchants in the hall. A full list of attractions, larger than ever before, will be engaged for the fair, L. E. Chandler, C. E. Fuller and O. P. Allen being a committee to arrange for the same. The renting of the park for the season was left with C. E. Fuller and L. E. Chandler.

The attendance at the citizen's temperance meeting in the Congregational church Monday evening was not very large. The speakers were Rev. S. T. Frost of Palmer on the best method of overcoming the license vote; Rev. G. S. Butler of Three Rivers on the reasons for voting no; Rev. E. B. Blanchard of Thorndike on the principle of the liquor question; Rev. F. J. Hale of Bondsville on the license question from a business standpoint; and Rev. F. E. Jenkins on the cost of the license system to the town. The following committee was appointed to coöperate with similar committees from the other villages in carrying on the campaign: J. A. Palmer, William Merriam, Hubbard Lawrence, J. C. Wing and A. S. Campbell. Mr. Palmer was not present at the meeting, and declines to serve.

The Firemen's Relief Association has completed arrangements for a first-class concert to be given at the opera house Tuesday evening, Feb. 13. The star attraction will be the "Old Homestead Male Quartette." These gentlemen have traveled with "Josh Whitcomb" for seven successive seasons, and the excellence of their singing is known to those who have seen the "Old Homestead" in the large cities. Owing to the retirement of Deman Thompson from the field for the season the quartette is available for concert purposes for this season only. The other attractions will be the Philharmonic Orchestra, nine pieces, a soprano soloist of high reputation, and an elocutionist will complete the array of talent. Moderate prices suited to hard times will prevail, and the net proceeds will be given to the poor.

District Deputy Mrs. Addie L. Whittaker and suite of Springfield came to Palmer Tuesday evening and installed these officers of Good Cheer Rebekah lodge: N. G., Mrs. Clara Converse; V. G., Mrs. Anna Moore; R. S., Mrs. S. A. Parkhurst; F. S., Mrs. Nellie Henry; treasurer, Mrs. Georgia Fuller; warden, Mrs. Hattie Walker; conductor, Mrs. Ella Washburn; I. G., Mrs. Sarah Bray; O. G., R. J. Henry; R. S. N. G., G. H. Bray; L. S. N. G., Mrs. Alice Smith; R. S. V. G., Mrs. Sarah Smith; L. S. V. G., Mrs. Josie Ham; chaplain, Mrs. Emily Holdsworth; organist, Mrs. Georgia Fuller. After the installation a supper was served in the banquet room below. The Odd Fellows have furnished and carpeted the reception room on the same floor, which with the kitchen adjoining makes pleasant and convenient quarters for the lodges.

District Court.

These civil entries were made last Saturday: Nancy M. Ormsby of Monson against Austin W. Corbin of Monson, E. A. Day of Hampden for plaintiff, Allen Webster of Springfield for defendant; C. D. Holbrook of Palmer against C. E. Dewey of Palmer, C. L. Gardner for plaintiff, defendent per se; Grace M. Pratt of Belchertown against John Gates of Ludlow, S. S. Taft for plaintiff, F. J. Demond of Springfield for defendant.

In the criminal court last Saturday Daniel O'Connor of Bondsville, for drunkenness was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for a year. O'Connor was on probation for the same offence, but filled up on hard cider, which he said he got of the farmers in his neighborhood, informing the court that "any of them up there 'll give you all you want."

On Tuesday Thomas F. Quigley of Thorndike was sent to Concord for the larceny of a watch from a Polander with a name which was enough to make any watch go off. Quigley was in court June 20 for stealing three rings, and the case had been continued from time to time to enable him to earn the amount of the fine.

State Primary School Notes.

J. J. Prentiss has been very ill with the grippe, but is slowly recovering.

Miss Pearson of Boston has accepted a position as assistant in the girls' sewing room.

Superintendent Wheeler and family went to Rutland Wednesday to be present at the marriage of his son Herbert.

Miss Travers and Miss Walker, teachers in the primary school at West Warren, paid a visit to this institution last Saturday.

New badges have been adopted for the boys whose names are on the roll of honor. A badge is about four inches long, has "S. P. S." at the top and "Honor" in large gilt letters placed obliquely near the center. A neatly embossed pin of burnished metal fastens it to the coat.

The first of the winter entertainments was given Monday evening in the chapel. The schools united in preparing an interesting programme, which was well rendered. Probably the number which elicited the greatest applause was the dialogue, "Wedding Befo' de Wah," in which William Cuvilley and Miss Harriet Cheeseman were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. Charles Thompson. In saluting the bride the groom's silk hat fell "unheeded to the floor," but it did not disturb the dignity of the officiating clergyman, who continued to close the solemn (?) service with these words: "We shall hope, and trusting through God and His 'postles dat you may live right, and dat you may die right, now and forever more. Let us sing a hymn—'Plunged in a Gulf of Dark Despair'."

BONDSVILLE.

F. H. Carroll is quite sick with the grippe.

C. E. Getchell has been on the sick list the last week with the grippe.

Brown Brothers have opened the store formerly occupied by Jerry Shea.

Mrs. Ballard of Ware was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Shaw over Sunday.

Mrs. Webber of Kansas has been visiting her brother, E. E. Ryther, the last week.

Miss Ellen Fitzgerald of Springfield was the guest of her parents a few days last week.

Willie and Henry Roberts of Holyoke spent Sunday here with their sister, Mrs. George Moores.

Miss Edith Holson has been teaching in Miss O'Brien's school this week, the latter taking care of a sick sister.

Mrs. Edgar Dunlap of Bridgeport, who has been staying with her sister, Mrs. Mark Culver, returned home Monday.

R. L. Bond is cutting ice on the lilly pond for his ice house. Alix Adams is cutting ice on the Company's reservoir for the hotel.

Daniel O'Connor was taken to Palmer by Officer Collins Saturday for drunkenness and making things lively. He got a year in Bridgewater.

Rev. F. J. Hale is arranging for a series of extra meetings, with help from Evangelist Greenwood, an interesting and successful laborer with B. F. Mills.

R. L. Bond went into his lumber yard Sunday and found that five small boys had built a fire there. It would have made quite a blaze if he had not found them.

Michael, son of Constable M. Collins, came very near being drowned Sunday night. He fell into the canal, but managed to keep his arms up until a Polander happened to see him and pulled him out.

Two young men went fox hunting a few days ago. They started the fox and one went to head it off, but as he was crawling through a fence the other saw one of his legs and thinking it was the fox fired a charge of shot at him before he saw his mistake.

The house and barn on the Abraham Murdock place, owned and occupied by Thomas Carmody, was burned Tuesday afternoon about half-past one. A defective chimney was the cause. About everything in the house was saved, but about a ton of hay was burned. Insured for about $1200.

The W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. C. E. Getchell last week and elected these officers for the coming year: President, Mrs. F. J. Haile; vice presidents, Mrs. Richard Russell, Mrs. E. E. Ryther, Mrs. O. A. Parent, Mrs. George Aldrich, Mrs. C. Shumway; secretary, Mrs. C. E. Getchell; adjourned to meet with Mrs. C. L. Holden next Thursday.

THORNDIKE.

Good skating has been enjoyed during the week on the No. 2 mill pond.

James F. Loftus has purchased the Billings property on Commercial street.

The Misses Lawlor entertained a party of friends at their home on Tuesday evening.

Arthur T. Bradshaw of Willimantic, Ct., has been visiting relatives in town during the week.

Miss Nellie Riley returned on Saturday after spending a vacation with friends in Worcester.

The teachers from the schools at Three Rivers paid a visit to the schools here Monday forenoon.

C. H. Clark has been engaged to sing in the Congregational church at Palmer during the coming year.

Thomas Quigley was arrested on Tuesday by Sheriff Studley, charged with stealing a watch from a Polander in this place.

Eugene DeCoto, who was recovering from his illness, suffered a relapse during the week and is confined to his house again.

E. G. Murdock, the groceryman, who has been ill for some time, is so far recovered as to be able to attend to his business again.

The will of Margaret A. Moriarty, formerly of Monson, has been filed for probate; she leaves all her property to Mrs. John W. Fay of this place.

An important change went into effect on the Ware River road Wednesday, the train formerly due here at 10.41 a. m. for Palmer being changed to 10, causing the mail to close at 9.40 instead of 10.20.

John Gebo, during the shut down of the mills last summer, found an old cent dated 1802, and it is said he has been offered $1200 for the same by a New York banking house, and is now corresponding with the parties.

Tickets are selling well for the entertainment to be given next Friday evening, and indications point to a crowded house. A social dance will follow, with music by the Columbian Band orchestra, and Mr. Flannigan of Brigham's orchestra will prompt.

Death of an Old Resident.

Mrs. J. D Sawyer, one of the oldest residents of this place, died at her home on Monday after a brief illness. Mrs. Sawyer came to this place nearly 50 years ago, and has lived in the home in which she died since that time. Her husband died about a year ago.

THREE RIVERS.

Miss Clara Green spent Sunday at the home of her parents in Brimfield.

Miss Beulah Thayer of Thorndike visited Miss Cora Clark the first of the week.

Station Agent F. E. Hillman spent Sunday in Belchertown at the home of his wife.

G. D. Atchinson of Ludlow has been visiting his sister, Miss Mary Atchinson, this week.

Mr. Fuller, principal of schools at Bondsville, visited Mr. Adams's room here yesterday afternoon.

There was no session of the schools Tuesday, the teachers taking that day to visit the schools at Thorndike and Palmer.

Mr. Adams is arranging for a public exercise, to be given by all the schools the Friday afternoon following Washington's birthday.

O. J. Senton, Miss Carrie Johnson and Mrs. F. E. Hillman are students in telegraphy under F. E. Hillman at the Central Vermont station.

Rev. Hollis Jordan of Worcester will begin a series of evangelistic meetings at the Union Evangelical church next Sunday evening, to last for one week.

W. R. Fosgate of Belchertown, who has been studying telegraphy under F. E. Hillman and assisting him at the Central Vermont station, is at present working at Barrett's Junction.

"Ladies' Night" will be observed at the next meeting of the Monday Evening Club. At the next debate the subject will be: "Resolved, That Cæsar was a Greater General than Napoleon."

On account of the rain and warm weather of the past few days the masquerade to be given on the river, which was being prepared by members of the Three Rivers Skating Club, had to be given up.

S. B. Barnes and Mrs. M. A. Squier were married at the latter's home on Wednesday evening, Rev. C. L. Ayer of West Stafford, Ct., a former pastor of the Union Evangelical church, performing the ceremony.

At the last business meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. the matter of changing the night of meeting to some evening of the week instead of Sunday evening, was discussed, but left in the hands of the executive committee for final action.

Next Monday morning the carpenters expect to commence needed repairs in the audience room of the Union church. The choir gallery back of the pulpit will be lowered to the level of the pulpit platform, and some minor repairs will be seen to also.

The faces of Superintendent Upham and the scholars of the Sunday school of the Union church were wreathed in smiles Sunday after the reading of the secretary's report, which showed the number present to be 198, the largest in the history of the school. Mr. Upham by much personal effort has brought the school to a high standard of excellency, and deserves great credit for his untiring zeal.

C. P. Haynes lost a valuable stallion Wednesday from congestion. This is the same animal that broke through the river last week while cutting ice. In getting him out the horse ruptured a blood vessel, but was not considered seriously sick until Tuesday, though Mr. Haynes secured the services of a surgeon, who did everything possible for the animal. On examination it was found that the lungs had completely filled with blood, the animal practically choking to death. There was an insurance of $550 on him, though that is not near what his cost was to Mr. H.

John O'Connor, 12 years old, very narrowly escaped drowning Monday afternoon. In company with Merton Twogood he attempted to cross the river between the two bridges. When near the middle of the stream the ice broke, letting him into the water. Twogood immediately sought assistance, and with Willie Squires brought fence boards. O'Connor was fast losing his strength when one of the brakemen on a Central Vermont freight which was at the station came to his rescue and got him out. After resting a while at the station he was conveyed to his home, a wiser boy. This part of the river is particularly dangerous, having a swift current, and both boys had been cautioned about attempting to cross at this point.

Considerable complaint is being made about the amount of skating done on the river here Sunday. Not only do boys indulge in the pastime, but men and women are seen there also. Last Sunday, between the hours of 12 and 2, no less than 150 persons were to be seen on that portion of the river between the bridge and the dam, besides a large number who were no doubt attracted there by the fancy skating of some and the games of "hockey" being played by others. Some of the law-abiding citizens and those who have a due regard for Sunday and its religious aspect are wondering if there is not a way to put a stop to this breaking of the Sabbath. The excuse that there is no other time than Sunday in which to skate cannot be offered, as the splendid condition of the ice and the magnificent weather have attracted hundreds to the river every evening of late. There has not been better skating for several years than during the past few weeks. The Three Rivers Skating Club has taken a great deal of pains to keep the ice cleared when there was snow, also arranging for electric lights on the ice. It is to be hoped that that during the rest of the winter Sunday skating will be seldom seen.

"NEW HALE METHOD."

My reward for the past year: Over three thousand cavities Excavated and Filled Absolutely Without Pain and in the most thorough manner.

If you have teeth to be filled why suffer the exerciating pain from which you must in other offices?

My assistants are all men who have had years of practical experience and the quality of all work and material I guarantee to be the best.

We make a specialty of CROWN and BRIDGE WORK and as we do a large amount of this work we are in a position to keep constantly employed a man who makes this branch of dentistry a special work.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH we make and use gold, silver, aluminum and rubber for bases. We will do our best to please you in this line of work, and as we use only the best make of Teeth and Rubber there is no question as to the results.

Remember this. It matters not what other dentists say, there is positively nothing used in the "Hale Method" that ever affects the patient in any way, neither does, nor can it injure the tooth or pulp in any possible manner.

My office is the largest and best equipped for dental work in all its branches in this locality, and I cordially invite your investigation. I shall be pleased to mail to anyone, who may desire, a little pamphlet which I have published describing the "New Hale Method."

Prices are reasonable. Lady attendant. Take the elevator.

Phoebe Day.....Miss Alice E. Park

In the death of Mrs. Mary Newton Sunday morning, at the age of ninety-one years, Monson loses its second oldest inhabitant. As she had been in failing health for some time past her death was not unexpected. Mrs. Newton, whose maiden name was Prince, was born in Brooklyn, Ct., and was one of seven sisters, two of whom survive her, Mrs. Newton of Webster and Mrs. Young of Worcester, at the age of eighty-six and eighty-one, respectively. She was married at North Monson September 29th, 1825, to John Newton, and with the exception of a few years spent her life thereafter in Monson, being the last of the older Newton family. Mr. Newton, whose death occurred in 1871, was a prominent merchant and town official, and one of six brothers, all well known in the history of the town. Their five children are all living, Charles O. of Homer, N. Y., George, of Worcester, Alfred, of California, and the Misses Sarah and Emily of this place. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, Rev. F. S. Hatch of the Congregational church, of which Mrs. Newton had been for fifty years a member, officiating.

Academy Notes.

The day of prayer for schools and colleges was appropriately observed yesterday afternoon, the service being conducted by Prof. Burke, as follows: Piano solo, Miss Maud E. Strong; Scripture lesson, Ephesians iii., Rev. Harry Blackford; prayer, Rev. James Tufts; sermon, John 10:10, Rev. J. W. Bixby of New London, Ct.; benediction, Rev. F. S. Hatch. At the close of the service a short prayermeeting was held, to which 60 of the students remained, also many friends. —— The three under classes are writing essays on some phase in the life of Washington, and from the whole number the best ones will be selected to be read Friday, Feb. 23, at which time Washington's birthday will be observed by the school.——Next Friday evening the Ladies' Schubert Quartette of Boston will give a concert in Memorial Hall. Tickets are on sale at G. L. Keeney's drug store and can be had of the students.——The Amherst College Glee and Banjo Club will give one of its popular concerts under the auspices of the senior class in Memorial Hall Friday evening, March 9th.——A meeting of the local branch of the W. M. A. A., was held this afternoon at the close of rhetoricals, and a new treasurer was elected to fill the vacancy recently made. The association will give an entertainment early in the spring to swell the funds necessary to meet the expenses of the spring meet.

GLENDALE.

Mrs. Lydia Nelson died at her home on the 18th of pneumonia.

Mrs. Barker of Boston was in town over Sunday to attend the funeral of her aunt, Mrs. Lydia Nelson.

The Christian Crusaders came up from Hampden Tuesday night and held a meeting in the church. They expect to continue these meetings through the week.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

F. Cutter of Ashland spent last Sabbath with Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Bell.

Fred Fletcher of Springfield spent a few days at Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Fletcher's.

On Tuesday evening last a dramatic entertainment, entitled "Naval Engagements," preceded by the comical farce, "Box and Cox," was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Benevolent Society in Grace Union church; the several parts were well taken, making it a difficult problem to particularize any certain one. The church was crowded to its doors, consequently netting the society a snug sum. During the performance of "Box and Cox" a bouquet of cabbage leaves was thrown at Box by a young man sitting near the front of the hall, and the fact being noticed by the performer, several good jokes were made at the expense of the donor, which produced roars of laughter from the audience.

HAMPDEN.

Most people have filled their ice houses, many hundred tons having been taken from the Lucowsic Co's. pond, and of excellent quality.

The venerable William V. Sessions attended church here last Sunday, driving his own team. He is in his ninety-second year.

A band of Christian Crusaders has been holding meetings here the past three weeks, and they report over fifty conversions. They have held three meetings a week at each of the churches, and will continue this week at the Baptist, closing at the Methodist next Sunday evening.

The Congregational church has had a narrow escape from destruction, having been on fire twice from the defective setting of a furnace, each time the fire going out undiscovered; but smoke was smelled, and examination showed that there was quite a hole burned under the furnace, which has since been made safe.

The Demorest prize contest Tuesday evening drew a full house, as has every contest, and the young men did nobly, but there is some dissatisfaction expressed at the bestowal of the medal on Howard Ballard. Last Friday night the young ladies had a contest and the prize was bestowed on Miss Hattie French, a young lady who labors under serious disadvantages, having been a victim of rheumatism in her childhood, which stiffened her joints, but it is thought by all that she fairly earned the prize.

WILBRAHAM.

Bert Green of Glendale is clerking for Mr. Gurney.

Mrs. Henry Shaw of Becket is visiting Mrs. L. A. Warner.

George Bliss has filled his ice house this week with clear 12-inch ice from White's meadow, on the Brimfield road.

The school children of this district enjoyed a stereopticon exhibition of the World's Fair and Chicago views in the town hall Tuesday afternoon.

The Ladies' Circle of the M. E. church is arranging for a supper next Thursday evening. The Epworth League will furnish music and other entertainment.

G. F. Sikes, landlord of the West Warren hotel, who arrested Bush, the spotter, about two weeks ago for stealing his diamonds, was arrested Monday for illegal liquor selling. On Sunday morning after the Woods block fire officers and other parties from Warren purchased drink at times from him. He was taken before Justice John Tyler, found guilty, fined $150 and given three months in jail. He appealed and is held under $500 bonds. Damien Lapiere was also arrested for being in connection with Sikes at the hotel, was found guilty, and settled the case for $100.

BRIMFIELD.

Fred Charles of Boston was in town last week.

There are several cases of scarlet fever in town.

The students of the high school were given Tuesday morning to indulge in skating.

Miss Lydia Brown Hitchcock is to spend the remainder of the winter in Meriden, Ct.,

Mrs. M. L. Streeter and daughter have returned from a visit to relatives in Concord, N. H.

Henry Stebbins and wife of Westfield have been in town visiting his father, Abner Stebbins.

Mr. McKinstry and wife from Southbridge are caring for his father, Warden McKinstry, who has been very sick.

The many friends of Dr. Sawin will be pleased to know that he is improving, and will be among his many patients in a few days.

C. H. Burnham of Springfield gave a very interesting lecture on the World's Fair Tuesday evening, illustrated by stereopticon views. About 200 were interested listeners.

The Y. P. S. C. E. hold a reunion meeting this evening at the First church. Societies from Sturbridge, Fiskdale and Holland have been invited. A supper will be served during the evening. Everybody invited.

The "Social Club" gave its first ball at the town hall last Friday evening. One hundred and fifty invitations were issued, and about fifty couples responded. The ladies, as usual, had prepared a dainiy collation, consisting of all kinds of cake, ice cream, hot coffee and chicken sandwiches. The affair was pronounced a success by the company, and the club is making preparations for another, to be given in February.

WARE.

The two boys who broke into the store of M. L. Lane have been sent to the Westboro reform school.

Chas. W. Eddy gave his stereopticon entertainment at the Hardwick mission schoolhouse on Wednesday evening.

A gang of men is at work on the new iron bridge near Gibbs crossing, and it is expected in a few days it will be passable.

A. B. Howard of Belchertown has been canvassing Ware for signatures to a petition to locate the normal school at that place.

There is an important change in the time of the forenoon train from Ware to Palmer; it now leaves at 9.39, and the mail closes at 9.10.

Rev. V. E. Southworth has organized a class for the study of evolution, which will meet in the Unitarian vestry at 7 o'clock Sunday evenings.

The subject of the paper by Mr. Southworth at the meeting of the Self Culture Club next Tuesday evening is "Wise and Unwise Charity."

The two oldest men in town now are David P. Billings and William Pierce, each 82 years old. There are more than sixty men in town over 70 years of age.

The rumors that the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. was to shut down indefinitely, and that the Chas. A. Stevens Co. was to start up, were both without foundation in fact.

Monday afternoon the fire department was called out to a little fire around the chimney of J. B. Green's tin shop. It was quickly extinguished with but slight damage.

Reports of the mid-winter convention will be read at the regular meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the chapel next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Col. French of Chicago gave a fine World's Fair stereopticon entertainment at the unitarian church Wednesday evening and a matinee for the school children in the afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Doane were given a surprise party last week by a number of their friends and neighbors. Mr. Medcalf, a brother Granger from Barre, presented them with a handsome tea set.

The stereopticon entertainment by Col. C. H. French at the Unitarian church on Wednesday evening was so greatly appreciated by those present that he was engaged to remain in town and give his illustrated lecture on Alaska Thursday afternoon and evening. He had the finest collection of views we have ever seen.

It would seem that "the end is not yet" with the road commisioners, as Mr. Morse, after resigning, refuses to vacate the office and deliver the property of the town to the selectmen, and they, evidently considering they now have control of affairs in that direction, have appointed John Osgood to take care of the village streets.

The 86th birthday of Mrs. R. Pierce was observed at the home of S. E. Newton in the west part of Hardwick last Friday. She has four children living, and all were present. They are James S. Pierce, Mrs. George P. Campbell, Mrs. Augustus Cummings and Mrs. S. E. Newton. Mrs. Pierce has 18 grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren living, and is remarkably smart for one of her age.

Hiram Ramsdell, 65, died at his home on Prospect street last Friday afternoon. Mr. Ramsdell was for many years overseer in the Otis Company's mill, and was one who had the respect of all who knew him. He held the office of selectman at one time, and executed all the trusts committed to him in a faithful and consciencious manner. For some years he had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He leaves a widow and two sons.

Horace Bond, aged 88 years, died on Saturday at his residence on West Main street, where he had lived for nearly 50 years, being the oldest man in town at the time of his death. Mr. Bond was born in Vermont, where he spent his boyhood on a farm. At the age of 21 he went to Leicester, Mass., where he was employed on a farm for a few years. Coming to Ware sometime in the early forties he engaged in the meat and ice business, giving up the meat business in 1858 but continuing the ice business until about two years ago. He was married three times, and leaves a widow, a granddaughter, Mrs. George Utley, and a nephew, E. M. Bond of Worcester. Mr. Bond was a kind hearted man and a good neighbor, ever ready to help in time of need, and by those he has befriended he will ever be held in grateful remembrance. The funeral was on Tuesday afternoon, Rev. V. E. Southworth conducting the services.

The great merit of Ayer's Hygienic Coffee is not due to advertising, but from its superiority over coffee. Principal grocers sell it.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

There may be shoe stores that have some kinds of shoes such as sold by Broadhurst Bros., Springfield, Mass., but we feel confident that none in this section can show such a tremendous variety, neither are they willing to part with them so near the first cost. People in need of shoes find it's a saving of time as well as money by going direct to Broadhurst Bros.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

The Old And The New.

Changes take place in the medical profession as in all branches of science. We believe the greatest good will follow that generous offer made by Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who invites all persons, far and near, suffering from any form of disease, to write him a description of their complaints, and he will send them, free of charge, a complete explanation of their diseases, with advice how to be cured. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters and explains each symptom so carefully that you cannot fail to understand exactly what ails you.

Dr. Greene is our most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He is the discoverer of that famous medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which is doing such a vast amount of good all over the world. He uses nothing in his practice but harmless vegetable remedies, which can in no manner injure you. This great system of giving consultation and advice through letter correspondence, free of charge, is especially important to the poor and those living at a distance from large cities, as such consultation and advice were formerly attended by great expense. The doctor is having wonderful success in treating the sick through letter correspondence, and if you will write him about your disease it will undoubtedly lead to your cure.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

And almost every thing we take back if it doesn't suit. This is a distinguishing mark of our trade. If anything doesn't suit, we wan't it back; for we want to suit. To suit is worth more than any one profit.

Write us about any of the above goods.

FORBES & WALLACE,
Main, Vernon and Pynchon streets, Springfield.

We begin this month to sell carpets as we sell everything else, at fair prices and no haggling. Mr. W. G. Rogers is in charge.

All our trade having been done on the one price system for years, you may think it strange that we talk about it at all. We have excellent reasons. We are starting a branch of trade in which what we mean by the one-price system is wholly unknown in this city.

Now we are not going either to talk against our neighbors or hold ourselves up for your approbation; but we are going to tell you what we mean by the one-price system in carpets; and to do that we have got to tell you how prices are managed in carpet stores. If the tale isn't handsome, it is not our fault, but the misfortune of the trade.

In nearly all houses the salesman guesses, from your dress, or manner, or talk, whether you are a good judge of carpets and a close buyer, or no judge, and estimate things according to the prices. Having guessed at your intelligence and vanity, he makes prices accordingly, and keeps watching you to catch the first sign of having guessed wrong.

But some houses, considering such dealings dishonorable, do have fixed prices—fixed but not invariable. All sellers of carpets, including the best houses (we know of no exceptions), put comparatively low prices on goods that you know most about; but having once got your confidence they make up what it has cost them by two, three or even four, profits when you come to buy what you know nothing of.

The result is: the average prices of carpets are much too high; the prices of different grades are out of all proportion to their values; the object of this disproportion is deception; the apology for it is that it is the rule of the trade.

We throw away all the tradition, and sell carpets as we sell everything else, at fair prices, and no haggling.

Our new shoe store gets talked about so much, because we are all alone in our way of dealing. Some others make low prices, and a few sell fine shoes; but nobody else combines the two so far as we know.

Be on guard against imitations of Pearline. When they are not dangerous, they are worthless. They are usually both. Pearline does what nothing else can. It saves labor in washing, and insures safety to what is washed. It is cheap, thorough, and reliable. Nothing else will "do as well;" it is just as well to have nothing else.

Are You a Sufferer from Rheumatism or Neuralgia?

E. P. Tayer and Solomon Davis Speak to Victims of These Terrible Diseases.

E. P. Tayer, of East Nassau, New York, says: "I wish it possible to speak personally with every rheumatic victim, for I would tell them of my personal experience and the relief and cure I found in a simple remedy.

"When I first saw in the newspapers, 'Rheumatism can be cured,' I was loath to believe it, but when I found that the statement was made by Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., I inquired into it, and upon his advice I began to use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. My condition at that time seemed hopeless. I had suffered for fifteen years with inflammatory rheumatism. My physician said I would be a cripple for life, but it was not ordained that way, for I had not used Favorite Remedy long before I was convinced that it was the right medicine, and in a short while I was cured. That was three years ago, and I have not felt a trace of the disease since."

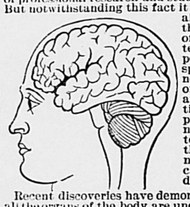
Solomon Davis, of North Kortwright, N. Y., suffered awfully from neuralgia, and loss of sleep, as is frequently the case with elderly people; in speaking to the writer, he said: "I found that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy relieved the bowels, improved the circulation of the blood, and the old pain left me altogether."

As one of the Palmer physicians recently said, "There is no reason in suffering with rheumatism or neuralgia, for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will cure them." All druggists sell it. 42

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, nervousness, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

A Very Busy Woman.

She pronounced in sounding platitude
Her universal gratitude
For men of every latitude
From the tropics to the poles;
She felt a consanguinity,
A sisterly affinity,
A kind of kith-and-kinity
For all these foreign souls.

For Caledonian Highlanders,
For brutal South Sea Islanders,
For wet and moist and dry landers,
For Gentile, Greek and Jew;
For Finns and for Siberians,
For Arabs and Algerians,
For Terra-del-Fuegians,
She was in a constant stew.

O, it worried Miss Sophronia
Lest the men of Patagonia
Should die with the pneumonia,
With the phthisis or the chills.
Yes, indeed, she worried daily,
Lest a croup or cold should waylay
Some poor Soudanese or Malay,
Dying for the lack of pills.

And she toiled on without measure,
And with most unstinted pleasure,
For the good of Central Asia
And the pagan people there.
But meanwhile her little sister,
Died of a neglected blister,
But Sophronia hardly missed her,
For she had no time to spare.

A Beautiful Dawning.

Light Sprung From the Darkness.

A Grand Awakening Which Shall Last Forever.

A Brighter Outlook Than the World Has Ever Before Known.

Changes are constantly taking place which tend to make the world happier and to cause a feeling of joy and contentment to prevade our lives. One of the greatest blessings which has fallen to mankind and which is indeed the dawning of a new era of life, has just taken place in the well known family of Mrs. Albert Blanchard, residing at 358 Webster avenue, Chicago, Ill. She writes the following interesting letter:

"My health has been very poor for several years. I would have sinking spells and was so weak that I could not hold my hand up to my head. I would have to lie down on the sofa and was so very nervous that I could not sleep nights.

"My stomach troubled me all the time and my food distressed me so that I was afraid to eat. I had chills most of the time and sometimes chilis and fever with trembling and shaking. I was also troubled with catarrh.

"I was so dizzy at times that I nearly fell; I would grab at the chair, and dark spots appeared before my eyes. I could not begin to tell how I suffered. I was so sick that I did not enjoy life and was told that I would not live long.

MRS. ALBERT BLANCHARD.

"I took many remedies and employed several physicians, but received no permanent benefit. I was induced to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and after using six bottles I found it had done wonders for me. I now feel real strong and well and can walk a couple of miles.

"My stomach does not trouble me and I am not chilly. My catarrh has entirely disappeared. I am now so well that I am assisting my husband in the office and help mother when I go home. I hope any one that is not well will try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"My little daughter, Helena, has also been using this remedy with great benefit. She was very delicate and nervous. After taking this wonderful medicine for a short time she gained three pounds and is not near so nervous as she was. I do not feel afraid to recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for I know what it has done for me and my little girl, and I would advise any one who is suffering to take it."

MISS HELENA BLANCHARD.

What a wonderful awakening, indeed, is this great discovery from the darkness of disease and the failures to conquer it. What a blessing to humanity. How grateful must Mrs. Blanchard feel for the cure of herself and child. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will do for you all that it has done for her. If you are suffering from any form of nervous or blood disease, indigestion, weak stomach, kidney or liver complaints, take this wonderful medicine and it will cure you. Dr. Greene, the noted specialist in the cure of all chronic and nervous diseases, can be consulted at his office, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free, personally or by letter.

HORSESHOE LUCK.

"Am I too old to think of a second marriage?" said Mrs. Blythe, looking wistfully into the glittering sheet of mirror that extended to the other side of the room into an indefinite perspective of onyx tables, stands of ferns, Japanese screens and India hangings. "Six-and-thirty—and why should one be compelled to give up all the sweetness of life at six-and-thirty? I'm sure I don't look a day over thirty; and Algy Vane must be that at least!"

Mrs. Blythe was a very pretty woman—not the bud, but a full-blown rose—a plump, dimpled, peachy-cheeked matron, who knew exactly how to make the most of all her middle-aged advantages.

"I shall never be such a fool as to marry again!" said Mrs. Blythe.

For the major had by no means been perfection. He had left her just enough, by dint of strict economy, to live upon, especially as her only child had been taken to "bring up" by a quiet Quaker couple, the major's relatives. And until now Mrs. Blythe had adhered resolutely to her first decision.

But Algernon Vane was a royally handsome fellow, and the pretty widow was but human, and she scribbled "Rosamond Vane," "Mrs. Algernon Vane," over and over again in her blotting book, and she had treasured up a flower he had wore in his buttonhole, and she had corresponded with him during the winter he had spent in Bermuda, writing sprightly and amusing letters, with a semi-tone of seriousness underlying all their sparkling gossip.

"He likes me a little now," said the widow, "and I am determined he shall like me a good deal more. I'm tired of this solitary life; I'm tired of this counting every penny half a dozen times before I spend it. Algy is independently rich, and he's my beau ideal of a man. With him I do believe I could be quite, quite happy. He don't know about Lydia; but, of course, that would be no objection. Uncle Joshua and Aunt Rebecca will keep her. Dear me, dear me! she must be growing to be a big girl now," and Mrs. Blythe shuddered at the idea.

At this moment the door flew open, and in burst a tall, dusty, disheveled young girl, some half a head taller than Mrs. Blythe herself, with the white-capped maid following helplessly behind.

"Please, ma'am," said the maid, "she wouldn't wait for me to take her card up."

"Mamma, I'm Lydia!" cried the breathless apparition. "Little Liddy, mamma—don't you remember? Tell that hateful girl to go away! A card, indeed! Am I to send up cards to my own mother?"

Mrs. Blythe stood appalled, in the soft yellow light streaming through the China silk curtains. This fair-haired, sunburned young giantess, with the peony cheeks and the big blue eyes, the ill-fitting gloves and faded cambric gown—could it be possible that this was the "little Liddy" of ten years ago? Oh, if Mr. Vane should see her!

The girl looked around like one who views the enchantments of a fairy palace.

"Oh, mamma, how pretty you are!" said she, "and what a lovely room! Are you glad to see me, mamma, darling?"

"My dearest child," gasped the widow, "what has brought you here?"

Lydia clasped her hands; her countenance fell.

"Mamma," said she, "I'm the most miserable creature in the world—and I want a hundred dollars!"

"Lydia! A hundred dollars!"

"And you must let me have it!" vehemently went on Lydia. "I've killed Uncle Joshua's prize colt! That is, I didn't exactly do it myself; but I was riding 'Pretty Jane' around the meadow, just for practice, and I forgot and left the bars down, and the colt got out on the railroad track, and the train came along, and—oh! I never can look Uncle Joshua in the face again, unless I have that hundred dollars to pay him!"

"I shall be able to earn plenty for myself before long, mamma," she added, breathlessly, for I can ride better than the woman in pink tarleian and spangles who jumped through the hoops at the circus. When the old gypsy told my fortune last year, at the county fair, she said a horse shoe would bring me luck some day; and I knew, of course, what she meant. So I've been practicing riding ever since, whenever I could get away from Aunt Beck and Uncle Joshua, and—"

"Mrs. Dappleton Ames is in the drawing-room, ma'am," said the white-capped maid, appearing with an oxydized silver card-receiver in her hand.

And Mrs. Blythe checked her daughter's confidences at once.

"Lydia," cried she, "I'm surprised at you! A great girl like you scuffing and romping around the country! Go back to Shady Plains by the very next train, and try to behave more like a lady. Why, you must be fourteen at least!"

"Seventeen, ma'am," confessed the culprit. "But aren't you going to give me the hundred dollars?"

"I have not got a hundred cents!" impatiently cried Mrs. Blythe. "And if I had, I wouldn't give it to you, you naughty, ill-behaved, romping—Yes, Matilda, tell Mrs. Dappleton Ames that I shall be down directly, and bring some tea and buns for—for Miss Blythe before the next train goes."

But when Mrs. Dappleton Ames had finished her call, and Mrs. Blythe came back, the bird had flown. Lydia, deeply wounded and resentful, had promptly returned to Shady Plains.

"That old gypsy must have been a humbug, after all," thought the despairing girl. "Oh, what shall I say to Uncle Joshua? Why was mamma so cold and cruel to me? Oh, dear, I am very, very unhappy!"

"Shady Plains!" shouted the conductor.

And as Lydia crept sorrowfully out of the train, something bright, like a fallen drop of dew, scintillated at her feet. She stooped to pick it up. It was a diamond scarf-pin in the shape of a horse-shoe.

"Squire Carhart's company must have dropped it," said Lydia to herself. "Oh, how it sparkles! If it were only mine! For I'm sure it must be worth more than a hundred dollars."

She glanced furtively at a tall, broad-shouldered young fellow who had been seated in the train a few seats beyond her.

"He never looked around," thought Lydia. "I'm glad of it, for he must have known that I had been crying. But I must give this back to him."

With a light, swift step, she hastened to overtake Squire Carhart's city guest.

"Please, is this yours?" said she, holding up the glittering half-circle. "I found it on the car floor close to where you were sitting."

He started and raised his hat.

"It is Mr. Wotton's niece, isn't it?" said he—"Miss Lydia? Yes, it is mine, and I'm a thousand times obliged to you. I must have fastened it in very carelessly. And I value it very highly, too; it was a gift from my father."

"Is it worth a great deal of money?" asked Lydia, timidly lifting her sea-blue eyes to his face.

"About a hundred dollars, I suppose."

"I wish it was mine," said Lydia, with a long sigh, as if she were thinking aloud.

"Yours? Why it isn't a lady's ornament."

"Oh, not the pin," Lydia hastened to explain, "but the money—the hundred dollars. Good-bye! Here is the carriage waiting from Carhart Court."

"Will you let me drive you as far as Wotton farm?" asked the stranger courteously.

And tired Lydia willingly acceded.

The upshot was that when she entered her uncle's presence, she gave him a bank bill representing the price of the "prize colt."

"Where did thee get this money, child?" solemnly asked Uncle Joshua.

"I—I borrowed it," confessed Lydia. "Don't ask me any more questions, uncle, I'll pay it back if I have to pick blackberries at four cents a quart all summer."

"I hope thee will give up this hoydenish business of scampering about on horseback, Lydia, after this," severely spoke Aunt Rebecca.

"But, aunt, the fortune-teller told me that my fortune would one day be made by a—"

Lydia stopped abruptly as she remembered how the diamond horseshoe had glittered on the floor at her feet that day. Her color rose, her heart beat.

"Thee must remember, Lydia," admonished Aunt Rebecca, "that all diviners and fortune-tellers are snares of Satan."

"Yes, Aunt Rebecca," murmured the girl.

But from that day an inscrutable change came over the character of her life.

The pleasant summer sunshine had faded out of the land. The Saratoga hotels were closed; gay Newport was deserted.

And Mrs. Blythe, sitting in the yellow light of her jonquil silk curtains, was smiling over a card which Matilda had just brought in.

"Dear Algy!" she murmured. "I knew he would come."

She glided into the white-and-gold drawing room, all gracious cordiality.

"You recreant cavalier!" she smiled. "I've half a mind to scold you, and yet—"

"Do I deserve that title?" Mr. Vane asked. "For you are the first person to whom I have told the great happiness of my life. Oh, I see you don't understand me. Come from behind the draperies, Lydia, and help me to explain."

And Lydia, blue-eyed and fair-tressed, came.

"We are married, mamma," said Lydia, "Algy and I. And we sail for Europe in the 'Comandra', at noon. Won't you kiss me, mamma, and wish me joy?"

Mrs. Blythe kissed Lydia—and Algy, too—and wished them joy.

But it was the severest ordeal to which she ever had been put. A mother-in-law instead of a bride. This was hardly what she had looked forward to.

But even in that trying moment she noticed the glittering pin which fastened Lydia's lace bonnet strings—a quaint device of tiny diamonds—and remembered what the girl had once said about a fortune-teller and a horseshoe.

"Mamma didn't look quite pleased, Algy," said the bride, when they were back in the carriage, driving to the steamer's wharf. "Do you suppose she is vexed because we didn't take her into our confidence?"

"I dare say," remarked Mr. Vane, "that no mother likes to lose her child so suddenly. Least of all, darling, so sweet a treasure as you."

And neither of the two suspected what a poisoned dagger was that day rankling in the breast of Mrs. Raymond Blythe.—Helen Forrest Graves, in Philadelphia Saturday Night.

MATRIMONIAL CURIOSITIES.—Says the Philadelphia Record: "The recent marriage in this city of a Mr. Tarr and Miss Feathers, thus forming the most harmonious union of tar and feathers known to history, is matched by a Bucks county couple who crossed the Delaware the other day to avail themselves of the easy marriage laws of New Jersey. The groom was Bartle A. Downs and the bride Miss Elizabeth Ups, and their runaway wedding moved a rural poet to sing:

In matrimony's happy state,
Through Cupid's smiles and frowns,
We find in life, however straight
There will be Ups and Downs.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

The Parting.

What shall I say to you, love, for farewell?
What shall I give you for magical spell?
Is there a language that holds in its heart
Anything sweeter for lovers apart
Than the dear words of the old German strain,
"Till we shall meet again—Auf wiedersehen!"

Sweet it may be, yet it cannot express
All my deep longing to help and to bless.
Yet in the language of France I may find
Greeting more tender, less carefully kind.
Will not this phrase bear my message to thee,
"Good-by, my friend—Adieu mon ami!"

Cold and unfeeling it seemeth to me,
So I would fain that my farewell should be
In the one language that truly can prove
All that the heart feels of passion or love;
Soft as the musical rivulet's flow
Ripples the parting "Good by—Addio."

Ah, there is nothing, my own, that can reach
Deep to the soul like our plain English speech.
Sweeter and truer and dearer than all
Foreign love-phrases of cottage or hall
Rings the old song that we breathed you and I,
When night would sever us—"Sweetheart, good-by!"

"Sweetheart, good-by—God be with you, sweetheart,"
Is the farewell that I say from my heart,
Soothing my fears in their fluttering pain,
With the old words of the tender refrain
Said as a prayer, through a tremulous sigh,
"Good-by, sweetheart; dearest sweetheart, good-by!"

—Helen Chauncey, in Harper's Bazar.

Written for the PALMER JOURNAL.

THE AFTERMATH.

SEQUEL TO "A THOUSAND-DOLLAR CHRISTMAS STORY."

In the tale entitled 'A Thousand Dollar Christmas Story," Mr. Howard is a wealthy business man who is overcome by the great blizzard at the door of his neighbors, the Delands, and cared for by them until the storm is over. While under this roof he views a phase of life with which he has hitherto been unfamiliar because of his retirin and exclusive habits. He becomes interested in the interests of the people of the town and contributes a thousand dollars to the King's Daughters society for distribution at Christmas. With this money, to which is added generous contributions from other sources, this society prepares a free Christmas dinner to which all the children of the town from all classes of people are invited. There is also a Christmas tree with a unique entertainment, in which Mr. Howard is personated by one of the young men of the town.

The festival was over. The Christmas greens, dry and crackling, were heaped upon the dump. But the good that had been done, the love that had been put into the work, and the gratitude that had been engendered were fresh with the warmth of life. The thousand dollars and its allies had been opportune. The "great failure" had not been announced, but the employes of the factory had not been paid, and they were out of work; they were the losers who suffered most, and they had already begun to realize that they could not live on promises. There had been empty coal bins and empty flour barrels that their heavy-hearted owners had not known how to fill. There had been children so thinly clad that their mothers sighed with dread of the coming winter. All this was now at an end. The new year opened with hope. The hard times were bridged; immediate and pressing needs were supplied, and before the Christmas gifts were exhausted a new enterprise was started and all were at work again.

Mr. Howard received much praise, not only for his generosity but for his farsightedness. It was thought that his business eye had discerned the future before even those who were most interested realized what was before them, and that he had anticipated the distress that would follow the announcement that Holden & Hall had failed, and thus had prevented a panic by diverting attention at the moment when the feeling would have been most intense. There were those, of course, who said that it was selfishness and not generosity that prompted the man—who had ever before known him to give away any money to the poor? But just how he profited financially it was hard to say, and no one accused him of doing what he had done for the fame of it; he was so adroit in avoiding any mention of the affair and so shy of those who were inclined to adulation. Yet Mr. Howard, having done a handsome thing, really liked to see his name in the papers as a public benefactor; liked to hear his own praise sounded afar, much as it distressed him to directly receive congratulations.

The King's Daughters society was not long in doubt concerning his future relations to them. He quietly informed the president, Mrs. Hope, that he was too busy a man to take part in their activities, that he was not adapted to such work, but that he was ready to assist by contributions, and if the society cared for his advice in business matters he should be glad to give it.

There was not much done during the winter. There was not much that needed to be done, and after the festival was over and all the distributions had been made the members of the society found themselves quite tired of good works. They were glad of an opportunity to rest. They had been surprised, and none more than Mr. Howard, to see how much a thousand dollars, judiciously expended, will buy, but when their enthusiasm was spent they counted their mistakes and learned lessons from their failures.

In the spring measures were taken to form a Y. M. C. A., and Mr. Howard gave the rental of several rooms in the Howard block for its use. A reading room was opened in June. Mr. Howard was out of town, but he ordered the periodicals coming in his name to be sent to the reading room. In September he was at home again, and during the fall he called on the Delands several times.

Christmas morning Jennie was busy with her mother in the kitchen when Mr. Howard drove by to the front door, fastened his horse and came up the walk.

"Whew, by jingo!" exclaimed Tom, enthusiastically. "New hitch, new rig, bran new! Just see the style, Jessie! Makes my mouth water! Don't you want to go to ride? Let's take it, Jess!"

"It is pretty," said Jessie, looking out. "Does Mr. Howard ever drive, himself?" she inquired.

"No," said Tom. "I tell you it's something new—new departure—can't make it out."

"It is Jessie that Mr. Howard wants to see. He asked me if you would like to ride with him," said their mother, who had answered Mr. Howard's ring and come back to the kitchen.

"Me! You are surely mistaken, mother," said Jessie.

"If I were a maiden, a maiden, a maiden," put in Tom, singing and dancing and holding out imaginary skirts on each side. "Do be a maiden, Jessie! Go with the handsome man on the prancing steed—excuse me—after the steed—"

"No," returned Mrs. Deland in answer to Jessie and not regarding Tom, "Mr. Howard said he wishes to see you on important business and would like you to ride with him!"

"That settles it, she'll go in her official capacity," put in Tom.

"Oh, don't, Tom," cried Jessie. "Mother, why didn't you make an excuse; you know I cannot go—yet how can I say no?"

"I did not know," said her mother. "I thought you would prefer to decide for yourself."

"But it is so out of—well, out of character for me—to ride with Mr. Howard alone. People will notice it and make remarks. Besides I do not like—I mean, I am almost afraid of him." There are tears of vexation in Jessie's eyes.

"Pshaw, Jess, he's jolly fun!" broke in Tom. "Do go along." Then assuming a patronizing attitude and tone, "We are under immense obligations to him, don't you know; he wants to give away another thousand; can you refuse, my child, to sacrifice yourself pro bono publico?"

"You must give him your answer, Jessie," said her mother, seriously. "I am sorry you feel so."

"I suppose so," said Jessie, reluctantly, and she put her hand over her crimps to see if they were in order, and brushed bits of flour from her neat calico.

"Take the advice of your Dutch uncle—" began Tom, and laughing in spite of herself, Jessie went to meet Mr. Howard, wishing from her heart he would present his benefactions through some other member of the society, and wishing her mother had made an excuse for her, yet reasoning with herself for her foolish aversion. Why should she not treat this man as she did other men? It was "beastly awkward," she imagined Tom would say, after Mr. Howard had been so kind and the day was so fair—what would he think if she refused so simple a request, which was intended, of course, for her pleasure?

Mr. Howard greeted Jessie with his usual courteous and formal manner, and expressed his pleasure at meeting her after so long a time, this reminding her that she had been away from home whenever he had called.

Then he said, with a slight embarassment in his manner, "There is an important subject I wish to present for your consideration. It is a beautiful day, I thought if you cared to drive there would be no interruption—but if you do not care to go out, perhaps you would see me here." He looked around in a vague way, placed his hat upon the table and made a movement to take off his driving gloves, and Jessie in a panic unusual to her, found herself saying, "I shall be happy to go with you," in exactly the same formal manner in which Mr. Howard had addressed her.

Jessie was a calm, quiet, self-possessed young woman. She enjoyed her men friends as she did her women friends, for what they were worth. She met them at church, at sociables and other entertainments; she belonged to a Shakespeare club with her more intimate friends, and among them were young men whom she had known since her childhood. She received such attentions as these gave her in a simple, matter-of-fact manner, and went to walk or to ride or to a picnic, occasionally, with one or another who invited her, as country girls do. She was called "good company," but was thought rather staid by the gayer young folk.

One young man who was a friend of Ben's "tried to go with her," as he expressed it to her brother, but she seemed so unconscious of any special attention and treated him so exactly as she did the other young men that the poor fellow felt aggrieved and appealed to Ben for sympathy and advice.

Ben listened to his woes. He had called at the Delands thinking to spend the evening with Jessie, and she had gone off to some society meeting. He had called on Sunday night, thinking to walk to church with her, only to find her already gone. She would accept his escort home one evening and perhaps again she had gone off with Ben or some one else before he had had an opportunity to speak to her.

Ben said, "It's Jessie's way; she don't understand that you mean anything. If you want to go with her you must tell her so. I don't believe she'll do anything different unless you do, even if I tell her what you say."

"Perhaps she wouldn't then," said the discouraged lover, and he straightway married another girl, and no one ever knew whether Jessie had intentionally discouraged the young man or whether she was really as unperceiving as she appeared to be. But it was a different thing to receive any kind of attention from Mr. Howard, and when Jessie put on her hat she could see her hands tremble.

"This," she said to her reflected face in the glass," this is simply terrible. To dread a tete-a-tete with a neighbor! To dread to ride this beautiful morning, yet to be afraid to refuse to go! This is terrible!" Yet with her usual self-possession she overcame her reluctance so far as to be bright and pleasant, although her manner to a man less reserved than Mr. Howard might have seemed cold.

Mr. Howard, either divining her dread of comment, or having the same anxiety himself, drove straight up the hill out of the village, then turned upon a road leading in a roundabout way to a neighboring town, over which there was not much travel except by loaded sleds. Jessie's face showed relief, and her spirits revived when she found she was not to be taken through the village. She might have a pleasant ride after all, and she entered into a conversation upon current topics with much zest.

A slight fall of snow the day before on a foundation of ice had made the sleighing perfect. The air, though clear and bracing, was not too cold. The active horse sped rapidly along the smooth roadway, shaking his mane in appreciative response to his silver-toned bells. There were stretches of glistening fields and groves of dark green touching the blue sky. There were cottages and farm houses draped in fleecy whiteness, and walls and fences festooned as with bridal wreaths. True New England winter scenery, its picturesque beauty rivaling, outshining its summer loveliness. Two or three miles from the village the road went up and over a wooded hill for several miles. As they began the ascent the horse slackened his pace and slowed to a walk. If the diversity of hill and dale, of cot and farmhouse, of wall and hedge were beautiful in their jeweled winterhood, this solitude was superb.

"How beautiful," Jessie exclaimed appreciatively, looking up through the network overhead into the sky above, and thinking in a large way of the great earthful of beauty, of the heavenful of beauty which this suggested, and of God as the source of all this wonderful beauty.

Jessie was giving herself up to her love of nature, and that love was casting out her fear. She had been sitting bolt upright, straight and stiff; but now she sank back into the soft cushions and let the rich robe fall around her with a sigh of contentment.

"Oh, how beautiful, how very beautiful," she murmured.

Mr. Howard preceived the change, and a charmed silence fell between them. Jessie noted the beauties about them; the spangled walls flanked by the brown-nutted hazels, the red-berried alders, the gray golden-rods, the broad fern fronds rising from the immaculate purity of the massed snow banks; she looked into the shadowed forest where the blue jays were holding a winter matinee, accompanied by the drum of the woodpecker, and where the chipmunks and the grays were flitting from bough to bough, and enjoyed to the full the quietness and the mystery.

But Mr. Howard, although himself a lover of the beautiful in nature, rested his eyes oftener upon his companion than upon the scenery about them; and, after a time, taking advantage of Jessie's softened mood he introduced the subject he had wished to present to her.

He did it rather abruptly and unceremoniously.

"The subject I wished to present for your consideration," Mr. Howard began, then hesitated, as if to be sure he had Jessie's attention. Jessie turned her face toward him in a listening attitude, although she was still evidently more absorbed in what the blue jays were saying than in anything Mr. Howard could have to say to her.

"The subject," he continued, "may be a surprise to you—I am sure I have never given you any reason to know what has been on my mind for some time,"—Jessie nodded, thinking how saucy that jay was chattering—"but I am sure you will give it serious consideration." That touched Jessie's conscience; if he were planning another benevolence and wanted her help surely she should be listening to him instead of to the birds.

"I feel some embarrassment, but I may as well tell you at once"—

"Yes," said Jessie, fixing her attention.

"That I brought you out here to ask you to be my wife."

If the sun had suddenly grown black, if a burst of thunder had rolled along the clear sky, Jessie had not been more confounded. Her first impulse was to get away, to flee, and she sprang forward as if about to jump from the sleigh. Perhaps she would even have done it had not her calmer self checked her impulse and her sense of humor presented at once the absurd picture of Jessie Deland floundering in the snow bank, wading in haste to escape an offer of marriage! She felt like laughing, she felt like crying, she was the maddest she had been in years.

Mr. Howard had not studied Jessie's face in the past not to be able to interpret its expression. He started up his horse that she might not carry out what he plainly saw was her first impulse, but his chagrin was not less than her distress. He began at once to apologize for his abruptness.

"I am very sorry," he said, "to have startled you so. I did not intend to be abrupt. I have thought so much upon this subject myself I did not realize, perhaps, how new it would be to you. I am a business, rather than a society man. I am accustomed to straightforward speech. I am very sorry, I cannot tell you how sorry, that I should have pained you."

This evident distress so appealed to Jessie's kindliness that she forgot in a moment her own dismay.

"Oh, don't let me distress you. I cannot comprehend you. I think there is a mistake, but do not be disturbed, it is nothing," she managed to say incoherently, in her desire to set Mr. Howard at ease and get back to their former attitude.

"I should like, if I can," Mr. Howard began, when Jessie's face assured him by a return of its composure that it would be safe to proceed, "I should like, if I can, to make you understand how I came to think of this and all that I feel concerning it."

Jessie remembered Tom's words, "He is an eccentric man and likes to do things his own way, and when he gets started it's just no use to try and stop him," and although she heartily wished she had staid at home, she resigned herself patiently to what he had to say, although feeling suddenly very tired and sick. The chatter of the birds and squirrels had lost its charm and sounded shrill and harsh; the sky darkened, the beauty of the earth had faded.

"Since my sister died," Mr. Howard was saying, "and I have been so entirely alone, I have come to feel myself almost useless except as a machine to carry on business. I have studied nature and art;—they both teach me that man ought not to live within himself, to amass wealth and information merely for his own pleasure, nor even merely for his own development. That is what I have really done, I fear; although for some years I have felt it was not the right thing to do. I have hardly known how to make a change. I do not know now. My tastes and habits withdraw me from the masses of people—"

Mr. Howard hesitated. Jessie was becoming interested; this was nothing about herself.

"It was not until I was so unfortunate—so fortunate," he corrected himself, "as to be overcome by the storm and delayed at your house that I realized how lonely I am and why. I began then to understand that I must give if I would receive. I tried a small distribution of money—"

"It was a noble distribution," Jessie interrupted enthusiastically. She had never lost her appreciation of the good Mr. Howard's money had done.

"I am glad you were pleased, I am glad if the money did some good, but my part in the affair was not quite to my taste—"

"Oh, Mr. Howard," returned Jessie in surprise, and glad also for a diversion, "I am afraid you didn't like the festival and the representation of yourself in it. I was afraid at the time you wouldn't like it, but the others all thought it so fine. I am sorry, but we never suspected you were not pleased. How kind of you to conceal your real feelings. I am so sorry!"

"Yes," said Mr. Howard, "yes, I knew you would understand, and so no one else will ever know how I felt about it. It is no matter. But you are different," he said, changing his subject abruptly. "You know how to carry forward affairs of that kind; you know how to find out ways of helping those who need assistance, and I have thought if my wealth were yours, if I could have your help in its distribution—"

Jessie began to see a humorous side of the affair. "He wants to marry me as a philanthrophic measure," she smiled to herself, feeling the situation growing easier.

"My wealth and position," he went on with conscious pride, "would put you in a position to do much more good for humanity than you can do now," persuasively. Then as Jessie's face said plainly that she could not be bought, even for the good of humanity, he added, "Of course you do not, you cannot value these things as I do—but you will learn; a woman of wealth can do anything she likes. You can carry out any of your desires, not alone for your own pleasure and improvement. You can study and travel;" he was appealing to Jessie's greatest personal desire, "you can not only do a great deal for yourself and your family, you can do for the world. You can found schools, endow colleges," Mr. Howard was waxing eloquent.

His enthusiasm took Jessie off her feet; she thought of rich women whom she had known who had done these things, these and much more. Mr. Howard was right. It would be a fine thing to do so much! He would not ask it when he knew how she felt about it; he would give away his money himself; she would give advice if she must, that would be endurable; but Mr. Howard's words demanded her attention.

"I know I am considerably your senior, but I think I can make you happy; our tastes are similar." Jessie bridled at this, then she remembered he was an artist and partly acquiesced. "Yes, with the advantages I can give you, I am sure I can make you happy. I shall not be obtrusive. I shall allow you entire freedom, and at my death you and your children," Jessie got another terrible shock, which Mr. Howard saw—"you will have at my death all my property at your disposal, and I will settle a competence upon you, quite a fortune, in your own right the day of the—the day you take my name." It was very terrible; how Jessie wished she could stop all this talk, yet she noted how fully he had thought everything out; it would be a great disappointment to him; truly she was sorry, very sorry.

"I do not know," he went on, "as I can present this subject to you in its details as it appears to me; yet I think, I am afraid, you will appreciate the advantages I can offer more than you can appreciate me." He said this so humbly, in a manner so unlike his usual dignified assurance, that Jessie was quite touched.

"I have been accustomed to think rather well of myself," Mr. Howard smiled as if he had perpetrated a joke, "but I have had habits which you disapprove. I have been accustomed since boyhood to the use of wine,"—Jessie knew he had overused it; she had once or twice seen his coachman help him from his carriage to his door,—"but I resolved for your sake to deny myself, and when I found the habit too firmly fixed I—during my absence I have been to a cure. I am cured. I am a total abstainer."

Jessie felt that her amazement was quite in order; she also felt the humiliation the knowledge that he was really a slave to a vicious habit must have been to this sensitive man, and she could not but appreciate the humility of the confession he was now making to her.

Tears gathered in her eyes and she held out her hand, forgetful of herself or her part in Mr. Howard's effort, thinking only of his humiliation and rejoicing in his victory There was manliness in him that she had always admired, despite her condemnation, and she was glad now to express her sympathy. Mr. Howard divined Jessie's impulse and responded to her handclasp in the spirit in which she offered it, but he resisted any desire, if he felt it, to take advantage of her attitude.

"As your father smokes," he went on, yet with a calmer, happier manner, "I have thought you might not object to my meerschaum, although, no doubt, I can give it up if you desire. A man often smokes to beguile his loneliness; if I had your companionship I presume I should care little for tobacco."

"Do you mean to say, Mr. Howard, you are remodeling your life to please me? I am very glad if you are re—are changing—but do you not see that these things are wrong? Do you not see that you ought to give them up for the right, whether I care or not?" panted Jessie, quite overcome with the thought that she was the center of so much consideration, and wishing to insist on the integrity of her own views.

"Oh, yes; now my attention has been called to these matters I am sure you are quite right, but you must know that I should not have regarded them in the light that I now do had I not first loved you! I love you, Jessie!"

Whether or not he had planned it, Mr. Howard had really been very shrewd. Had he told Jessie at first that he loved her she would hardly have believed him; she would have scorned the idea, but by some chance, probably because he knew himself so much in love with her, he had not said the words nor shown his feeling till by a series of advances he had fixed her attention and her interest, and had challenged her admiration and her sympathy.

"Of course I love you. I love you," he repeated with an accent of surprise that she should be amazed at the statement. "Of course I love you or I should not ask you to be my wife, nor do I wish you to become my wife until I win your love."

How very simple! Jessie had been following him through a labyrinth of arguments why she should accept him, dissenting at every step. She could not be bought nor hired, but if he loved her, that was quite another matter! She could not marry him, it was out of the question, but love—love is beautiful, love is divine, and Jessie felt herself uplifted and surrounded by an atmosphere of infinite tenderness.

"I have not spoken to let you know my feeling," Mr. Howard went on, "until I could present myself to you a man such as you could approve, such a man as I could approve for you. I assure you of my sincerity, Jessie. God forgives men their past; cannot you forgive mine? I think I am learning from you the real meaning of the word Christian."

Mr. Howard's voice and face showed the deepest emotion, and having shown Jessie his heart he said no more. Indeed, it was well; had he added one word more Jessie would have buried her face in her muff and fell aweeping.

Having controlled his emotions, he said quietly, "You will think about all this;" then they flew home, and parted with a simple "good-bye."

"Think about it." Jessie could think of nothing else. However she might fix her mind upon other subjects, this was ever present.

After that Mr. Howard resumed his habit of dropping in at the Delands's cottage, to Rob's intense delight. His manner toward Jessie, as toward the others, was the same as formerly, except that he oftener drew Jessie into conversation, till gradually she began to exert herself to entertain him. So the winter wore away, and in the spring the town was electrified by the startling news that Mr. Howard and Jessie Deland were married and had gone to Europe on their wedding tour.

The King's Daughters circle had their talk about it.

"So he gave us the money because he was in love with Jessie," said Miss Bismere, contemptuously.

"I'm not sure of that," corrected another. "That thousand dollars made an outlet in Mr. Howard's heart—"

"Big enough to let Jessie in," laughed another.

"Well, I'm glad! I don't believe, generally, in such a difference in the ages of a man and his wife, but Jessie—"

"Isn't so very young," put in a sweet sixteen-years-old academy girl.

"But Jessie is sedate," continued the matron in a severe tone, "and now Mr. Howard's immense wealth will be of some use to humanity."

"Mr. Howard might have made that remark himself," whispered the irrepressible schoolgirl.

"I don't know," commented another. "Mr. Howard'll have a good wife, but I'm afraid for Jessie. He ain't exactly a drunkard, but he's always had his wines for dinner, and I don't believe in these sudden reformations. He's a gentleman and a rich man—if 't was anybody but Jessie Deland—"

"It is Jessie Deland," exclaimed one of Jessie's friends. "And Jessie would never marry except for love, and she would never love unworthily. I can trust both Jessie's judgment and her heart."

And in these views even the most doubtful came to acquiesce. The predictions of good were well-founded. Jessie was true to her principles and her character, and her husband was true to his love and to his promises.

Those who visit their home come away feeling that under that room is the Enchanted Land, and that the enchantress is Love. And the love in that home reaches to the humblest dwelling place in the town.

PALMER NEWS.

A $50,000 FIRE SUNDAY NIGHT.

The Opera House in Ruins.—Narrow Escape for Surrounding Buildings and a Large Part of the Business Section.—Good Work of the Firemen.

An alarm from box 68, at the corner of Main and Walnut streets, called the fire department out at 11.30 Sunday night to what proved the worst fire the town has seen for years. Indeed, it is doubtful if any other conflagration in the history of the town caused so great a loss; certainly not when all things are taken into consideration, for in this fire valuable historical papers were destroyed which simply cannot be duplicated nor their contents even recalled.

The firemen were quickly on hand, and found that they were wanted at the opera house block on the corner of Main and Central streets, a fire showing itself in the wall between the shoe store of R. J. Henry and the drug store of O. P. Allen. It was not a very large blaze when first seen, but spread rapidly, aided by a couple of explosions in the drug store, and it was soon apparent that the whole building was doomed. The flames shot rapidly up the tower on the Main street corner, which made an excellent chimney, and spread through the opera house on the second floor as though feeding on tinder. The hose was quickly attached to the hydrant by the Flynt Company's office, but the firemen were unable to open it, and the hose had to be taken a block west to the corner of Main and Walnut streets,from whence two streams were soon playing on the blaze. But the delay had enabled the fire to gain a tremendous advantage, and the water seemed to have little effect upon it, one reason being that the second floor was now well ablaze, where the water could not reach. The hydrant at the Flynt office was finally forced open, and another stream added. The chief engineer waited anxiously for the arrival of the steamer, expecting that the horses which usually draw it would respond as a matter of course, but none appeared, and finally the crowd was importuned to draw the apparatus out, and did so through the snow, locating it at the corner of Central and Pleasant streets, from which two splendid streams were soon playing, one on the north and one on the east side of the fire. These streams did good work in checking the spread of the fire in these directions, for as soon as they were well at work it was seen that the fire could be handled by the home department, and the help which had been asked for from Springfield was notified that it would not be needed. But the fire was not out by any means. Indeed, it seemed as though it were only just started. There was little or no wind, but the woodwork of the burning block made a hot fire, and the Feeney block across the street to the west was smoking like a steam engine. If that caught the one next west was also doomed, and in that case, with the efforts of the department necessarily divided, the stopping point was doubtful. To the north on Central street was the market of F. D. Thompson, and next the Masonic hall, all connected, while close beyond the latter was the house owned by W. C. Dewey. To the east was the residence of Dr. William Holbrook, only 30 or 40 feet from the burning block, with barn in the rear, while between the latter and the block was another house, setting back from Main street and only separated by a driveway from the doomed building. Truly the situation was precarious, to say the least. But the fire department worked hard and intelligently, and although the men could not save the block, they managed, little by little, to fight back the fire and finally get it under control. From the roof of Thompson's market a strong inch and an eighth stream from the steamer was thrown through the windows into the fire, the side of the building affording the men a shield from the heat and giving them a chance to work. From one window to another they worked, wetting down the interior and keeping the fire at bay. The heavy cornice on the roof burned off and hung in the balance, and the wall of the building bulged threateningly outward at the center, but the men stayed until warned by the crowd that they were in great danger when they came down. A few minutes after the cornice fell, but at once the stream was back again, and to this stream and the daring of the men who controlled it the Masonic bodies owe the preservation of their property. Meanwhile another steamer stream was doing good work at the rear of the building, and from this source also the fire was driven in and prevented from spreading to the other property. The hydrant streams could do little but protect the buildings to the west on Main street. The occupants of these blocks were pretty well scared, as indeed they had cause to be, and packed up their goods. Town Clerk Shaw took time by the forelock and removed the town papers and his own books to a safe place. H. C. Strong, in the block next west, packed up his household effects preparatory to getting out if the fire crossed the street. The office of the Flynt Building and Construction Company on the south side of Main street was getting a scorching, and west of it the Eager and Lynde blocks were in some danger, while the Masons removed the furniture from their rooms on Central street. But the fire worked away from them, and the occupants were not obliged to move. The Feeney block got the worst scorching, and a look at the Central street side, with the knowledge that a three-story wood block burned to the ground within 60 feet of it, will cause the observer to wonder how it escaped destruction. The peculiar feature of the fire was the slowness with which it spread on the ground floor. As stated before, the flames shot up the partition to the opera house and across its large open space with wonderful rapidity, but not until after the roof had fallen in and not even the rafters were left were the stores at the east end of the block on fire. It was as if the upper floor had been bodily removed.

The block was occupied by R. J. Henry, boots and shoes; O. P. Allen, druggist; Robinson & Taylor, groceries; E. L. Davis, fancy goods; G. A. Bills, market; John McBride, barber; L. H. Conant, paper hangings; B. P. Morse & Co., printers and publishers of the Palmer Herald. With the exception of O. P. Allen, R. J. Henry and L. H. Conant, all saved their books and papers, though Mr. Morse and Mr. Carpenter had a narrow escape from the Herald rooms, the smoke nearly overcoming them. In Henry's shoe store Thomas Cook had his cobbler's bench, and lost the most of his tools, while Thompson's market was damaged by water, the cornice of the burned block making a hole in the roof when it fell. The losses and insurance were as follow:—

H. P. Holden, block,	$20,000	$17,500
B. P. Morse & Co.,	7,000	4,950
O. P. Allen,	6,000	4,000
Robinson & Taylor,	5,500	4,000
R. J. Henry,	4,000	3,000
E. L. Davis,	3,000	1,000
G. A. Bills,	1,500	500
L. H. Conant,	600	400
F. D. Thompson, water,	200	insured
Thomas Cook,	100
Feeny estate,	50	insured
Dr. William Holbrook, paint blistered,	25	insured
Flynt B. and C. Co., paint blistered,	25	insured

The cause of the fire is considerable of a mystery. Walter, son of O. P. Allen, was in the drug store and several times heard a crackling sound, like the building creaking in the wind. He thought this was what he heard and paid no attention to it, but happening to go to the rear of the store discovered smoke coming from Henry's shoe store.

RUINS OF THE OPERA HOUSE BLOCK

He ran to the box and pulled in the alarm, returning at once to the store, followed by Dr. H. H. Eayrs. When they reached it they found the fire working through the sheathing about the center of the store on the side next Henry's, and tried to put it out with pails of water, but to no avail. They then saved what papers they could before the smoke drove them out. The only reasonable theories are that it originated from the stovepipe of the stove in the shoe store, which ran up through the ceiling about opposite where the blaze seemed the fiercest, or from something in the cellar, though what could start it there is not quite clear.

Notes of the Fire.

The insurance adjusters have settled with E. L. Davis and B. P. Morse & Co., paying them the full amount of their insurance.

A glance at the out of the ruins above, and at the nearness of other buildings to that burned, will show what efficient work was done by the firemen.

W. H. Laird, one of the firemen, had his shoulder dislocated by a fall from a ladder on Central street while attempting to carry up a stream from the steamer.

The W. C. T. U. ordered hot coffee of Landlord Pierce of the Converse House for the firemen, but Mine Host refused to allow them to pay for it, for which the members are naturally grateful.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock desires to thank the citizens who so willingly responded to the call to drag out the steamer when the horses failed to show up; also all who in any aided the firemen at their work.

Mr. Holden deserves credit for the prompt manner in which the streetwas cleared of the ruins. The debris was tossed into the cellar and a fence up at the inner edge of the sidewalk, to protect pedestrians, by noon Monday.

Quite a large piece of cement from the water pipes was taken from one of the hose nozzles, and three bullheads, each about three inches long, were found against the strainer over the steamer's pumps when it was disconnected from the hydrant.

One of the peculiar things in connection with the fire was the number of persons who knew nothing of it until the next morning when they came down street. Some who lived only four blocks away had not the slightest idea of the loss until morning.

It is probable that the ground will not remain long without a building upon it, as the site is too valuable. Mr. Holden proposes to rebuild, but will not be likely to include a public hall in the structure, which will probably be two stories, with business places on the first floor and tenements on the second.

G. A. Bills will be found at his old stand in the basement of the Lawrence block; Robinson & Taylor have bought out Thompson & Bannister on Central street; O. P. Allen will open in his old stand in Lawrence block next week; E. L. Davis will go out of business; L. A. Conant will find some place and open again soon; B. P. Morse & Co. are yet undecided what to do, as is also R. J.

Fortunate it was that the ground and roofs were covered with snow. Had they not been there is no knowing what the loss would have been, for sparks sailed upward in showers and distributed themselves all over the west part of the village, even as far as the residence of A. T. Wing. Had not the back yards and roofs been protected by snow numerous other fires must have been set from these. Another fortunate thing was the absence of wind.

An alarm was rung in from box 68 again at one o'clock Wednesday morning for a blaze in the ruins. It was supposed that the fire was out, but the strong wind had fanned a remaining spark into life and it had for fuel the oil tank in the cellar of what was Robinson & Taylor's store, and the flames were shooting to the top of the third story of the timber still standing. The firemen got the small hose cart out of the house, but it stuck in the deep snow and they were compelled to carry hose on their shoulders to the blaze, which they did, getting water on in just 14 minutes from the first stroke of the bell.

The records of the Congregational society, from 1847 down, were burned in O. P. Allen's store, he being clerk of the society. The records of the parish were saved. Dr. Allen is greatly mourning the loss of many pages of manuscript of the Allen family genealogy, which he had nearly completed, and which represented something like ten years of work, besides the expenditure of much money. Included in it were many facts regarding the life of Ethan Allen, facts which many biographers have sought in vain for, and which have never been published; the blow was a hard one, as a great proportion of the matter cannot be duplicated, even if the author had the time at his disposal. Much town history matter was also destroyed, as Dr. Allen had in preparation a supplement to the town history, having gleaned many facts from old residents now dead, and of course this is irrevocably lost. Over 400 botanical specimens belonging to the Natural History Society, all mounted for preservation, were also lost.

The Blizzard Locally.

After trying hard for several days to give us some snow "Old Prob" finally got to work Monday in good earnest, and the result came near being a blizzard. As it was the storm was of no mean proportions. Snow fell fast and furious all day, and at night it had reached a depth of about 14 inches, being quite heavy. During the storm the wind blew fearfully from the west, and the roads are badly drifted in consequence, travelers by team reporting drifts as deep as eight feet. The railroads suffered in consequence. On the main line of the Boston & Albany road the plows were kept running, and trains were but a few minutes late. The Ware River road was not quite so fortunate. The train from the north due here at 10.10 a. m. arrived at 1.30, having been stalled at Williamsville, where the snow was 18 inches deep. The scraper car was sent north at 2 p. m., and returned after Sedgwick's train, which came in an hour and a half late. It went north again at 3 a. m. Wednesday. Trains on the New London Northern road were about on time Tuesday, the tracks having been kept clear by the plows, though the train from the north was 50 minutes late in the morning, having a hard time climbing Belchertown grade.

Left Town Suddenly.

Oliver LaSalle, undertaker, and proprietor of the barber shop in Caryl's block on Main street, concluded Tuesday that another locality would be fully as congenial to him as this, and disappeared, nothing having been heard from him since. The cause of his going was a visit from the overseers of the poor of Brimfield, who have been called upon by the town of Warren to support a young woman and her child, of which latter the girl says LaSalle is father. The young woman's name is Bloomer, and she at one time worked as a domestic in LaSalle's family here. F. E. Cook, chairman of the overseers of the poor at Brimfield, called on LaSalle Tuesday, and he agreed to see the girl, but instead hurriedly left town. He left behind a wife and five children, who have very little means of support. His shop has been attached for rent, and is being run by a keeper, while bills of sale for much of his undertaking stock are held by other parties.

The Journal's Art Series.

Orders beyond all expectation have poured in for "The Magic City," the art portfolio which the JOURNAL is giving to its readers. The first copies which went out brought in orders by the score, and in a short time the supply, which was supposed to be amply large, was exhausted. More have been ordered, and all who wish them will be supplied. If you have not secured part one do so at once. Part two will be ready for distribution to-morrow, and will be fully equal to the first. Next week part three will be ready Friday afternoon.

F. W. Hovey has gone into the insurance business.

Mrs. W. A. Barnes is visiting friends in New Haven, Ct.

George Cross of North Brookfield spent Sunday with friends in town.

Miss Clara Hastings of Westfield spent Sunday with Mrs. C. L. Gardner.

Miss Lottie Bray has a position in the business and editorial office of the JOURNAL.

The Woronoco Whist Club is contemplating a sleighride for next Tuesday evening.

Miss Emma Duplisses of Meriden, Ct., spent Sunday with her mother in this place.

Miss Nellie Johnson and Miss Richardson of Springfield are guests of Mrs. W. F. Waite.

N. S. Ingraham has moved from G. W. Lyman's house on Pleasant street to Pearl street.

Edwin S. Gardner was home from the Friend's school at Providence, R. I., over Sunday.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club meets next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. E. G. Hastings.

The young people of the Baptist church are talking of a sleighride to Ware to-morrow evening.

C. T. Brainerd has filled the ice house of the Forest Lake Company at Forest Lake this week.

Miss Ella of Terryville, Ct., has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Thayer for the past week.

A special meeting of the Young Men's Library Association is called for this evening at 7.15.

C. H. Bannister will remain with Robinson & Taylor, and care for the customers on his order route.

Mrs. J. H. Tuthill has returned from a visit to her son, Rev. C. Julian Tuthill, at Saylesville, R. I.

Smith & Co. present in another column a few of the prices which are prevailing just now at their store.

A. H. Barber, living on the Dutton farm near the Four Corners, has bought the milk route of O. B. Sikes.

Mrs. W. S. Anderson of Westfield was the guest of Miss Nettie Coleman a few days the first part of the week.

Miss Sarah Loomis broke her wrist last Friday evening by a fall on an icy sidewalk on West Main street.

Mrs. LaSalle will continue in the undertaking business, acting as agent for Mr. Baker of Three Rivers.

Mrs. A. W. Thayer is superintendent of the newly-formed Junior Endeavor society at the Congregational church.

Miss Amy Warner, who has been clerking for S. H. Hellyar & Co. for some time, has returned to her home in Boston.

Mrs. Mary Mack, 85, one of the oldest Irish residents of the town, died at her home on River street Wednesday morning.

The Lend-a-hand society of the Congregational church will meet next Monday afternoon with Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock.

S. S. Taft has opened a law office in the Court Square Theater building in Springfield, but will not give up his office here.

The fine weather of yesterday afternoon brought out scores of sleighriders, and the streets of the village presented a lively scene.

W. H. Hitchcock has taken a contract to place a heating apparatus in H. C. Norcross's new house at Monson, and also to do the plumbing in the same house.

The primary department of the Congregational Sunday School cleared about $30 by its fair and entertainment Wednesday evening. The entertainment by the little ones was unique and pleasing.

J. J. Conway has taken the agency for Palmer for Grey & Lambert, undertakers at Ware and Monson, and can be found at his home, the upper tenement of the house next west of the JOURNAL office.

The Learners and Workers Class in the Congregational church parlors next Tuesday evening will have for its subject "The Third Tour," and will discuss incidents 62, 63, 64 and 65 in the Life of Christ. Everybody is invited.

Dr. H. M. Anger has received an appointment for three months as house surgeon at a large hospital for children in New York city. At the expiration of this time he will return to complete the course at the Post Graduate Medical College.

The Woronoco Whist Club met with Miss Helen Robinson Tuesday evening, when the prizes for the second quarter were awarded, Miss Jennie Eastman and Mr. Deane winning the first, Mrs. B. P. Morse and Dr. Bryant the booby.

People who have tried to determine the time of day by the western face of the town clock have been somewhat at sea for several days. During the sleet storm of a few days ago the hands became frozen to the face, and have stood in that position since.

A rehearsal of the music to be used in the Young People's service at the Congregational church next Sunday evening will be held in the church to-morrow evening at 7 o'clock, and all who can sing, especially the young, are requested to be present.

George Starkey of Brimfield, who has been serving a two-months sentence at Springfield for drunkenness, will be released next Monday, when he will be rearrested on the charge of setting fire to the buildings of F. E. Cook in that town on the night of November 29th, and brought to Palmer for a hearing.

Col. Olin, secretary of state, with Capt. C. H. Potter, U. S. Army, Capt. John Anderson, U. S. Army, and Mr. M. H. Grant of Springfield were the guests of A. J. Northrop last Saturday, leaving for Springfield on the 4.17 train with a high opinion of Palmer as a health resort and an excellent place for fishing.

Mrs. Helen Warren Auger and her pupils will give the first of a series of Friday afternoon recitals Feb. 9th, at 3.30, which all who are interested in music are invited to attend. Short essays and explanations on musical topics will be read. These will be given fortnightly at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Hastings.

There were no schools in this village Tuesday. The teams brought the scholars from Bondsville and Thorndike, but one driver refused to come back at noon if the storm continued, while the other declined to wait more than hour before carrying his load back, so on account of the severity of the storm all were sent home.

The pay station at Warren, in the store of E. Fairbanks, has been added to the Palmer telephone exchange, and communication with that place is now free to subscribers to the Palmer exchange. The offices of the Palmer and Monson Electric Company and of the Postal Telegraph Company were connected with the exchange yesterday.

Ladies who have occasion to take their children to a barber will no doubt be glad to learn that there is one shop in town in which no smoking is allowed, either by employes or customers, and where they can go without being annoyed by the tobacco and cigarette smoking so likely to infest such places. Joseph Provost is the first to make such a move in Palmer.

By the way, whose business is it to see that the hydrants are in condition to be used in case of fire? A glance at the snow accumulated about some of them, by natural causes and by the careless disposition of that removed from adjacent sidewalks, would convince even a casual observer that it would be hard getting a stream from them with any degree of alacrity in case of fire.

For the past month or two subscribers to the telephone exchange have been greeted by a new answer when they rung up the central office. Instead of the old "hello," the answer has been "Palmer." The new answer is to assure the caller that it is the central office and not some one else on the line who has answered. The same method is used in all the exchanges throughout New England.

Palmer came near having another fire Monday evening. The members of W. H. Laird's family on Converse avenue thought they smelled smoke, and on investigation found that the chimney was on fire, while the stovepipe in an upper room was red-hot, and the paint and woodwork just about to blaze up. Prompt action and a liberal use of salt in the chimney prevented serious damage, however.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Mission Circle of the Baptist church was held at the residence of Mrs. A. S. Campbell Wednesday afternoon and evening. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. A. E. Fitch; vice-presidents, Mrs. L. G. Parkhurst and Mrs. W. S. Smith; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. E. C. Washburn; solicitor for memberships, Mrs. L. E. Moulton. In the evening supper was served, and a musical and literary programme carried out.

The Quaboag Literary Circle had a very interesting meeting last Friday evening. Mr. H. C. Strong presented an able paper on the Dutch settlement in New York; Mrs. Strong read the "Round Table," a current event paper sustained by the ladies. At the next meeting Dr. Stowe gives a paper on "Early Slavery in Massachusetts." To become a member of this society affords a pleasant opportunity to review and learn about the salient points of American history.

It is suggested that the town buy the land on which the opera house stood and put up a block thereon, in which should be offices for all the town officials and vaults amply large for the town records and other such matters. The space on the ground floor not occupied by these would be in good demand for business purposes, and the town would get good interest on its money by the investment, besides having its officials properly housed. It is a matter which will bear the consideration of the voters.

J. K. Barker, brother of Mrs. Walter Winter, who has been visiting his sister for some time, left for his home in Caribou, B. C., Monday. He had about 7000 miles to go, and can reach home in about nine days of continuous travel if there are no delays. He is a mining engineer, lives some 250 miles from a railway, and will have about 600 men at work under him in a few weeks. Mr. Barker came to this village when there were only five houses here, and left 43 years ago, not having seen the place since.

At the Congregational church next Sunday morning the pastor will discuss the question, "Are the Friends of the Saloon Correct in Declaring this Town Paralyzed by Rum?" In the evening the service under the care of the Men's Club will be entitled, "The Days of Thy Youth." As it is Christian Endeavor Sunday, the Y. P. S. C. E. will attend in a body. A chorus of young people will sing, and the pastor's address will have for its subject "The Call of the Seventieth Century to the Young People of To-day.

Miss Bacon, of the State Board of Charities, who inspected the house at the town farm a couple of weeks ago, recommends some changes, and says that others must be made soon. The closets must be separated from the house, and connected by a passage way; some way of heating the upper rooms must also be devised. It is also recommended that more room be provided, in order to further separate the men from the women. Should the present average of inmates be kept up for any length of time more room will be absolutely necessary, the average now being from 20 to 22, against 12 or 13 previously.

The Ladies' Social Union of St. Paul's Universalist church held its annual meeting in the church parlors Wednesday afternoon and elected these officers: President, Mrs. H. A. Northrop; vice presidents, Mrs. B. C. Sumner and Mrs. Maria Lawrence; secretary, Mrs. Ellis Dodge; solicitor, Miss Annie Fish; entertainment committee, Miss Brigham, Miss Ida Smith, Mrs. F. R. Lawton. The report of the treasurer showed a balance of $132 on hand. Supper was served at 6, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook and Mrs. C. E. Fish providing, and a large number were present. After supper there was an entertainment of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, etc.

"For ye have the poor always with you." But if problems are to be judged by their demonstration there are no poor in Palmer, at least none of the unemployed poor who would like work, about whom so much has been said, and to assist whom a relief committee was chosen a few weeks ago. Tuesday morning there was a foot or more of snow on the ground, and consequently the walks needed clearing, but there were few or no applicants for work in this line. There were many men, and not a few women who have no men in their families, who would have been glad to pay a good sum per hour for the work necessary to clear the walks in front of their houses of snow. There must be something wrong somewhere.

At St. Paul's church next Sunday Rev. Mr. Moulton will speak on "The Relation of the Christian Church to the Unchurched Masses." Praise services will be continued in the evening. A short sermon will be delivered by the pastor, followed by the singing of familiar hymns written by women. Most of our hymn writers lived in England, or if in America in the cities. One of the hymns to be used next Sunday evening was written by a woman who lived in Monson for nearly 30 years. The lines were written in answer to a gossiping neighbor, and were not published for many years, yet it is to-day in the hymn books of nearly every church in America and in foreign lands. The sketches given of these old familiar hymns have proved very interesting, and will be continued fortnightly during the winter.

The entertainment under the auspices of the Firemen's Relief Association, which was announced for the 13th at the opera house, will be given in the Congregational church instead, and promises to be the best Palmer people will have an opportunity to see this season. The Old Homestead Quartette needs no better recommendation than that it has seven successive seasons with "Josh Whitcomb." Many Palmer people have heard these singers, and all these will be sure to attend if possible. There will be a bit of comic opera from "Pinafore," with Mr. Willis Chamberlain as "Capt. Corcoran," and Mrs. W. P. Mattoon of Springfield, with whom Palmer people are familiar, as "Little Buttercup." For the reader Miss Mildred Baker, the popular "Hebe" of the Springfield Opera Company, has been engaged. These, with the Philharmonic Orchestra, nine pieces, of Springfield, will give an entertainment well worth the price asked, 50 cents. Tickets will be on sale at LeGro & Lynde's next Wednesday at 9 a. m.

State Primary School Notes.

The schools closed to-day for a week's vacation.

The ice house is being filled with 10-inch ice of good quality.

William J. Cameron of Worcester has taken the position of engineer, and entered upon his duties yesterday.

Dr. Gable and Miss Page, agent of the State Board of Charity, gave an Observation Party Tuesday evening. At 9.30 refreshments were served, and shortly after the company dispersed, having spent a most enjoyable evening.

E. G. Buss received a letter last week from General N. P. Banks, under whom he served in the disastrous Red River engagement. The General's disability compels him to have all his communications written by his daughter, and this seems the more serious when contrasted with the exceptional vigor and enthusiasm he possessed, and which is clearly indicated in a photograph of himself taken in the prime of life, which accompanied the letter.

BONDSVILLE.

Mr. and Mrs. King of Brookline are visiting their daughter, Mrs. F. J. Haile.

Miss Lettie Loucks spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Bowen of Belchertown.

Mrs. Celia W. Carroll and son Frank have been quite sick with the grippe this week, but are some better.

Mr. Thomas Russell and Mrs. Thomas Bruce and son Gaven visited friends in Gilbertville last week.

Emerson Hastings of Belchertown has sold his farm to Frank Emory, and has bought the Ed. Keith place near Whipple's Crossing.

Mr. Fuller, the teacher of the grammar school, is contemplating an entertainment to raise money for the school organ fund, provided 150 tickets can be disposed of.

Mrs. Mary E. Davis was married to Mr. John Derry at the residence of Frank Davis in Hartland, Ohio, the 19th of December. The bride is well known here and in Ludlow, where she was organist in the Methodist church for a number of years.

William Brown, formerly in the employ of C. L. Holden, and Patrick J. Brown, until recently employed by Jerry Shea, have gone into partnership under the firm name of Brown Brothers, and are prepared to do business at Jerry Shea's old stand.

THORNDIKE.

The school children are talking up a sleighride.

On account of Tuesday's storm the schools held no session that day.

James Ronan of Pittsfield was in town during the past week, visiting friends.

Some of the yardmen at the mill have been put on short time during the past week.

Miss Annie Robinson of Chicopee is visiting her uncle, James Roy, for a few days.

Dr. J. A. Dorval has resumed practice in town, and has his office at the Clinton House.

John Rankin, who was injured a few days ago while chopping in the woods, has fully recovered.

The local court of Foresters is still adding new members at each meeting, and is in a prosperous condition.

Eugene DeCoteau, who has been quite sick for some weeks past, has recovered so as to be able to be about again.

A pleasant party was given at Mr. P. Trumble's at Palmer Center on Thursday evening, which was enjoyed greatly by those present.

The Metropolitan Insurance Co. of New York, of which Thomas J. Moran is agent, has paid to the heirs of the late John Molloy $1000.

Warren Trumble, who has been confined to his home for several days with the grippe, is now attending to his duties as night watchman at No. 1 mill again.

Several people living on farms outside the village had hard work to get in on Wednesday, the snow being drifted in some places as high as five and six feet.

Walpert, the clothier located in the Clinton House block, has done a large business since his arrival a few weeks ago. Joseph Domfay, formerly of this place, is clerking for the firm.

John Moran, formerly of Spencer, has been in town during the past few weeks in the interest of L. Kasky & Son of Spencer, manufacturers of weather strips, and has done much business for them.

Now that there is no place in Palmer, on account of the recent fire, in which to hold shows and theatre performances, we naturally look for a share of the traveling companies to visit this place during the winter.

The people in general were more than surprised on Monday morning to learn of the large fire at Palmer Sunday evening. Although such a short distance away, but little was known of it here until early Monday morning.

The "Shamrock and Rose" will be presented this evening at Union Hall, followed by a social dance, and with favorable weather a large crowd is assured. Parties are expected from Warren, West Warren, North Wilbraham, Three Rivers, Bondsville, Monson and Palmer.

O. B. Sikes, who has been in the milk business in this village for some years, has sold out his route to Mr. Barber, who resides on the Dutton farm. The change took place this week. Gene Sikes, who has been on the route, has made many friends among his customers, and they will miss him much. Mr. Sikes will go into the creamery business exclusively.

THREE RIVERS.

Charles Barker is again able to be out after several weeks' illness.

On account of the storm there was but one session of the schools Tuesday.

Edwin Walker is again able to be out, after a severe illness of a few days.

C. P. Haynes brought three handsome gray horses this week of the W. N. Flynt Co. at Monson.

Miss Anna Murdock and Miss Adelaide Walker spent Saturday and Sunday at the home of the latter in Belchertown.

Rev. Mr. Weeks baptized four young men last Sunday evening. This is the second time the new baptistry has been used.

A. S. Meserve, a former resident of Three Rivers, visited F. A. Ruggles Thursday. Mr. Meserve at present resides in Worcester.

Miss Mattie Goshen, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Tarbox of Ware, left for Saco, Me., Wednesday morning, to visit her mother, who is quite ill.

Miss Lilla Bryant, who has been stopping with Mr. Orcutt several months, returned to Portsmouth, N. H., yesterday to complete her studies at the training school for teachers.

The ladies of the Monday Evening Club got up a sleighride to Monson last evening. About twenty went down in Twiss's new sleigh, and had supper at the Cushman House.

The trains on the Athol road could not make all of their trips Tuesday, the drifts were so deep, and Wednesday the afternoon freight was stalled in the yard here for three hours on account of the deep snow.

On account of the very severe weather of Friday and Saturday Rev. Mr. Jordan of Worcester was not able to reach Three Rivers until Tuesday. Mr. Jordan is an able and interesting speaker, and is drawing large audiences.

Dr. Demarais performed a successful operation the first of the week on a case of chronic cynovitis of both knees. Only a few weeks ago he treated a case exactly like it, this case the disease involving but one knee, of a lady who for thirteen months had not been able to take a step, and had been treated by eight physicians during that time. To-day she walks as well as anyone, without pain or any limp.

A Narrow Escape in the Storm.

Alec Ropelle will not soon forget the storm of Tuesday. During the early afternoon, while at work on the ice for C. P. Haynes, he fell into the water and got a wetting. Before he had had time to thoroughly dry his clothes he was obliged to leave with several others for Mr. Haynes's wood lot. The storm was so severe and the roads so impassable that at seven o'clock, after nearly four hours' labor, the teams had covered only about four miles of ground. Mr. Popelle had then become so chilled and numbed that he could not proceed further. His companion took him to the house of R. D. Foskit on the Belchertown road, and asked for shelter for the night. Mr. Ropelle by this time had no use of his limbs, and was insensible. Mr. Foskit's family did everything possible for him, and the next day he was able to get to the logging camp, but is still suffering from the effects of his cold ride.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 2, 1894.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Mrs. Fanny Bradford has the grippe.

Levi Bates is quite ill with kidney trouble.

John Letter built and filled an ice house last week.

Elliott Brown has purchased a sleigh of Ralph Clifford.

Henry Robbins of New Haven spent the first of the week in town.

Mrs. Chickering of Worcester is the guest of her brother, E. L. Wales.

A. L. Squier of Wesleyan Academy is sick at his home on Green street.

Mrs. William T. Brown of Norwich, Ct., is the guest of Miss Nellie Squier.

Ralph Clifford took the Monson House help on a sleighride last evening.

Miss Lottie Cummings of Stafford Springs, Ct., is visiting Miss Helen Howe.

Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Stebbins of Worcester are visiting at the old homestead on East Hill.

The monthly meeting of the school committee will be held in the town hall this evening.

Lavater Munn and wife of Springfield are visiting relatives in town, driving out on Thursday.

A sleighride of 20 couples from Three Rivers spent Thursday evening at the Cushman House.

The Dorcas society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. William Gifford Wednesday afternoon.

The selectmen have been kept busy since the storm of Tuesday, breaking out roads in the out-lying districts.

William Bolter has purchased a farm at Amherst, and expects to move his family there the first of March.

Sunday night was a busy one for the liverymen, there being a great demand for teams to go to the fire in Palmer.

Albert M. Guilford, who has had an attack of the grippe, is now able to be at his work at R. M. Reynolds's straw works.

Dr. Jackson and Dr. Fuller are attending the patients of Dr. Sawin of Brimfield, who is still confined to the house by illness.

The funeral of Mr. McNall, who died Sunday evening, was held Wednesday afternoon. Mr. McNall was an old resident.

Festus Cooley is meeting with good success in selling a unique "Family Register," and pictures illustrating Biblical subjects.

W. N. Flynt will give a dinner to-morrow to the stockholders of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co. at the Cooley Hotel in Springfield.

Miss Betsy O. Fletcher, 88 years of age, died from the grippe Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Truman Watress, her nephew.

Dr. G. E. Fuller started for Wales Tuesday to visit Dr. Sawin's patients, but was obliged to return, owing to the height of the snow drifts.

Mrs. Peck, who has been spending some time with her daughter, Mrs. Edgar Squier, left last week to visit friends at Stafford and New London, Ct.

A dancing class of eighteen members, taught by Miss Filer of Springfield, was entertained by Mr. and Mr. S. F. Cushman, Jr., last Friday evening.

Herbert Smith and his men have this week filled Pendergast's ice house from Ellis's pond. Burdick's pond has furnished Mr. Pendergast in the past.

Bernard Bradley recently met with quite an accident; while chopping a chip flew in his eye, and it was feared for some days that he would lose the sight of it.

Mrs. Susan E. Thrall, president of Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps, will attend the department convention of the order held in Boston next Wednesday and Thursday.

Daniel Kennedy died at his home on the "plains" yesterday morning of pneumonia. Mr. Kennedy was employed at Heimann & Lichten's, and worked until Friday night.

Miss Annie Parker died at her home on Main street yesterday afternoon of consumption. Miss Parker was a graduate of the high school class of '93, and was a young woman of estimable qualities and a general favorite.

The Ladies' Schubert Quartette of Boston will give a concert in Memorial Hall under the auspices of the senior class of the Academy, assisted by Miss Alice Girardeau, reader this evening.

Miss Mabelle Flynt gave a "Heart" party last Saturday evening in honor of her friend, Miss Tyrrell, of Hartford. The prizes were unique, and the winners were F. L. Cushman and Mrs. Fred Cushman.

R. M. Reynolds kept two snow plows at work for a number of hours Tuesday, keeping the streets from the Cushman fountain passable. S. F. Cushman, Sr., kept the roads on the flat, from the fountain, passable.

James Fitzgerald had a narrow escape from fire a few evenings since. The oil from a kerosene stove overflowed, causing a blaze which set fire to some woodwork near by, but it was extinguished before any serious damage was done.

On account of the severity of the weather Tuesday many of the schools held only one session, while some did not keep at all. The storm so blocked the roads in this vicinity that travel was almost entirely suspended on the back roads.

The people of Monson were startled out their beauty sleep about 11 p. m. Sunday by the fire alarm, and many were soon on the streets trying to locate the fire. When it was found to be at Palmer the majority "homeward wended their weary way," while a few went to the scene.

A. W. Edson, agent of the State Board of Education, spoke to the teachers Thursday afternoon at the Green street school on "Essential Qualifications of a Teacher," and "History." All but two of the teachers were present. Mr. Edson visited the new State street school, and No. 1.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church is to give an orange supper in the vestry next Wednesday evening, followed by an entertainment consisting of two dialogues, a double quartette chorus, solo by Mr. Beattie, ladies' quartette, ladies' trio, and male quartette. An admission fee of five cents will be charged.

A special town meeting will be held a week from to-morrow to see what action the town will take in relation to reducing the number of the school committee from nine to six; to see what action the town will take in the matter of fire protection; to see what action the town will take in regard to continuing the present system of night poelic patrol.

Miss Agnes C. O'Grady of the Green street grammar school appeared in the famous play, "A Celebrated Case," at the Court Square theater in Springfield last Friday evening, taking the leading part of "Adrian." At the close of the play, accompanied by Master Pearl Ryan of Springfield, she sang the solo, "Come Back to Erin," in a very pleasing manner.

What might have been a serious accident but for the presence of mind of Miss Mabelle Flynt occurred last Sunday evening. A silk shade on a large lamp took fire, the young lady being alone in the room. She quickly removed it, threw it on the floor and covered it with a large rug, which put out the fire. Electric lights are now contemplated in the household.

The drama, "Odds with the Enemy," which was presented at the Universalist vestry Tuesday evening by the young people of that society, under the management of Mrs. Harlow Chapin, was a success. The parts were well taken, and the play a pleasing one. The piano duett between the acts by Miss Ethel Rood and Mr. Chandler were also much enjoyed.

Miss Emily Fozzy and John Keefe were quietly married at St. Patrick's church yesterday morning by Rev. John F. Lee. The bride wore a handsome gown of steel green silk trimmed with white silk, and hat to match. The bridesmaid, Miss Lora Fozzy, a cousin of the bride, wore a dress of steel green wool. Timothy Coughlin was best man. The couple will go to housekeeping on Washington street.

The balance of the electric light poles are soon to receive a coat of paint, the material having arrived in town. The poles from the turnouts to North Monson, and in the South village, also in the vicinity of Flynt Park, are still in their original state, but by making all alike the effect will be better, and it is hoped that the selectmen will see that all telephone and telegraph poles in town are improved likewise. It is also to be hoped that all useless poles, of which there are many, will be removed.

The fifth series of Lenten services at the Congregational church will concern especially the sacrificial work of Christ as related to modern society. The Sunday evening services will commence promptly at six o'clock, and the other meetings at half past seven. The Sunday evening services will bear directly on "Social Economy and the Industrial World in Their Relations to the Church and its Members." The following is a list of topics for the Sunday evening services: Feb. 11, "The Great Revolution;" 18, "Our Present Condition;" 25, "Some Remedies Proposed;" March 4, "The Christian Acquiring Property;" 11, The Christian Using Property:" 18, "The Coming Kingdom." Each Thursday evening during Lent the pulpit will be filled by able speakers from the neighboring cities and towns, as follows: Feb. 8, "Christ Tempted," Rev. N. Van der Pyle of North Wilbraham; 15, "Christ the Friend," Rev. A. B. Bassett of Ware; Feb. 21, "Christ the High Priest," Rev. G. W. Winch of Holyoke; March 1, "The Solitary Man," Rev. W. R. Newhall, principal of Wilbraham Academy; 8, "Christ the Servant," Rev. G. C. Baldwin, Jr., of Springfield; 15, "Christ, the Lamb of God," Rev. C. F. Weeden of Colchester, Ct.

Academy Notes.

On account of the severity of the weather Tuesday there was only one session.——Jerry Shea of Bondsville, recently a student at the Academy, has entered Holy Cross College at Worcester.——Miles Casey, formerly of the class of '96, is in St. Hyacinth College, Nova Scotia.——Mid-term examinations occur next Thursday and Friday.——There has been a large number of absentees on account of sickness the past week.——The students will have a sleighing party to-morrow, leaving the Academy at 3 o'clock for the Mansion House at Ware. It is expected that 40 at least will go.——Again death has entered the homes of some of our number. This time two of the members of the class of '95 are called to mourn the loss of dear ones—Miss Katherine Parker her sister Annie, who was a graduate of the class of '93, and one of its leading members; Miss Bridget Kennedy, her brother. The sincere simpathy of the school, both faculty and students, is extended to them in this time of their sore bereavement.

WALES.

Henry Needham has moved into the Baptist parsonage.

Nathan F. Bradley has bought the Valley Mill of E. K. Baker, and will convert it into a saw and grist mill.

The Monson and Brimfield doctors are kept busy daily here. Several cases of scarlet fever are hanging on, though none are very sick with it. The grippe seems to be the prevailing trouble with nearly all.

Zeno Farrington, one of the oldest citizens, now 80 years old, who has been confined to his home several weeks, is again seen on the street with his usual quick and active step, well suited to a man of 40 years or less.

The body of Mrs. Julia Needham, who died in Stafford Tuesday was deposited in the tomb here Thursday. She was the widow of Benjamin Needham, and a life-long resident. She was about 90 years old. At the time of her death she was on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Belcher.

Butcher Moore has been laid up for a week with the grippe, and obliged to let his business run as best it could. George Switzer and Willie Lucy stepped into the marketman's shoes Tuesday and delivered meat. They talk of buying out the business, and with their easy and winning ways no doubt would make a success of it.

WEST WARREN.

Robert Chapman has gone on a short visit to Pennsylvania.

Byron Bearce has returned from a short stay with friends in Lewiston, Me.

Mrs. W. H. Beaman of Springfield is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Amory Crossman.

The snow storm of Monday prevented the young people from taking the long-talked-of sleigh-ride.

Miss Kate White gave a kitchen dance last Friday night. There were about twelve couples present.

The ladies of the M. E. church gave a supper in the vestry Thursday evening. Epworthians furnished the entertainment.

The young people of the Catholic church are talking up a drama, but where will it be given, as the public hall is burned to the ground?

Timothy Brosnahan, son of M. J. Brosnahan, died at his father's home last week Thursday morning. He had for some time past lived in Boston.

The firemen were called out Sunday morning for a fire in Pat McKane's woodshed, on the "patch," and again Wednesday afternoon for the old Jane Grant house on the west side of the "patch."

There was an alarm given Wednesday morning for a fire in a small house owned by the Cotton Mill Co. The house was occupied by Lewis Brown, and was one of the landmarks of the town, being one of the few old houses left standing. It was fully insured.

BRIMFIELD.

Elijah Allen is confined to the house by illness.

Louis Allen, who has been at work in Amherst, is home.

Louis S. Brown is home from Boston, afflicted with rheumatism.

Mrs. Charles Sawin of Worcester visited her son, Dr. Sawin, this week.

Mrs. Albert Peirson and daughter returned home Monday from Springfield.

Mrs. John Gates is with her daughter, Mrs. Arthur Carpenter, in Charlton.

Dr. W. R. Sawin is again confined to his house, and Drs. Fuller and Jackson of Monson are caring for his patients.

The students of the high school were to take supper at the Dresser House in Southbridge, Tuesday but owing to the storm it was deferred until later.

A teachers, meeting was held at the high school building Wednesday afternoon, when A. W. Edson of the State Board of Education gave a talk on "The Desirable Qualifications of a School Teacher."

The select ball recently given by the young men was such an enjoyable occasion that another has been arranged for, to be held the 16th. Messenger's orchestra of Warren will funish music, and Deitz of Springfield will prompt.

About two hundred were present at the Union service of the Y. P. S. C. E. last Friday evening. Delegates from different towns responded to their names, with remarks as to how their society had progressed during the last two months, with the number of new members that had been added to their roll.

WILBRAHAM.

Charlie Warner of Boston spent Sunday with his mother, Mrs. A. L. Warner.

Miss Ida White of Amherst and Miss Fannie Fisk are the guests of Mrs. Williams.

C. P. Bolles is confined to the house with a sprained ankle, caused by falling on the ice.

Ira Allen and family of Springfield have been the guests of Ethelbert Bliss the past week.

In spite of the storm there was a large attence at the dance at the Allis House Monday evening.

Adelbert Eaton gave a social evening to a number of his friends last Saturday, at his home.

The board of health has ordered the children of the district schools in Wilbraham to be vacanted.

The gentlemen of the Grange are getting ready for "Gentlemen's Night," to be held at an early date.

The day of prayer for schools and colleges was observed at the Academy last week Thursday afternoon and evening.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the South church met Thursday afternoon and evening at the Congregational parsonage.

Nathan W. Storrs was married to Miss Nellie Wilcox of Hamilton, N. Y., Saturday afternoon in New York city. Mr. and Mrs. Storrs gave a reception at the Allis House Monday evening.

"The Young People's Agricultural Club" met at the home of Walter Bliss last Friday evening. Stereopticon views of the World's Fair, instrumental music, games, etc., helped to make the time pass pleasantly.

Charles Church, while in the woods one day last week, had his wagon overturned. The wagon was badly demolished and Mr. Church was severely injured by a heavy bolt which struck him on the head.

Prof. C. J. Brown, M. A., of Spokane, Wash., will give an entertainment, "Science vs. Spiritism, or Tricks and Trickery Exposed," under the auspices of the literary societies of the Academy in Fisk Hall tonight.

The Grange has installed the following officers for the coming year: Master, F. A. Gurrey; overseer, W. H. Day; chaplain, H. H. Burbank; lecturer, Miss G. J. Wetherbee; steward, H. A. Day; assistant stewards, H. A. Burbank, Mrs. Alice M. Day; Pomona, Miss Lillie Phelps; Flora, Mrs. M. M. Moseler; Ceres, Mrs. Dwight Bosworth; gatekeeper, Dwight Bosworth.

WARREN.

The King's Daughters met with Mrs. Fred Stevens Thursday afternoon.

Henry Green has rented his new house on Curtis avenue to Mrs. E. M. Holman.

Anniversary services will be held by the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church next Sunday evening at 6 o'clock.

Rev. Fr. Wren is having an addition built on the parsonage. This will give him a convenient office, and another room adjoining.

The farmers began coming to town Wednesday with oxen and double teams. They reported drifts from ten to fifteen feet high.

The marriage of Miss Alice Day to Mr. Kuntz of New York will take place at the bride's home on Coy's Hill next Wednesday afternoon at 3.30.

The total amount of property destroyed in Warren last year by fire amounts to $163,785. The insurance on the property amounted to $99,950.

Mrs. Georgia Woodard was quietly married to Charles H. Washburn Wednesday evening at the residence of Albert Woodard on Southbridge street. Rev. Harry B. King officiated.

The Strickland Epworth League of the Methodist church will hold a Washington birthday party in the town hall the 22d. An interesting entertainment will be given, and an orange shortcake supper will be served.

The Slater Engine Co. shut down their works Wednesday in order to set up a new 75-horse power engine, which has just been completed. The works will start again next Wednesday, with power from the new engine.

James F. Hill's new house, corner of East and Pleasant streets, is the first house in town done by the adamanting process, and the work looks so well that many people call to see it. The work is superintended by M. L. Preble of Richmond, Me.

Two large photographs were placed Tuesday in Hitchcock's block, representing the American Down Draft Boiler Company's boilers. It is possible that this new company will locate in Warren. Satisfactory arrangements have been made with the Flynt Building and Construction Company for foundations on the land just above the new Slater Engine company's plant. With the help of the business men this movement may be very successful.

At the annual meeting of the Warren Savings Bank Monday the following officers were elected: President, John W. Chadsey; vice presidents, Cutler Moore, E. B. Lynde; treasurer, Fred W. Kimball; clerk, E. C. Sawyer; board of trustees, John W. Chadsey, Charles B. Blair, William B. Ramsdell, Edwin Fairbanks, E. B. Lynde, Marcus Burroughs, William A. Jenks, Dr. E. J. Buck, Fred W. Kimball; board of investment, William B. Ramsdell, Edwin Fairbanks, Marcus Burroughs, Dr. E. J. Buck, Fred W. Kimball. This institution did not require notice for withdrawal of deposits in the late financial depression. The bank is a flourishing one.

BELCHERTOWN.

The Epworth League people are soliciting funds to build a parsonrge for the Methodist church.

L. B. Fletcher has sold his farm to Mr. Guest of Long Island City, and has moved to Fairfield.

Miss Lucy D. Thompson, a graduate of Smith College, returns next Tuesday to Boston, where she is studying architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mrs. Hannah Jenks died at the home of her son, F. G. Shaw, Sunday, after a long illness. She was one of the oldest members of the Baptist church, and very much respected by all who knew her. Mrs. Jenks was married twice. Her first husband, Gilbert Shaw, died several years ago. A few years ago she married the late Russell Jenks. Mrs. Jenks was the daughter of the late Charles Bennett of Ludlow. One son, F. G. Shaw, survives her. Funeral services were held at the home of Mr. Shaw on Maple street Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

A Sensational Attack on the Town.

The town of Belchertown has become suddenly famous by the attack upon it by J. M. B. Carothers, which was sent to the Legislature in opposition to the efforts being made to have the proposed new normal school located here. The letter was called for in the House Monday, but was so scurrilous in tone that after a partial reading it was sent back to the board of education. It has stirred up no little excitement in this usually quiet hill town, and on Wednesday a delegation started to call on Mr. Carothers, but he had quietly left the place. It is supposed that the cause of this attack was his arrest five years ago at the instigation of a farmer for picking raspberries which he claimed were on his land, but which Mr. Carothers alleged were on public ground. The defendant was acquitted, but there was a great deal of feeling over the matter. The letter was as follows:—

BELCHERTOWN, Mass., January 22, 1894.

To the Honorable Board of Education of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Boston, Mass.:—

Dear Sirs:—As a friend of the higher education of the masses, and in behalf of the mental, social, moral and spiritual advantages of the youth of this state, for whose special education you propose to establish one or more state normal schools, I desire to enter a hearty, sincere and emphatic protest against the selection of Belchertown as a site for the location of one such school, and to frankly and fearlessly give the reasons upon which I base my objections to Belchertown as a fit and proper place for such a school.

Belchertown is an old, dingy and dilapidated village. Every decade since the year 1850 has shown a constant and continuous decrease in the population and of the assessed value of the property of the citizens of Belchertown, as a reference to the United States census reports and the assessors' books will clearly demonstrate. The population of the village of Belchertown is little more than one-half of what it was in 1850. Decay, dilapidation and diminution is written in painful and legible characters upon everything inanimate, and decadence, despair and disparagement is clearly perceived on almost everything animate within the village. Unsightly holes in the ground and crumbling walls mark the spots where once stood the best and most costly buildings, and where, judging by the past history of the place, these ruined walls are likely to remain for years as monuments to commemorate the lack of thrift and enterprise of the inhabitants of Belchertown. At this very time ten of the dwellings in the village are vacant, and of these ten more than half are the best and most desirable residences in the place. At one end of the village is a piggery which never ceases day and night and year up n year to send forth smells more odious than the odors of cologne, a scent more foul than a Gloucester fish market (I might parenthetically add that there is not another village or town in Massachusetts which would tolerate the existence of such a vile and loathsome nuisance for a single day).

With such daily and constant internal and external surroundings of ruin and dilapidation, of condition and configuration, of offending odors and depressing contact with a people whose only excuse for remaining in the place is their pecuniary inability to quit it, how can it be expected that students living amid such surroundings and breathing such an atmosphere can rise above these environments? "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," and a pure, clean and cheerful encompassment is a perpetual inspiration to high resolve, exalted purpose and praiseworthy attainments.

The mountains of Switzerland made the Swiss a free people. The typical New England house was the projenitor of the thrifty, cleanly, orderly, industrious, enterprising Yankee nation. The alleys and back streets of an idle and decaying village are the producers of the scolds and scandal mongers. Everything after its own kind is the law of nature and of grace. Order begets order. Industry, not insolence, is the parent of prosperity. Success is the legitimate offspring of enterprise. Thrift does not follow fawning, but force and frugality. For the special benefit of the people of Belchertown let me add, that opportunity comes to those who help themselves rather than to those who lean upon the strong arm of the state.

As for society in Belchertown, the paragraph can be written in the same concise way in which the chapter on snakes in Ireland was written. "There are no snakes in Ireland," and there is no society in Belchertown; certainly not in the sense in which Webster defines the word society. "Persons living in the same neighborhood who frequently meet in company and have fellowship." The only social meetings in Belchertown of which I have any knowledge is when two or three kindred spirits meet together to defame and trounce the stranger within her gates. A well-dressed and intelligent person seen within the sacred precincts of this village never fails to arouse the strongest anathemas and to call forth the most bitter invectives of a majority of the citizens. I doubt very much if Stanley ever met with a less friendly tribe of people in all his travels through darkest Africa than are the people of this place.

I will consider the moral and spiritual influences of the village of Belchertown in one year, but the show is not one of four-footed beasts, but largely of two-footed brutes. Farmers do not meet in a spirit of friendly rivalry to capture the prizes for the best cattle; it is a yearly gathering of all the dissolute characters within 20 miles, who meet for a drunken revelry, and as they say "for carrying off the horns for punishing the largest quantity of bad whisky." It is more demoralizing than a prize-fight, for the women and children are permitted or compelled to listen to, or hear the obscene speech and bacchanalian songs of the vile people who attend it from year to year. At the last cattle-show, and I make the following statement upon the current talk of the village and the information received in person from more than a dozen of its prominent citizens, there were not to exceed 50 cattle on exhibition, and the lowest estimates of the number of persons in attendance is 10 000; but there is a great difference in the general estimate of the number of empty whisky flasks and bottles picked up in the village the day after this modern Donnybrook fair, this estimate varying in quantity from one to three cart-loads. A charming and glorious town in which to educate teachers for the instruction of the youth of the "Old Bay State."

Bands of dissolute and indolent men and unregenerate and immodest women, calling themselves "Crusaders," have been known to visit this place and to have been received by its people with open arms, hearts and purses. The village contains one licensed tavern and three churches. The person to whom was issued the license to sell liquors is under indictment for the violation of his license. Two of the churches are without pastors. One of these is practically closed for want of support. Of the other it must be truthfully recorded that from a large, harmonious and prosperous congregation its numbers have been so greatly reduced that the present average attendance is not one-fifth of what it was 40 years ago. Of its social element and entertainment at the present time the less said the better it will be for the reputation of its members for Christian charity and brotherly love; but I will venture to quote at this time one single sentence from one of your own poets, Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"Provincialism has no scale of excellence in man or vegetable; it never knows a first-class article of either kind when it has it, and is constantly taking second and third rate ones for nature's best." The pastors of this church are always seeking new pastures, and its members always seem willing to act out the maxim, "Short settlements make long friends."

In the other church, which has a pastor, and to and from which he comes and goes as the bishops direct, the present pastor practically preaches to empty pews. On the Sunday previous to last Christmas day I attended divine serrve in that church, having been previously informed there would be special and appropriate services. There were just 26 saints and sinners within its sacred walls, the pastor and myself included in the former. The citizens of Belchertown do not desire the location of a state normal school in their place because of any inherent desire or love they have for the cause of advanced education, or of those who may be benefited by the establishment of such a school. "It is because," as was said by one of her leading citizens within my hearing, "they believe it to be Belchertown's last chance to keep the place from growing over in underbrush." It is the despairing cry of the people to the state board of education to save their village from becoming a deserted hamlet.

Finally, to conclude the whole subject I frankly and considerately aver that I know of no place within the commonwealth so illy adapted for the location of a state normal school as Belchertown. I further beg to say that a visit by your honorable board to the place and a thorough inquiry into and investigation of all the facts which I have herein stated will fully verify their correctness as well as the soundness of the position which I have taken and the force and fairness of the statements which I herein submit to your wise and careful consideration. Respectfully submitted,

J. M. B. CARUTHERS.

WARE.

Miss A. B. Wheeler of Hardwick has been appointed teacher at district No. 8 school, in place of Miss Ladd, resigned.

The selectmen, at a meeting on Monday evening, agreed to instruct Henry C. Davis, town lawyer, to take legal action against C. P. Morse, chairman of the late board of road commissioners, to compel him to give up the books of the commissioners and all other property now in his keeping belonging to the town.

The fire department was called out Monday night to a fire in Vigeant's on Aspen street, caused by setting a kerosene lamp on a stove. When it became heated up it caused a small blaze. A girl by the name of Phaneuff was somewhat burned. But little damage was done to the house.

The severe storm of snow on Tuesday delayed travel on the railroads considerably. The morning train from Winchendon on the Ware River road due here at 9.39 did not arrive until after noon, being stalled at Williamsville. No freight trains were run either way. All the schools in town were closed all day.

During February the Sunday evening services at the East Congregational church will be in charge of the men's Bible classes. There will be responsive services of worship, singing by a male chorus, and a short gospel sermon by the pastor. A prayer meeting for men will be held at 6 o'clock in the church. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 31, 1894.

Ex-Gov. Long and his fellow commissioners on state house construction have made out a strong case against the present front. Their charges are serious and merit attention. I have seen the worm-eaten chips of timbers in the dome, and the chalk-like borings from the heart of those timbers where it ought to be strong, solid wood. Something will have to be done before long. At the same time it is true that the erection of a new state house is going forward without any well-considered plan for the whole. It began with the extensive straggling down the hill to the rear, with solemn assurances that never, no, never, would a hand be lifted against the present state house. But long before the extension is ready it is found that the front part of the old building is dangerous and ought not to stand. So it is proposed, at an added expense of $1,500,000, to build a new front. Then we shall have what was never planned as a whole, but has grown as a piece of patchwork. It is proposed to preserve the present aspect of the state house as far as possible, but to make it 40 feet longer in front and 60 feet higher.

A plan for positive caucus reform is contained in the bill which has been proposed to the Legislature by the special committee of the Legislature of 1893 upon better caucus arrangements. The points of the bill are stated as follows in the report of the committee:

1. "That ample notice be required to be given of the times and places where caucuses are to be held.

2. That a secret ballot be required at caucuses.

3. That caucuses of any particular party in the same town, city or district, be required to be held on the same day.

4. That sufficient opportunities be required to be given to all persons desiring to vote at a caucus to do so.

5. That provision be made to prevent the same person from voting in more than one caucus held to nominate candidates to be voted for at the same election.

6. That all caucuses of the chief political parties in cities and larger towns be required to be held under the provisions of law."

The Socialist Labor party has many irons in the fire this year, and will be heard from all out of proportion to its numbers.

A gentleman who is well situated to know inside matters in the remarkable struggle which is going on for the proposed new state normal school says that it would not be strange if the numerous towns and cities defeated their own object by making so strong a push for it. Certainly the equal of this sight has not been seen at the state house for many a day, and the sharp competition for this school is keener than any competition for the location of a business establishment which I can recall. It is a laudable and healthy competition, and if it indicates an equally strong popular desire on the part of these cities and towns to get the best in the educational line, it is still more commendable. This gentleman says that it is pretty certain that the small towns, such as Hinsdale and Barre, which are petitioning, will not get the school, because it must go where are public schools with enough pupils to furnish good practice schools for the normal scholars. He says that a city which has never yet been mentioned would be an excellent place for the school,—Haverhill. There is no normal school in that part of the state. The location is beautiful,—better than in Lowell, which is petioning for one, and the extension of the electric car service through the Merrimac valley brings Newburyport, Lawrence and Lowell all within easy distance. The chief issue is whether the school shall go to a large place which will furnish many advantages and will absorb the school so that it will make no showing there, or whether it shall go to a town where it will have fewer people to depend on, but where they need something to put them forward.

The poor quality of the construction of the new wing of the state prison is seen in the fact that when the prison committee of the council visited it Wednesday they found that no provision had been made by which the escape of prisoners through the roof was to be prevented. Accordingly they will recommend that $10,000 be appropriated to cover this oversight. Some members of the House want to investigate the entire system of labor at the prison.

The movement for the abolition of Fast Day, which began this year with the Lexington Historical Society (which wants April 19, the anniversary of the battle of Lexington, made a holiday instead) is far more widespread than it was last year. The society seems to have worked up the case all over the state with great assiduity, and petitions have poured in from all quarters for the abolition of the historical old day. Nobody is making any protest, and the judiciary committee will report a bill to abolish the day. So if its friends have any idea of doing anything, they must be up and doing, or the bill will be passed before they can rally.

A great deal of liquor legislation is proposed, and many plans are pending, both to relax and to strengthen the present laws. But the great liquor fight of the session is expected to come over the effort to introduce the Norwegian system of trusting the business to private companies, who give licenses and can make only 5 per cent profit on their business. The Faxon temperance people will oppose it.

LANDON.

CARD.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union tenders sincere thanks to Landlord Pierce of the Converse House for his kindness in serving hot coffee to the firemen free of expense the night of the fire in this village. Per Order.

A Blessing Indeed.

What would this poor, weak humanity do were it not for those strong, noble, restless spirits who are ever searching the caverns of knowledge for the good of mankind? Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who a few years ago gave to the world that priceless boon, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, has now introduced another blessing for the sick and suffering. He is the most successful specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases, and he offers to everyone, far and near, the opportunity of consulting him, free of charge, through his system of letter correspondence.

Write him about your complaint and send for his symptom blank, and he will return you an exact explanation of your case, with advice, free of charge, and tell you how you can be cured. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and his answer always gives the sufferer a perfect understanding of the disease. If you wish to avail yourself of this great physician's skill, write him at once about your disease and you will undoubtedly be cured.

The new India silks have come.

We had much to say last year on the perfection of these fabrics, and especially on their color effects. Never before had such silks been woven, never before was such printing done, and now we have to add, never before was such richness, fullness, breadth and variety of pattern-making by printing on any fabric whatever.

We should like to tell you how they look; but they look so many hows it'd take us some time to picture them five seconds apiece; can't do it, you know; can't get away from a pretty India silk in five seconds. Left aisle of main store.

French sateens of many new patterns have come. The patterns are mostly of a delicate character, generally little figures on plain and brocaded grounds, 25 to 37½ cents.

The general assortment of fine cottons grows larger every day. Few of a kind, but kinds without number. Right aisle.

An extraordinary money's-worth in black dress fabrics. It comes now and then, but is quickly gone. Just now four all-wool fabrics are going below value.

	Per yard.	Value.
Black cashmere, 37 inch,	.39	.50
Black whipcord, 40 "	.50	.75
Black poplin, 40 "	.55	.75
Black wide-wale serge, 44 "	.50	.45

Right aisle.

There never was such a steady stream of people after jackets and wraps—never such jackets or wraps at the prices.

Women's jackets,	$3.00	$2.00	$4.00
Women's newmarkets,	2 00
Women's coats,	7.00	9.50	11.50
Women's wraps,	7.00	9.50	11.50
Women's capes,	7 00	9.50	11.50
Children's gretchens,	1.00	1.50	2 00

New building.

We propose to get our share of the carpet trade of Springfield and round about. How? Same as we got our share of other trade, by serving better and charging less. Second floor of new building.

And shoes! We propose to get our share of the shoe trade. How? A price may be $3 here and $4 elsewhere; never $4 here and $3 elsewhere. New building.

PHYSICIANS SAY SO.

The only way to cure salt rheum, eczema pimples, boils, blotches and ulcers is by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. "I used numbers of so-called blood purifiers, writes Mrs. Belinda Hodsdon, of Haverhill, N. H., without benefit, until I began to take Favorite Remedy. Although suffering from an ulcerated sore leg, a few bottles entirely cured me." 44

Offering you a preparation containing the highest order of ingredients, free from all opiates, harmless even to a baby, and a request to return the empty bottles and get the amount paid for the full ones if no cure is effected, is our way of gaining your confidence. If there were any better ingredients we would use them. We cure our patients or get no pay.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.
Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

Mr. Howard's wealth and position bring Mrs. Howard into close social relations with what is called the "best society," but she has given up none of her former associates. Her family, the church, the Y. P. S. C. E., her shop acquaintances, are as dear to her as when they were her all. In her work with the King's Daughters she had known and sympathized with the poorest and most uncultivatd, and all these relations she has kept up, making friends everywhere, as a simple, gracious, loving woman with means and leisure always can make friends.

"No woman given over to the pleasures of society entertains more than Mrs. Howard.

"Everybody goes there," is said. "You never know whom you are going to meet." Her receptions are always enjoyed, and in the company there are always families from those of humble means, people who do not attend receptions elsewhere, good people, yet people who have never learned the manners of polite society. At Mrs. Howard's receptions such people meet people of culture and distinction. They get a glimpse of a higher social life than their own; the best that is within them is developed; their manners are softened, their speech is improved, their intellects are quickened, they are led to think and to read, and to talk about their reading; they are led also to restrain the hasty word and the quick temper, and to live before their children broader and truer lives. The many clubs for mental improvement that have been formed are training schools in which young and old are fitted for the social life at Mrs. Howard's. She does not form the clubs. She always says, "They wanted me to help them in their clubs, but I am a learner myself, you know," and she invariably adds, "I help what I can, and Mr. Howard helps me."

When her philanthropy is referred to by strangers to the town, as it often is, she says "It is not philanthropy. The people you meet at our house are our friends. I visit them and we invite them here because they are our friends,—just as we invite you," she often laughingly adds, and then there is nothing more said about philanthropy.

All the organizations for good work feel the quickening influence of Mrs. Howard's personal enthusiasm, and Mr. Howard's business ability and wealth.

The Y. M. C. A. is prosperous in a fine new building, and young men spend their evenings there instead of in rowdyism upon the street. I cannot tell you how many young men in distress, in despair, open to temptation, or even giving way to many temptations, have been environed by elevating influences, drawn into the society of the strongest young men of the place, helped to overcome their besetments, established in integrity and sobriety through the influence of the Y. M. C. A., aided and abetted by the Howards.

The academy students, formerly so exclusive, have come to know the young people who work in the mills and factories, and they have found, often to their surprise, as great intelligence and as eager a seeking for knowledge here as in their own set. Especially has the influence of the strong Christian young men among the students been exerted for good over their less fortunate and often weaker brothers.

Jessie's ideal for the children has been realized in a kindergarten partly supported by the town as one of its free schools, and the older children of the public schools are helped in many ways; while the Sunday school scholars are taught to reach children who have no religious instruction and to bring them under Christian influences.

All this uniting of the forces of the intelligent and Christian working people with the leisure class for the uplifting and redemption of the weak and the vicious is producing a wonderful change in the intellectual, moral, social and religious life of this beautiful country town.

It is generally thought that a man's love affair and marriage is about as personal a thing as possible, but all credit to Mr. Howard, we must agree with him when he speaks of his marriage as "a Providence of God." FRANCES VIRILLA DOANE.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY PORTIA.

"I suppose she is pretty?"

The questioner, who was herself an unusually pretty young woman, sank into the luxurious rocker by the fire as she spoke, and lifted her vivacious brunette face to the earnest gaze of her companion. He, on the hearth-rug beside her, his broad shoulders squared against the mantel, his fine head bent slightly toward her, continued his gaze in silence for an instant before he replied decisively: "Unquestionably so!"

"Well, what is she like? Do tell me something about her. Good gracious, how hard it is to get anything out of a man!" said the little woman, resentfully; and then, as if in expiation of her hasty fit: "Dear me! Suppose it was a woman who had come to ask my sympathy in a love affair; why, by this time I would have known what he looked like, how old he was, and what was his business, his religion, if he had any, what style of dress he affected, how he talked, how he walked—in short, I would have known him anywhere, without having to wait for an introduction!"

"My dear Constance," replied the young man, with a quiet laugh, "remember kindly that I have been in your august presence only for the space of ten minutes, and I unfortunately have none of those wonderful powers of imparting knowledge that womankind in general is blessed with. In brief, I am a man, and at best a very slow man—'slow but sure,' you know! Bear with me a little, though, and I will try to answer your first question and tell you what she is like. Mind, I say 'try;' for, to tell you the truth, her style is such an uncommon one, I hardly know how best to tell you."

"I'll forgive your slowness only on one condition—that you go staight ahead now and tell me all you know."

Tom Nash bowed to the small autocrat and turned from her, leaning his elbow on the mantel and staring into the fire.

"She is quite tall," he began, reflectively, "and symmetrical and graceful to a marked degree; she carries herself like a duchess, and her gowns always fit and suit her to perfection; she has a wonderfully low voice that thrills and enhances one, and a limitless abundance of tact that makes her always say and do the right thing in the right place. Her coloring is as distinctive as everything else about her; her eyes are indescribable—I can only say they are at once soft and gay, bright and dark—their color I have never discovered; her hair is like nothing so much as a great coil of Etruscan gold; her mouth is full and red and inexpressibly sweet; her expression changes with every new thought; her name is Catherine Douglas; she is entrancing, and I—"

"And you are head-over-heels in love with her, and so are half the men in town—and no wonder! Your description of her is worthy a poet. In reality she is a nineteenth-century Portia, whose 'sunny locks hang on her temples like a golden fleece.' And I, as a worthy representative of the honored name of Nash, even if I did show the poor taste to change it for the more unpretentious one of Grey, bid you take my blessing, charge into the midst of the fray, and win the prize." She was looking up at him with her bright enthusiastic smile, but his expression caught little of the light of hers as he answered, with an unmirthful laugh:

"Easier said than done, my fair cousin."

"Not at all! I am surprised at you, Tom. I thought you were a man of stronger will, to whom the rashness of a cause gave zest to the pursuit."

"That may have been the case in my relations to life heretofore; but remember, please, that this is neither a fox-chase, a swimming-match, nor a hand-to-hand fight."

"On the contrary, it appears to me—begging your pardon for any insinuation—that it is all three, and a combination to fire the spirit of any man."

"By Jove, Constance, there's something in that!" he said, laughing in spite of herself.

"Of course there's something in it, and a great deal in it," answered this determined small woman; "and now, not meaning to be inhospitable at all, I must remind you that it is long past your office-hour; and a young lawyer just beginning in life, especially one of settled matrimonial intention, and recently possessed of an office behind his own shingle, cannot afford to spend the golden hours away from it, even though talking about the most charming woman in the world to—the second most alluring."

"Thank you, my dear; you are right, as you always are," and then as she sprang lightly to her feet to help him on with his overcoat: "But you have not yet advised me what course to pursue."

"And indeed I don't intend to!" was the gay response. "You were only a little down, and needed brightening up a bit, you know. I have shown you your mistake; now go on your way serenely, and I know by happy experience that you are well aware of the way to a girl's heart. Whichever path you choose is sure to be the right one, so don't hesitate again. Do your best; and if you do I shall have the happiness of giving my Easter ball in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Nash."

He kissed her with a face radiant at last, and went off to his office, encouraging his faint heart, as he walked along, with the almost forgotten copy-book phrases of his boyhood days: "Don't cross the bridge till you get to it," "Better face a danger than be ever in fear," and "Where there's a will, etc."

"I will try my fate at once," he said. And when he went out to lunch, he carried in his pocket an envelope bearing the address of Miss Catherine Douglas, Washington Square.

In that same Washington Square, in a big stone house whose old-fashioned door-plate bore the respectable name of Wentworth, along with a bearing of confident good form, sat, in his library, a man already past the prime of life, yet who carried himself with the elasticity of younger manhood; whose hands moved with nervous quickness among the papers on his library table, and whose rugged face would induce a second look because of the combination of that same ruggedness with the almost appealing tenderness of his blue-gray eyes.

These kindly eyes looked more in need of sympathy than ever, this wintry afternoon, as they wandered an instant over the great lonely room, himself the only occupant. They traversed its splendid length several times, and came back at last to the table before him, and a heavy sigh escaped his lips. Then, after a moment's pause, he took up the pen and for half an hour forgot his surroundings, and was in his imagination with the fair siren who had furnished inspiration for the letter to which he finally signed his name. He read it over, then sighed again, and came back to earth once more. A few minutes later he came out of his front door with the letter in his hand, and, as he descended the brown stone steps, accosted pleasantly a young gentleman who was at that moment approaching.

This was Cassaday, the well-known writer of fiction, whose last book had created such a furore, and who, combining, in addition to his acknowledged unusual cleverness, a pronounced charm of person and manner, was now quite the lion of the day in social as well as literary circles. He returned the older man's salutation, and they went on their way together.

"Wonder how fat he is going?" pondered young Cassaday, as block after block was traversed by them. And, as if in answer to his thought, the other remarked presently:

"I am just going down to the florist's."

"Indeed!" ejaculated his companion. "Quite a coincidence! I am going there myself, for some—umph! umph!" clearing his throat, "for I hear they have some beautiful new varieties of orchids, and I imagine you are going down to see them."

"No, I am going for some roses," said the other, simply.

"So am I," mentally observed Cassady again, "but I don't, like you, care to tell everything I know; and I'll take in the orchids on the way."

In the florist's establishment they parted. The young author stood before the orchids, apparently lost in silent admiration; but their delicate charm was lost to him; that spirit in his brain was repeating over and over: "I wonder which she would really like best—if my taste would be hers! Oh, well, well, uncertainty is worse than death to me. I will try to-day to look at the world through roseate glasses while I can, and so I will take the true roseate hue—pink. They shall be pink."

Turning suddenly he came near running into a tall young fellow hurrying out.

"Hello, Nash!" he called after him. "Pardon my awkwardness, please."

And the other nodded back at him, saying; "Certainly, old fellow; I should have kept my eyes open."

And so it was that the morning sun, streaming gayly into a dainty boudoir, lingered loveingly on a mass of shining hair that fell in wondrous waves of unconfined splendor about the flower-like face of a girl, and beheld in that same face a look of unfeigned perplexity as it bent over the roses heaped on the table before her. Three great bunches—red, pale-gold, and pink—breathing their hearts out in an incense of perfume: these yellow blooms she quickly separated from the rest, and, looking down at them with a long-drawn sigh, said meditatively: "Which shall it be?"

Then she took three letters and read them over slowly, one by one. Each was directed in manly chirography to Miss Catharine Douglas, Washington Square. The first that she opened ran thus:

The roses which I have chosen, in the hope that you will carry them at the ball this evening, are yellow—and you may censure my shortsightedness in asking you to do so without regard to their possible unfitness for your costume. Yet I am imploring the smile of the fates to-day.

"When I first saw you, you wore a yellow gown; it was at a yellow tea, not many moons ago; I was persuaded by a friend into going, and I have never known until since that time what a friend he was. He brought me to you!

"Need I tell you I lost myself then and there? Yes, I mean it—lost myself—and have never recovered my identity except in your presence!

"Let my roses plead for me with your heart! All that I can offer you is all that I have—my love and my life. I may be poor, but I can work; and the world's rewards, though they be great, will seem small without out; but with you the blessings of heaven, because they are for you. I have told you all. Is it yes or no? Whatever the verdict, I would sign myself

Faithfully yours,
THOMAS H. NASH."

She lifted the long yellow buds as though they were tender living things, and held them a moment beneath her yellow hair to her smiling lips. Placing them on the table beside her, she thoughtfully opened the next.

"To the American beauty this cluster of her blushing namesakes! May she honor them to-night at the ball!

"Forgive my importunity; I feel I cannot longer bear this terrible strain of uncertainty. You are my one thought—my vision by night, my waking dream by day; my life and my fortune are very lonely; only come to them, and the sole aim of the one shall be for the perfect happiness of the presiding angel of the other. But mere repetition is useless—for repetition it all is to you, however worded! I can say no more—my heart is too full.

Yours and yours only,
BENJAMIN WENTWORTH."

She sighed softly as she finished, yet stood looking, with happy eyes for several minutes down at the splendid crimson blossoms held against her breast, before she placed them by their paler sisters and took up the last of the letter trio. A few lines said:

"May the Mermets pray a fairer Catherine to smile upon their donor! Remember, you promised me my answer soon; give it to me to-night—my heart is famished!

"Wear one rose for me, and it will be a badge of greater fame than the world has yet vouchsafed me. Wear one rose for me, queen of my soul, and remember always that I am for all time,

Yours,
WARREN CASSADAY."

As she bent low over the dewy petals, her face flushed as bright. After a pause, she said clearly:

"I must decide, and at once! Yet how can I? Which do I most like—the yellows, the Mermets, the Beauties?"

She gathered the open letters together in her hand.

"I will walk to the other end of the room once," she went on, as if talking to the flowers; "and when I come back, I will choose. I love—wealth and fame and—love."

She walked slowly down the long low room, her white gown trailing after her, and her waving hair seemed to scintillate as she moved. Slowly, step by step, she went, until she reached the farther door, paused but an instant at the threshold, and turned, her face glad with the triumphant light of satisfied decision. One hand held the three letters lightly against her heart. She did not speak again as she came toward the flowers, but her eyes were on the yellow.—The New Peterson Magazine.

HON. L. P. STRICKLAND.

Hon. L. P. Strickland, of 58 Taylor street, Cleveland, Ohio, says:

"I have taken Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy since last spring and I feel like a new man. It has cured me of chills, hot flashes, bloating after eating, cold feet and shortness of breath. I have also had a fistula for over twenty years, and it is almost gone now. I cannot express how thankful I am that I used this wonderful remedy."

This wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, is purely vegetable and harmless, and has come to us through the skill and labor of a great physician. It has met disease, and it is conquering it all over the country. It is acknowledged to be the greatest of all medicines in overcoming diseases of the blood and nerves and all complaints arising from poor blood or weakened or diseased nerves. If you are suffering from any of these diseases, such as nervous debility, poor blood, weak nerves, dyspepsia, liver or kidney complaints, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the greatest conquerer of disease, and your system will be freed from all impurities and complaints. The doctor can be consulted at his office, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free, personally or by letter.

"VENI, VIDI, VICI."

A New Application of the Modern Phrase.

It Concerns Us All More Deeply Than Ever Before.

A Far Greater and Nobler Use of the Term Than the Original One.

How frequently we make use of popular quotations, and we do so because they describe so accurately our feelings. The heading of this article, meaning, I came, saw and conquered, was first employed by Julius Cæsar to describe one of his victories, but even this great man little realized the magnitude of what might be involved in his famous expression. Recent events have called forth the use of it in a grander and more sublime meaning than ever before.

Mrs. I. E. Ditmar, who resides at 806 Parker St., Roston Highlands, Mass., says:

"I had been suffering for four or five years with dyspepsia, indigestion and constipation, experiencing constant and severe pain in the stomach. For years I ate scarcely anything, and could take no food without suffering the greatest misery. I had also been afflicted for five or six years with chills and fever.

"I was induced to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and now, after taking four bottles of this wonderful medicine I am now entirely cured of all these complaints. My appetite has returned, I can eat without distress, and the chills and fever have entirely left me. I consider it a wonderful cure and I cannot speak highly enough in favor of this medicine."

HON. L. P. STRICKLAND.

Hon. L. P. Strickland, of 58 Taylor street, Cleveland, Ohio, says:

"I have taken Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy since last spring and I feel like a new man. It has cured me of chills, hot flashes, bloating after eating, cold feet and shortness of breath. I have also had a fistula for over twenty years, and it is almost gone now. I cannot express how thankful I am that I used this wonderful remedy."

This wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, is purely vegetable and harmless, and has come to us through the skill and labor of a great physician. It has met disease, and it is conquering it all over the country. It is acknowledged to be the greatest of all medicines in overcoming diseases of the blood and nerves and all complaints arising from poor blood or weakened or diseased nerves. If you are suffering from any of these diseases, such as nervous debility, poor blood, weak nerves, dyspepsia, liver or kidney complaints, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the greatest conquerer of disease, and your system will be freed from all impurities and complaints. The doctor can be consulted at his office, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., free, personally or by letter.

What is
CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.
"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

Castoria.
"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

What Then?

What then? Why then another pilgrim song,
And then a hush of rest divinely granted,
And then a thirsty stage (ah me, so long!)
And then a brooklet when it most is wanted.

What then? The pitching of the evening tent.
And then, perchance, a pillow rough and thorny.
And then some sweet and tender message sent
To cheer the faint one for to-morrow's journey.

What then? The wailing of the midnight wind,
A feverish sleep, a heart oppressed and aching;
And then a little water-cruse to find
Close to my pillow, ready for my waking.

What then? I am not careful to inquire.
I know there will be tears and fears and sorrow;
And then a loving Savior drawing nigher,
And saying, "I will answer for to-morrow."

What then? For all my sins His pardoning grace,
For all my wants and woes His loving kindness;
For darkest shade, the shining of God's face,
And Christ's own hand to lead me in my blindness.

What then? A shadowy valley, lone and dim,
And then a deep and darkly rolling river;
And then a flood of light—a seraph's hymn.
And God's own smile forever and forever.

From Mrs. Maiwaring's Journal.

A ROMANCE OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The ticket-taker noticed, as she came through the gate, that she limped a little. And he noticed, too, that she smiled at him pleasantly, which made him conclude—quite correctly—that she was not from the city, and that this was her first day at the Fair, and that it was a very great occasion indeed, for her. He was actually mean enough, was the ticket-taker, to keep his foot lingering on the iron release a moment before he let the turnstile swing to admit her, just for the sake of seeing her look puzzled. The ticket-taker might not have done this if it had been a busier hour of the day. But it was still early in the morning. There were few in the fair grounds yet, and the young woman looked around in some surprise at the almost empty avenues that stretched down between the buildings.

Her limp seemed really painful to the ticket-taker, as she made her way over to where a group of young theological students stood silently together by their "gospel chariots," as the irreverent newspaper fellows had dubbed their wheeling-chairs. Some of them were raw-looking fellows, and appeared much more fitted for the wheeling of chairs than the exercise of oratory in the pulpit or elsewhere. Some looked weak and inane, as if they had not positiveness of character to do anything but pray. But there was one among them who was standing straight on his legs, as an athlete naturally does, and there was something in the lines of his firmly-closed mouth and pose of his head that made the young woman go up to him and ask him what the price of his chair and his services were for the day. Not that she had any need to ask, for she had read all about it in the papers, and calculated on it very carefully. But she asked by way of opening the conversation. The student took off his blue cap and answered her slowly, and with an accent of indifference that somehow was not just what Mary Stuart had been expecting. Her own blood was tingling in her veins. It was almost unbearable to her that she was really at the Fair at last—the Fair which had been before her eyes as a sort of glorified vision for two years, and for which she had saved and planned and sacrificed.

It seemed to her that everybody must have been working just as she had been to get there, and that it was only natural that their voices should be tingling with enthusiasm. She felt for a moment as if she would have liked to change her young man and get one who seemed less criminally indifferent to the glories of the moment, but she was too shy to do that, and she made her bargain and seated herself with some embarrassment in the chair, blushing as she was rolled away, to feel that the eyes of the young students were on her.

She was very light weight—so light that the well-oiled chair, on its easy bearings impelled the pusher to walk faster than he intended, and he had to use a little resistance to moderate its pace. The little black sailor hat she wore had no trimmings, but was swathed in a fleecy black veil, as the young man noticed on looking downward. The simple black gown had neither crinoline nor flounces, as he noticed also, but merely wide white cuffs and collar, and the high tan boots and gauntlet gloves had been selected with careful reference to each other. One foot was a little shorter than the other, as was evident even as they rested on the little shelf on the chair. So much, the young man casually noticed, that the body was very slight indeed and had a sort of tension in it, as if nerves and muscles were on the alert.

"Where do you wish to go?" he asked, perfunctorily, as he had asked many previous mornings of his "freight." But the answer was not forthcoming. Instead, the young woman wheeled around in her chair and looked up at him with some distress on her pale face.

"I haven't an idea," she said. "I haven't been here before. This is my first day. I'll only have five days here. I might have had seven, only it takes a day to come and another to go. I want to see just as much as I can. I've been saving for two years to come here. I'm a typewriter and a stenographer. I can't walk much at a time, or I'd never have thought of taking a chair. If it hadn't been for taking a chair it wouldn't have been so hard for me to come. But you see how it is. I haven't been to school much, and I thought I could get a good deal of education here. Perhaps you can tell me how. It's very important to me."

The morning wind blew her reddish-brown hair about her face a little under her veil, and made her cheeks look paler than ever. Nathan Ingersoll stopped the chair and looked down at her a moment. He had got in the way, during his thirty-odd days already spent at the fair, of keeping his personality well out of sight. At first, to be sure, he had permitted himself some feeling of personal interest in the woman he wheeled about the grounds, and had ventured on a few occasions to forget that for the time being he was a paid servant, and had let his thoughts speak themselves in their accustomed way. But he had suffered three or four rather severe rebuffs, over which he had good-naturedly smiled, saying they were really just what he needed, and that they were good training. But, all the same, he had smarted under them, and for the last two weeks had kept himself well in hand, and been as indifferent to the person he was pushing around the ground as they were to him. Now, however, there seemed to come into sudden existence a new condition. Evidently, this was a case that involved some moral responsibility. And Ingersoll was almost morbid on the subject of moral responsibility.

The red-brown eyes, which matched the half-curling hair so perfectly, were still looking up at him. Ingersoll smiled down on them with an unconscious eloquence that came from his youth and his strength and his masculinity.

"I'll do my level best," he said, heartily, all of the indifference gone out of his voice, "and if you don't see what's best to see in the time you are here, it won't be my fault."

"Oh," said Miss Stuart, almost breathlessly, "do you mean it would be possible for me to have you—to have this chair, I mean—every day?"

Ingersoll laughed outright this time. She was evidently very much confused lest there should seem to be something personal in this request.

"You can have this chair every day," he replied. "If you come as early as you do this morning—that is, if no one gets me—that is, the chair—before you do. I think I could manage to keep in the background and not to make any engagement until you came, if you think it will help you to see the fair systematically by having the same guide every day."

"That's exactly what I meant," said Miss Stuart gratefully. "It would be such an economy of time and energy. We would know just where we left off, and wouldn't repeat ourselves."

This seemed very business-like and thorough, and grounded upon such a commonsense basis the good feeling between the two began to appear quite natural; any sense of timidity that there might have been vanished immediately.

Of course, it was a different day from others. How could it be otherwise? All the thoughts that had been stirring in Ingersoll's mind insisted now in breaking out of their shells and trying their wings now that he had a listener.

"It's the apex of the century," he cried enthusiastically. "This mass of finished materials, this marvellous architecture, this meeting of the nations and the handicraft of the nations, this putting together of all sorts of energies!"

It sounded a little soporific, to be sure. He looked down a little shyly to see if Miss Stuart were laughing; he knew her name by this time. But, so far from laughing, she had quite a rapt expression, as if she was concentrating all of her thought on the hour and surroundings. It got so after a time that she ventured bits of confidence.

"I've been in the same office three years," she said once, "and the man there has never said a word to me during all that time except to dictate letters. He doesn't even say good morning when he comes in or good night when I leave. I haven't missed a day in that whole time, and have hardly made a mistake in my work. He pays my salary, but doesn't show any other mark of appreciation."

"The clam!" ejaculated Ingersoll, which was, perhaps, a little thoughtless of a divinity student.

"One Christmas," went on Miss Stuart, feasting her eyes in rapture on a case of German opals, "I thought I would see if I couldn't cure him of his grumpiness. I bought him a bunch of roses and put them on his desk. When he came he never even noticed them. And the next morning they were thrown out, though they couldn't possibly have been faded."

"Such a man ought not to——" began Ingersoll, in a wrath that could hardly be called righteous, when suddenly Miss Stuart called out that there was an opal with a red light in it, and they went closer to look at it. She liked womanly things. She almost trembled at the splendor of some of the jewels; she never wearied of the china and the marvelous tints of the glassware; she pointed out beauties in the laces and embroideries that Ingersoll could not possibly discover; and she went into the most outspoken raptures over the Felix gowns.

"You're not one of those very improved women who disapprove of feminine things, are you?" said Ingersoll.

"Oh, well," she said rather sadly, "perhaps those improved women have had all of these fine things. Shall I tell you the truth? I never even saw a great many things of this sort before. I think I'd just as soon wear them for a while as not. Then I could renounce them for a while and be just as superior as the other women."

"It's a great year for women," said Ingersoll, with just as much originality of manner as if there were something new in the remark.

"Yes," said Miss Stuart, indifferent, "but I know so few women. In fact, I know hardly any. I'm so busy. And there's only the women at the boarding house; and they don't care much for me, on account of my doing typewriting. Not that I care."

"Of course not," said Ingersoll, with conviction.

By the end of the first day they had done a good part of the Liberal Arts Building.

"It would take a week to do it properly," Ingersoll explained, "but we're adapting ourselves to circumstances, don't you see."

"I'm so much obliged to you," cried Miss Stuart. "I don't know what I would have done if I hadn't met you—or some one like you."

So ended the first day.

The next morning was dull and cold. Beyond the peristyle the gray waves dashed sullenly. The sky was like a pall. But at the hour of eight Mary Stuart limped in the gate, wrapped in a mackintosh and carrying an umbrella. Nathan Ingersoll stepped out of the group of young men and helped her to her seat. She spoke to him a little coldly. Nathan was not a young man of much experience. He thought maybe he had been too familiar. He resolved not to speak till she gave him permission. She was determined not to make a spectacle of herself again—that was what she told herself in the night she had been doing. They went to the picture gallery. He got her catalogue for her, and took one from his own pocket. They looked at the pictures silently. When she motioned to move on, he obeyed her. She wanted horribly to ask him about some of the pictures.

Why should these Frenchmen insist on making their women purple? Who ever saw a lavender woman? They are, at least, scarce. Altogether, there was an astonishing lot of canvas, considering the scarcity of clothes. Mary accused Ingersoll of being positively indecent to put her chair before some of the pictures. But everyone else appeared to be looking at them without any confusion. So she got used to it. At least, she was almost used to it. Once a remark escaped her in spite of herself.

"I don't care how beautiful a picture is," she said, "or how well it is painted—not that I am any judge of that—unless it means something."

"Ah!" said Ingersoll. Then he took her to some other pictures. There was Christ pale and infinitely sad, blessing bread among a group of modern workingmen, while they, aghast, yet full of rapture and tearful gratitude, gazed on his dear friendly face in the midst of a time so alien and so hard. There was Magdalene, the modern, in a splendid ball-room and none to pity the horror and loneliness of her heart, or even to divine it. There was the dawn of the spring day, with Corot's mystic light stealing through each dim and tender vista, and all the flush and poetry of the waking hour. The tears came to Miss Stuart's eyes. She almost thought she could hear a bird song pricking the sweet silence of that dawn.

How was it she knew her companion had thoughts like her own? How was it that little by little the silence which had begun in sullenness began to be a delight? A fuller sense of color and form seemed to break upon her. She wondered if the loneliness and dissatisfaction she had always felt had been because her life had so little beautiful in it. Every moment she seemed to understand these pictures better. She began to notice how marvelous was color! How full of wonderful gradations! When shadows like that? Were they ever so purple? Was light on plains and deserts white as those pictures showed them to be? Were women so beautiful? Was love so poetical that painters painted it always, and with such passion? How fast life seemed to be unfolding!

Her startled mind showed her suddenly the interior of the office where she had sat for three long years, and she felt again the silence—not a silence such as Corot had painted, which might at any moment be broken by the wind of dawn rushing up through the meadows, but the silence imposed upon slaves! She saw the immovable, dull, yellow face of the man she worked for—the man who could not differentitate between the machine and the woman, and thought of them both as typewriters. Why, that had not been life at all! With a gesture born of a new courage and a new delight, she threw back her head and looked up at her companion. She wanted to make sure he was following her thoughts. He looked back at her without smiling, but with perfect comprehension. And from somewhere there came a wave of warmth, delicate and touched with a sentient joy, and passed over her body, and seemed someway to bring with it a perfume and a song, and all the pictures swam for a moment in a golden haze fairer than any the artists had put on their mountain tops.

Youth is an alchemist. He will make gold for one any moment, if he is only given the right materials.

To follow the evolution of a soul—who can do that?

One day came when these two people were saying always:

"It is the last day."

Anyone who could have heard these unspoken words, and the sorrow of them, would have supposed that on the morrow creation would be destroyed. That day whatever they said was flippant. They did nothing but jest.

"Has anyone even been over there to the south end of the grounds?" Mary asked. Ingersoll shook his head doubtfully.

"I hear they are thinking of sending for Stanley," he said, "they want to know if he wouldn't be willing to penetrate them."

They got endless amusement from the people. Mary could tell whenever she met any one who was on his "first day." They did the Midway Plaisance that day. The four ends of earth seemed to have been swept together and dumped here. It was wonderful. It swept down little patriotic distinctions and all narrow thoughts of locality. These men from the Soudan, these mighty women from Dahomey, these dancers from Asia Minor, these sallow men from the spice-perfumed isle of Java, these Eskimo women who held their babies close in their arms, these dreamy-eyed Bedouins, these languid Turks—were they not all the same? To live, to love, to laugh, to hope, to weep, to die—what difference? 'Tis the same from Martinique to Madagascar! Someway, Mary had never thought of that before. The world was getting very large to her.

And it was the last day.

That night she stayed on the grounds, instead of leaving at six o'clock, as she had previously done. She wanted to see the great basin lit by electricity. Ingersoll invited her to supper, and they ate together in the Polish restaurant, though, since they had an Irish stew, they might as well have eaten anywhere else. But they didn't much notice what they ate.

The light was not quite out of the sky, when 100,000 persons stood together in silence around the still lagoon that runs from the Administration building, waiting—waiting for a thing so much a part and parcel of this century that never can the one be spoken of in ages to come and be disassociated from the other. The sky was a cold blue. Against it the exquisite building with dome, and sloping lines, and statue and tower, outlined themselves clearly and delicately. Beyond the peristyle the blue lake gleamed, and in the east there hung a star. The great white mountains poured its musical streams of water down the gleaming steps. The gondolas drifted back and forth noiselessly on the lagoon. Schubert's "Serenade," of all things in the world, came softly down through the space, throbbing with passion.

Suddenly there was a transformation. From white dome and persistyle, from colonnade and water's edge, from pillar and and frieze, gleamed out in one startling second innumerable points of fire, bright as gold, piercing their intensity.

It was the climax. This was the best the century had done. This magic thing, born in the clouds, harnessed, tamed, trained, subjugated, made man's best messenger, his illuminator, his intelligencer, his motive power—electricity—the material triumph of the age!

Whiter than ever looked the buildings, colder, and bluer than ever the arching sky. And like a million near familiar stars gleamed the incandescent lights, and from the heart of the lagoon poured the waters, lit with fire and tinted like the rainbow.

If it had been any other time it might not have meant so much to the two people who stood there among the throng in silence watching it. But as it was—well, serenade, and the marvel of it all, and the subtle, thrilling magnetism of the great crowd brought about an emotion no more to be restrained than the falling of the green waters over the Niagara. Ingersoll stood beside the chair and dropped a hand on that of Mary. She did not look up. She had known he was going to do it.

"How long could you be patient," he said, softly, "a year?"

"A thousand years."

It was hard that there should have been a hundred thousand present. Though, come to think of it, one spectator would have been just as bad.

"I won't mind the old curmudgeon," she said. She meant the man she worked for.

"I'll write every day," he said. He instinctively offered a compensation.

The people on the great porches of the Administration Building were shouting their applause of the scene below. The torches flamed around them and made them look like brownies, as they threw up their arms and waved their hats. Ingersoll and Mary watched them with their hands clasped tight.

"I'll take a year to finish college," he said. "You know what I told you about my prospects. I think I'm a very fortunate fellow."

He wasn't, in comparison with a good many men. But it's all in the point of view. Good fortune is merely a matter of opinion.

Later on he wheeled his chair toward the gates. The crowd poured along toward the Illinois Central train. Ingersoll said some wonderful things then. Mary wondered how mere words could seem so beautiful. He felt himself thrilled by his own eloquence. It gave him courage to think he might become a great man when he got in the pulpit. What he was really saying was: "I love you." When the sky is blue enough, and the summer wind blows, and the night is present—these words may come to seem like the lyric of the greatest poet.

"I suppose you found the Fair very educational?" said Mrs. Van Doosen, wife of the local jeweler, at the dinner table, when Mary had got back to the boarding-house. Mary's red brown eyes swam suddenly with a sort of mist.

"Yes, I did," she said softly.

She waited for Mary to say something more, but Mary had nothing more to say.

"What a stupid little thing," thought the jeweler's wife. "What good does it do people of that sort to go to the Fair?"—Omaha Worlds-Herald.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

AN OLD-FASHIONED WIFE.

I sit in the dusk of life's even divine,
And look at the hand that lies softly in mine;
Its freshness is gone; it has wrinkles and seams,
Though it is the hand that once gilded my dreams,
And the one which I held in the chapel one morn,
Ere the great yellow stalks felt the husbandman's knife;
'Tis the soft, cherished hand of the old-fashioned wife.

We've journeyed together in smiles and in tears,
We've felt the rough hand of the sorrowing years;
The old-fashioned cradle the children adored,
With dear little shoes, in the attic is stored;
And back from the past, with its mists and its shine,
A lullaby comes with its cadence divine;
And I turn, as I hear, from the world and its strife
To the tear-moistened eyes of the old-fashioned wife.

I know she is thinking of years that are fled,
The girls who are living, the boys who are dead;
I know she remembers the sweet long ago,
Ere the fingers of time touched her tresses with snow.
She never has murmured, whatever her lot;
Her love would make pleasant the dreariest spot;
She lived for the home made serene by her life,
For patient and kind was the old-fashioned wife.

The beauties who dazzle in diamonds and lace,
My dream of her beauty can never efface;
She never wore satin; her best wedding gown
Was the gingham I brought from the neighboring town,
And thus in the gloaming we sit side by side,
Almost at the fringe of the mystical tide;
And our fingers entwine at the twilight of life,
As I kiss the soft lips of the old-fashioned wife.

ONE REASON WHY GIRLS DON'T LIKE DOMESTIC SERVICE.

Kate Gannett Wells, writing in the North American Review, assigns the following as one reason why capable women don't like domestic service: The difference, then, between a servant and any other employe lies in the prevalent custom of servants eating in the kitchen. Such a distinction sounds brutal, but it is vital. A dressmaker, a ladylike—not "slop"—seamstress, a trained nurse, a nursery governess, will not eat there, so sorrow often attends the advent of any of these personages. To the kitchen and sleeping arrangements would I first ascribe our discomfort as housekeepers. I am not writing of the homes of the wealthy where the girls have their own parlors, but of the great middle class and all the classes below it. The unsanitary discomfort of a servant's room in a third-class street is best understood by those who board in it. The patience of the American people is slight compared with that of servants, whose household gods are confined to their trunks. If good service is desired in the future, an employer should not only beautify her kitchen, but should build it in front of the house, where the servants can watch the passers-by just as she herself likes to do. It should always have a sofa—but not one with broken springs—armchairs, rockingchairs, etc., and the dining table should not be allowed to present a pell-mell rehash of the food and dishes. Servants' chambers usually are small and dingy, or large and cheerless, with several girls in one room, or else the servants live in common together, as if in barracks, on the top story of apartment houses.

DESSERTS OF NUTS.

The "foam of chestnuts," hazelnuts, or of any nut makes a dainty dessert. For this purpose the nut must be shelled and blanched, boiled till thoroughly soft in water, then drained and washed and rubbed through a fine puree sieve. About a cup of flaked chestnut meats will be sufficient to use with a pint of cream. Whip the cream to a stiff broth, sweeten it with powdered sugar, using about three heaping teaspoonfuls, adding the flaked chestnuts (sprinkling them in by degrees). You may use a tablespoonful of Maraschino to flavor this desert, or a little orange flavor if you prefer it to the liquor. Let the dessert be thoroughly chilled before it is served. Sometimes a half cup of grated chocolate, sweetened and flavored, is added to the foam. The clear pulp of the boiled chestnuts is sometimes passed through the puree sieve, slightly salted and served in a mound, surrounded by whipped cream and garnished by quarters of glace oranges.

One of the prettiest of divan pillows was brought not long ago from London. It was made of two hemstitched silk mufflers—such as gentlemen use—or it can be made of the handkerchief size if one prefers. The English one was in pale blue. The mufflers were united, upper and under side, by a band of lace insertion about an inch and a half wide. The lace was quite an openwork pattern, and was rather heavy—like the ecru torchon. Into this cover before the last side was sewed was slipped a pillow covered in pale pink silk. The thing was delicately pretty, and yet at once serviceable, for the cover can be washed once a week without harm if one should choose. The insertion was sewed to the mufflers in the "over and over" stitch, with the seam on the wrong side. There are many

PALMER NEWS.

A Monson Woman Author of a Favorite Hymn.

A series of praise meetings is being held fortnightly at the Universalist church, at which G. W. Ely, director of the choir, gives the author, date of writing, and incidents connected with each hymn sung. Last Sunday evening the hymns sung were written by women, and among the number was one commencing

"I love to steal awhile away
From every cumbering care."

This hymn has somewhat of a local interest, and we give the history and incidents:—

Pheobe Hinsdale was the daughter of George Hinsdale. She was born at Canaan, N. Y., May 1, 1783, and was left an orphan at two years of age. She never had more than three months, consecutive school instruction, and was eighteen before she even learned to read. Always poor and pressed by the daily cares of the house, she did not improve her worldly fortune by marriage to Timothy H. Brown, who took her with him to Ellington, Ct. Here she first began to use her pen; here she crept away at dusk from her children and her poverty to a grove near by to think and write and pray. The gossips who observed these evening walks put their own coarse construction upon them. Mrs. Brown's own words are as follows:

"It was in Ellington, Ct., I wrote the twilight hymn. I had been out on a visit to Dr. Hyde's, and several were present. After tea one of my neighbors, whom I had ever felt was my superior in every way, came and sat down near me, chatting with another lady without noticing me. Just as I was rising to go home, she turned suddenly upon me and said: 'Mrs. Brown, why do you come up at evening so near our house, and then go back without coming in? If you want anything why don't you come in and ask for it?' I could not think who it was and sent my girl down the garden to see, and she said it was you, that you came to the fence, then turned quickly away muttering something to yourself.' There was something in her manner more than her words that grieved me. I went home and that evening was left alone with my children. When all were in bed except my baby I sat down in the kitchen with my child in my arms, took pen and paper and gave vent to my oppressed heart in what I called my apology for my twilight rambles, addressed to a lady."

I quote as originally written, because it shows what a sweet answer it was to the remarks made to her. It was dated Ellington, C., August, 1818:

Yes, when the toilsome day is gone,
And night with banners gray
Steals silently the glade along
In twilight's soft array,

I love to steal awhile away
From little ones, and care,
And spend the hours of setting day
In solitude and prayer.

I love to feast on nature's scenes
When falls the evening dew,
And dwell upon her silent themes,
Forever rich and new.

I love in solitude to shed
The penitential tear,
And all God's promises to plead,
Where none can see or hear.

I love to think on mercies past,
And future ones implore,
And all my cares and sorrows cast
On Him whom I adore.

I love by faith to take a view
Of blissful scenes in Heaven,
The sight doth all my strength renew,
While here by storms I'm driven.

I love this silent twilight hour
Far better than the rest;
It is of all the twenty-four,
The happiest and the best.

Thus when life's toilsome day is o'er,
May its departing ray
Be calm as this impressive hour,
And lead to endless day.

Whether these lines ever reached her neighbor is not told, but Mrs. Brown soon moved to our neighboring town of Monson, where she lived for nearly thirty years, and it was while living there that these verses first came to light, and five of them were taken and with a little change became a familiar hymn which is known the world over. It is not alone by this hymn that Mrs. Brown lives in memory. Her son was the first missionary from America to Japan. The autobiography and poems of Mrs Brown were under the editorial care of Rev. Charles Hammond of Monson, who died before the completion of his work. The tune of Monson was composed for this hymn by her son, and the tune of Brown was composed for the same purpose by William B. Bradbury. These tunes are seldom used in connection with this hymn, most compilers choosing others.

Confessed to Setting the Fire.

George Starkey, who has been serving two months in the house of correction at Springfield for drunkenness, was released Monday, but was at once rearrested on a warrant charging him with setting fire to the barn of I. E. Cook at Brimfield on the night of November 29th, last, and brought to Palmer for a hearing. He pleaded guilty to the charge, and in explanation said that he was hired to do the job by Harlow B. Kibbe of Brimfield. Kibbe had talked to him about it several times, and said that he wanted to live long enough to see Cook and Henry Shaw of Wales burned out, as he had a grudge against both of them. Starkey refused to do the job, but on the night of the fire Kibbe treated him liberally to liquor, got him pretty drunk, then gave him a bottle of kerosene and some matches and sent him down to fire the barn, and he was too drunk to know better. Kibbe gave him $10, and promised him $5 more, besides promising him that he should never come to want. Starkey said he had no feeling against Cook, and never would have set the fire if he had been sober. Kibbe has been suspected in the matter since the first, and Saturday night was arrested as an accessory before the act, spending Sunday in the lockup. After Starkey had made his confession Kibbe was brought in. He pleaded not guilty, and remarked that as had no money with which to employ counsel he supposed the court would do as it chose with him, as it always had done so. The testimony of Starkey and Mr. Cook was taken, and then both Starkey and Kibbe were bound over to the superior court in $1500 each. Kibbe's feeling against Cook arises from the fact that as an officer of the town, Mr. Cook has had occasion several times to arrest Kibbe, on one occasion the latter being sent to Bridgewater for a year.

An Immense Rush.

That just describes it—the way in which part 2 of the "Magic City" went last week. By an error on the part of the publishers they did not reach us till Saturday afternoon, and then the large supply which was thought would be ample disappeared like snow before a July sun, and a second order was sent to the publishers, followed by a third. These have arrived, and enough to supply all demands will be kept on hand hereafter. The demand for part 2 was much larger than that for part 1, and as there must be many who have not part 1 we shall print next week a special coupon for that part. Be sure and get parts 2 and 3 if you want the series, and the special coupon next week will enable you to get part 1 at no extra cost for the coupon. Part 3 is ready, and is the best yet, containing views from the roof of the Manufacturers' building, a section of the interior of the Transportation building, the approach and portico of the building, the magnificent German fountain, the Brazilian exhibit in the mining building, the Limoges Cathedral Gallery in the French section of sculptures, the battleship Illinois, views of United States statuary and sculpture, two views of statuary in the Spanish section, a view of the Javanese village in the Midway, the government army exhibit, two views of the French sculpture exhibit, and a section of the United States exhibit of oil paintings. Remember that there will be sixteen parts, with over 300 fine views, and that they can be sent by mail or had at this office.

Likely to be a New Church.

The organization of a new church in Palmer about the middle of April is quite probable. At that time Rev. S. T. Frost's connection with the Baptist church will cease, and it is expected that his adherents in this church will withdraw at that time and establish services in the Advent chapel on Park street. This society is numerically weak and unable to support a pastor unaided, and will probably unite with the faction from the Baptist church. Indeed, report has it that about 80 names have been pledged as regular attendants, or who will help support the enterprise. Mr. Frost's views are reported to be quite in harmony with Second Adventism, which gives more color to the statement; besides which he has said, since the dissatisfaction with him in the Baptist church was openly manifested, that he should stay in Palmer and preach, even if the church did dismiss him. Several of Mr. Frost's strongest adherents were seen yesterday, and while they would neither deny nor affirm the truth of the rumor, made statements which leave no doubt that the matter of forming a new church is contemplated, although denial of any definite action is made.

2.50. Address, Mrs. Helen G. Rice.
3.35. Questions.
4.00. Adjournment.

Appreciated the Work of the Firemen.

No person who watched the work of the firemen a week ago last Sunday night at the opera house fire would say that they did other than good work, as the adjoining buildings, still standing, will testify, but the following is the kind of appreciation which bears substantial form:

PALMER, MASS., January 31st, 1894.

W. A. Hitchcock, Esq.:—
Dear Sir:—Kindly add the enclosed amount ($10) to the Firemen's Relief Fund. The faithful and intelligent work of your department at last Sunday night's fire deserves recognition.
Respectfully yours,
WILLIAM H. HART.

This is the kind of appreciation which counts, as Father Hart had no property endangered by the fire, the nearest in which he was personally interested being nearly a quarter of a mile distant.

A Fine Brick Block On The Opera House Site.

H. P. Holden has about decided what he will build on the site of the burned opera house, and the plans contemplate a handsome brick block. The dimensions will be about 85 feet on Central street and 100 on Main. The corner store will be 37 feet front, and the next 23 feet. This will be occupied by Robinson & Taylor if the block is built. It is not yet decided who will have the corner store, which would be the most elegant in town, but parties are negotiating for it. At the east of these two stores will be a brick fire wall, and beyond that two stores each 20 feet wide and 60 feet deep, the block not being square. In the second floor will be office and tenements.

The Palmer Herald Sold.

Messrs. B. P. Morse & Co., publishers of the Palmer Herald, who were burned out in the recent opera house fire, have decided to go out of business, as will be seen from their announcement in another column, and have disposed of their newspaper and job printing business to the publishers of the JOURNAL. Subscribers to the Herald will hereafter receive the JOURNAL in its stead, and all patrons of the job department of the Herald will be welcome at this office, and assured prompt service and the best of work. Mr. Morse will stay in town for some time, but eventually go to Denver, Col., where he has several brothers.

St. Valentine's Day next Wednesday.

Wednesday was Ash Wednesday, the first day of Lent.

Henry Holbrook of Tufts College is home for a vacation.

James Hayden, the tailor, has rented rooms in Strong's block.

Miss Mabel McQuaid of Chatham, N. Y., is visiting friends in town.

The Odd Fellows hold a regular meeting this evening and initiate one candidate.

O. P. Allen expects to have his drug store in the Lawrence block open the first of next week.

H. A. Northrop is filling his ice house on Park street from the pond near by with fine 12-inch ice.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Belden and daughter of North Hadley were guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. Lawrence over Sunday.

Tuesday morning was the coldest of the winter, thus far, the mercury getting as low as 18° below in some places.

J. H. Woolrich is to have his house lighted by electricity, and Dr. Holbrook his office, and probably his house also.

Miss Van Wagner of Springfield spent the first part of the week with Mrs. G. F. Sedgwick on Pleasant street.

A load of hay was upset under the bridge over Commercial street Monday afternoon, delaying travel in that locality for a short time.

Clark & Hastings, wholesale meat dealers, have had their mammoth refrigerator filled with ice this week, H. A. Northrop doing the work.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Several Palmer people went to Springfield last Saturday night to hear Bill Nye. Several also went to Amherst Tuesday evening to hear "Wanita."

A party of Masons visited Eden Lodge of the order at Ware Monday evening, and a party of Odd Fellows visited the lodge at Monson last evening.

Collections were taken in the churches last Sunday for the use of the relief committee in purchasing nourishing food and delicacies for the sick poor of the town.

The Columbian Band of Thorndike gave a concert at the corner of Main and Thorndike streets last Saturday evening, playing several pieces in a creditable manner.

Rev. H. F. Moulton received yesterday from Portland, Me., an old-fashioned tall clock which has been in his family for years, and it now adorns a corner of his dining room.

The Relief Association has been forced to move its stock of supplies from the store in the Lawrence block, and is now occupying the one in the Cross block vacated by Dwyer & Sullivan.

Revere Chapter, O. E. S., initiated one new member at the meeting Wednesday evening. Next Wednesday evening the chapter will give a reception to the Masons of the town.

It amused Palmer people not a little to see the headings in the daily papers, "Palmer's $100,000 Fire." The loss was heavy enough, but did not approach that figure by considerable.

Special Officers Johnson and Hastings searched the place of John Madden, on the corner of Main and Central streets, for liquors Monday, but found nothing of a contraband nature.

The sleighing is fast disappearing. The warm weather of yesterday made heavy inroads in the snow, and unless colder weather comes at once wheels will be in order again by the first of next week.

It is understood that a meeting of the fire district will soon be called to establish lines in the business district within which new buildings must be built of brick or other non-combustible material.

A convention for the Christian Endeavor societies of Hampden county will be held on Fast Day, April 3d, though the place has not yet been determined, but will probably be either Palmer or Westfield.

The children of the Congregational church not over 12 years of age are invited to meet in the prayermeeting room of the church next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock to organize a Junior Christian Endeavor Society.

J. P. Lynde has bought a piece of land 43 feet on Main street between the residence of Dr. Holbrook and the land on which the opera house stood, and will move his block, formerly Hatch's block, to that place in the spring.

The Ladies' Society of the Congregational church gave a social in the parlors Wednesday evening, Mrs. C. W. Cross, Mrs. J. A. Palmer, Mrs. H. T. Huntington, Mrs. John Smith, Mrs. John Sedgwick and Mrs. G. H. Fisherdick furnishing supper.

It is seldom that pears can be kept until this time in the year without the aid of a cold storage vault, and yet Austin Davis of North Wilbraham brought some to this office this week which were almost as hard and perfect as when picked last fall.

A party numbering about 75 had a pleasant time last evening at the home of Porter Plympton near Fosket's Mills, the occasion being the birthday of his daughter Mabel, who was presented with a gold watch, a chair, album, and other articles.

A few erratic strokes of the fire alarm early Tuesday morning caused some persons to think that an alarm had been rung in but that the apparatus was out of order. The strokes were caused by the action of the cold on one of the springs of the apparatus.

There is great anxiety on the part of one married woman in this place, who went sleighriding to a neighboring village last Saturday evening without the knowledge of her husband and was tipped out of the sleigh, lest her liege lord find out about it.

A large brown mare was left at Marcy's stable Friday of last week by two young fellows, and proves to be one traded them the same day by Felix Bombard of Ware, who got in exchange a 10-years-old gray mare which he now thinks may have been stolen.

Several of the members of the Universalist church will attend the Connecticut Valley Conference of Universalist churches, to be held in Springfield next Tuesday. Judge Robinson will preside, and Rev. H. F. Moulton of the same place will be one of the speakers.

Luther Cobb, organist at the Baptist church, and Miss Louisa E. Brown were married at the residence of the bride's parents on South Main street Tuesday evening by Rev. F. E. Jenkins of the Congregational church. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Cobb will return to Palmer to live.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will meet again this evening, when Dr. W. H. Stowe will read an interesting paper on "Early Slavery in Massachusetts," touching incidentally on its history in Palmer. All are invited to attend, whether members of the society or not. Mrs. H. C. Strong will read the selections of the "Round Table."

Next Wednesday evening there will be a no license rally in the Congregational church under the auspices of the local No License Committee. The well-known Nebraska singers, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, will sing, and interesting addresses will be given. The opera house was engaged for this rally before it was burned, and one of the churches is now used because no other audience room large enough can be secured. Everybody is invited. The Beveridges will sing in Bondsville Thursday evening, and in Three Rivers Friday evening.

Oliver LaSalle, who left town a couple of weeks ago, has been heard from, being in Canada at the time of writing. He says that the Bloomer girl of Warren has no claim on him whatever, and that it was not on this account that he left town. He has a bad cancer in his back, which has been troubling him a great deal of late, and this, with the state of his business, which was badly behind, probably worried him so that he left for a time. He has had his back treated in Canada since his absence. Yesterday he was seen in Brattleboro.

Sleighrides have been numerous during the week past. Last Saturday the scholars in Miss Wallis's room in the grammar school building had a ride to Monson, Three Rivers and Thorndike; Monday night the Woronoco Whist Club went to Belchertown, and a party of eight married couples went to Ware; last evening a party from Palmer made the rounds of the villages and brought up at the Weeks House for supper. Last Saturday a party from Monson had supper at the Weeks house, and another Tuesday night; Monday night a party from Enfield had a supper there.

The losses occasioned by the opera house block have not all been settled yet, but Robinson & Taylor have received $4000, E. L. Davis $1000, B. P. Morse & Co. $4960, and F. D. Thompson $75 The safes which went through the fire were removed from the ruins this week, and the contents found to be all right. When the hole in the roof of Thompson's market made by the falling cornice was repaired this week it was found that the fire had burned a hole through the side and worked about six feet under the roof, showing what a narrow escape from destruction that building had

At the Congregational church next Sunday morning the first of two companion sermons on "A Catholic Church and a Catholic Work," will be given. The special subjects will be: Feb. 11, "The Denominational Church and the Reunion of Christendom; Feb. 18, "The feeding of the 6520." Next Sunday evening the pastor will give, under the auspices of the Men's Sunday Evening Club, an illustrated lecture on "Our Neighbors in Turkey." By the aid of the stereopticon nearly 100 beautiful views will be shown, illustrating life in Turkey in many phases, and showing how they are our neighbors. A cordial welcome for all.

District Court.

Last Saturday was civil entry day at the district court, and ten cases were entered: H. P. Smith of Wales again Elizabeth Guilder of Wales; John Bacon of Brimfield, Thomas Blanchard of Palmer, J. E. Lombard, executor, of Warren, and W. J. Tagan of Warren against C. R. Shaw and trustee of Palmer; G. W. Powers of Palmer against the Palmer Wire Mfg. Co.; H. J. Perkins, et al, of Springfield against Louis Katz of Bondsville; L. W. Caryl of Palmer against Oliver LaSalle of Palmer; C. D. Holbrook of Palmer against W. H. Williams of Monson and trustee.

In the criminal court the continued case of W. H. H. Ryder for drunkenness was still further continued until the first Saturday in March. On Monday John Lester of Warren paid $5 for being drunk. On Tuesday Special Justice Shaw heard complaints against Charles, Frank and Joseph Crushinaw, Thomas Jerzyk and Joseph McFarlane of Thorndike for disturbing the peace Sunday night, and assessed them $2.50 each, which they paid. On Wednesday Horace Merriam of Wales had his case for drunkenness continued until March 17th for sentence. A hearing was held on the return of a search warrant for stolen goods at the residence of Carlo Algeria, and a part of the goods found were returned to the complainant, Louis Musanti, while the defendant was allowed to keep the rest, which were the property of Mrs. Algeria. The evidence showed that Mrs. Algeria thought she had a right to the articles taken, and no criminal action ensued. Yesterday Mike Smith, an Italian at the Monson quarry, was before the court charged with threatening Carlo Algeria, but the language was not sufficiently alarming to warrant the court in placing him under bonds to keep the peace, and he was discharged.

Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge, the Nebraska vocalists, will give a free concert in this village next Friday evening.

Eighteen couples went to Belchertown Wednesday evening for a sleighride. After supper all adjourned to the dance hall and enjoyed a pleasant evening, returning to Three Rivers in the early morning.

Owing to the services at the Union church the last two meetings of the Monday Evening Club have been postponed. It is expected that the programme arranged for "Ladies' Night" will be carried out next Monday evening.

Mrs. Arthur Brown was taken suddenly ill Tuesday evening on her way to Belchertown to join the sleighride. She was taken to the home of R. D. Foskit and cared for, and Wednesday was taken to the home of her parents in South Amherst.

The meetings conducted by Rev. Hollis Jordan at the Union church last week proved so interesting that he was induced to remain another week. Sunday morning he used as his subject, "Four Steps Necessary to Make This Earth a Heaven,"—(1) "The awakened thought," (2) "Dissatisfaction with one's self," (3) "The recognition within one's self of the presence of Christ," (4) "A complete and unconditional surrender of one's self to Christ." Meetings are being held every evening this week except to-morrow evening, with an increased attendance nearly every evening.

Was she in a trance? is the question which has been discussed by the friends of one of our estimable young ladies this week. The young lady in question attended church Sunday evening as usual, and it was remarked upon by several members of the congregation that she seemed very much preoccupied. That fact did not seem important, however, and she was seen driving in the afternoon in company with a lady friend and provided with a safe escort, and they thought it the natural result of the afternoon's experience. On the way home from church her escort noticed her abstracted air from the fact that while usually a rather fast walker, she seemed to loiter and rather loth to reach home; however, he paid no attention to the fact, and after leaving her at what she called her own door went his own way. Not until after she had fastened the door and removed cloak and rubbers did she notice that the furniture, etc., did not look natural. Imagine her surprise when she discovered that she had made a mistake and had entered the wrong house. Fortunately the watch dog owned by her neighbor was away at the time, because not only is he a loud barker, but is also savage at times. At present it is an open question whether she will go to ride behind the black pair or attend Sunday evening meeting again.

A Coasting Accident.

Merton Twogood narrowly escaped serious injury Monday afternoon while coasting on Kelly hill. On a steep part of the hill his sled tipped over, and before he could get out of the way a traverse load guided by Willie Squiers ran into him, demolishing the traverse and cutting young Twogood's leg quite badly. He was taken to the residence of Dr. Bliss, who dressed the wound, and was then taken home.

A Narrow Escape from Fire.

There was a narrow escape from a serious accident last evening at the home of S. B. Barnes. The family was away at church, leaving a daughter, Miss Fannie, 15, in the house with her younger brother. They had gone to an upper room to retire, placing a lamp on the table. A kitten had followed them, and commenced playing with the hanging end of the table cover, finally pulling lamp and all to the floor. The lamp broke and the oil took fire, making a serious blaze. Miss Barnes threw a woolen cloth over the flames, but finding that little good was being done piled rugs and other articles on the fire. This did not smother it, and she then tried to throw it out of the window, but was unsuccessful. Finnally she managed to throw the blazing rags into the hall, and with summoned assistance the fire was put out. The cat has not been seen since.

MONSON.

The Flynt Family Reunion, and Meeting of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co. Stockholders.

A novel occasion last Saturday was the reunion of the Flynt family of this place, and the annual meeting of the stockholders of the W. N. Flynt Granite Company, also of this place, at the Cooley Hotel in Springfield last Saturday. The Granite company was incorporated in 1881 with a capital stock of $100,000, and of the 40 stockholders in the company 35 are in Mr. Flynt's family. The stockholders met at Monson in the morning and adjourned to Cooley's Hotel, where a business meeting was held and these officers elected: President, William N. Flynt; treasurer, George C. Flynt; secretary and assistant treasurer, Lyman C. Flynt; directors, W. N. Flynt, G. C. Flynt, L. C. Flynt. After the meeting the party sat down to dinner, each one finding beside his or her plate a bouquet of flowers and an appropriate card designed and prepared by Miss May Wales of Monson, also a substantial dividend check. Besides Mr. and Mrs. Flynt, six children and twenty grandchildren were present, the list being as follows: Mrs. Emma K. Flynt of Monson and three children, Mabelle K., William N. and Carrie W.; Henry A. King and wife of Springfield and two children, Stanley and Carrie W.; Rufus Flynt and wife of Palmer and three children, Hattie G., Eudocia F. and Rufus; Lyman C. Only one daughter-in-law and three grandchildren were absent. The four other stockholders, residents of Monson and all employed by the company, who completed the party, were M. F. Moore, F. G. Rogers, J. D. Dewar and A. B. Merchant.

A Directory for Monson.

A resident and business directory of the town of Monson is being compiled by A. B. Sparrow of Shirley Village. The directory will contain the names of all residents of the town over 20 years of age, giving street numbers, etc., also a street and business directory, lodges and society organizations, schools, town and county officers, churches, and other useful information. Mr. Sparrow publishes directories for twelve towns and cities in Massachusetts and Maine, and will spare no expense to make this, the first real directory of Monson, worthy of liberal patronage. Mr. Sparrow published directories for Palmer and Ware in 1892, and gave good satisfaction.

Runaway Accident.

Mrs. Charles Bruce was the victim of a runaway accident Monday afternoon. As she was driving up Academy Hill her horse became frightened by the steam from an engine under the bridge, ran, and jumping a hitching post near Daniel G. Potter's residence left the sleigh at that place, a total wreck, and was not stopped until near North Monson. As the sleigh struck the post Mrs. Bruce was thrown out and received several bruises, but was not seriously injured.

Epaphro A. Day, administrator of the estate of Gideon S. Moore, late of Monson, has appealed from a decision of the probate court in allowing the appointed commissioners to allow an account of Euphemia A. Munsell for $100. The matter was heard in Springfield before the supreme judicial court Monday.

The proprietors of Taylor's music store of Springfield gave a free concert in Memorial Hall Tuesday evening to a full house. Mr. Miller rendered a number of selections on the piano, and Mr. Taylor played an organ which had a bass and a snare drum attachment, playing a triangle and horn in one selection, and a violin in another.

The second in the series of farmers' institutes, under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society of Palmer, will be held in Grange Hall next Tuesday, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Mr. G. L. Clemence of Southbridge, a member of the State Board of Agriculture, will read a paper on "Dairy Farming." This is a subject in which many of the Monson farmers are interested, and there should be a good attendance. Dinner will be served for 25 cents per plate.

A fact:—He came to this village, about three miles distant from home, and wanted to see the selectmen. He said the roads had not been broken out on a short strip where he wished to draw a load; he had wanted to use the road the day before, and should have drawn his load to-day if the road had been in condition. When questioned in regard to how bad it was drifted he said: "Why, it it wouldn't take 'em fifteen minutes to break 'em out if they'd attend to it." "Then why," said a bystander, "didn't you break the roads yourself and have the two days to work in as you say you desired?" "Wal," said he, "I ain't breakin' roads for the town of Monson."

Alice, the four-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Norcross, died Tuesday morning of meningitis of the brain, after a very short illness. Mr. and Mrs. Norcross have the sympathy of the entire community in their affliction, which is doubly great, as their youngest child died only six months ago. Alice was an exceedingly winsome little girl, and her sweet face and quaint sayings will long be remembered by all who knew her. The funeral, which was private, owing to the illness of Mr. Norcross, was held Thursday afternoon. Monson Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which Mr. Norcross is a member, sent a star of hyacinths and maiden-hair ferns as an expression of sympathy.

Mrs. Joseph Kean, an old resident of this town, died at the city hospital in Hartford, Ct., last Friday. Interment was in Manchester, Ct., where she has lived since last July. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Grant and Mr. Mrs. and Caldwell attended the funeral.

During the last week sleighrides have been very popular among the young people. Misses White and Larey took their pupils to West Brookfield last Saturday afternoon, and in the evening the Epworth League went to Brookfield, where they were entertained at the Brookfield House.

HAMPDEN.

The Home Missionary Society will meet with Mrs. William Leach next Tuesday.

Dr. J. J. Wrisley was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. West and Mr. and Mrs. William Johnson last week. He will commence practice at Laconia, N. H., this week.

The Christian Crusaders left here last week, going to Vermont. They reported 75 conversions in the four weeks they were here, and the union meetings still continue.

D. B. McCarthy of Springfield will open a class in vocal music this evening, and as he comes highly recommended it is hoped that the young generally will avail themselves of the opportunity of a competent instructor.

Rev. N. D. Parsons, who was thrown from his sleigh and quite seriously injured, has so far recovered as to be able to preach. His son George is at home from a year's stay in Ohio, and all are glad to see his genial face once more.

Prof. Croy of Springfield gave a reading last Friday evening under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society, and the audience was highly entertained. Prof. Croy is instructing a number of young ladies and gentlemen, who will contest this month for another Demorest medal.

M. D. Burt, a native of this town, died at his home in Bristol, Wis., on the 24th of January at the age of 76 years. Mr. Burt was born in Hampden October 9th, 1817, and in 1840 was married to Wealthy A. Davis. In 1841 they united with the Congregational church in Hampden, and in 1842 went to Chicago, Ill., where they remained about five years, going in 1857 to a farm in Bristol, Wis., where they have since lived, and where by his own industry Mr. Burt made from wild lands one of the most beautiful homes in Kenosha county. For the past 22 years he has been a faithful member of the M. E. church near his home. In his home life, in the church and in his town he ever, by word and deed, stood for the right, and made the "Golden Rule" the foundation of his faith and practice. "He rests from his labors, and his works will follow him."

A public meeting was held at Library Hall Tuesday evening for the purpose of forming a good citizens' league, the object of the league being to study and carry into effect municipal questions.

Petitions have been signed from Brimfield, Wales, Palmer, West Brookfield, Brookfield, Southbridge, Sturbridge and Hardwick, to have the new normal school established in Warren. A delegation from Warren attended the hearing held before the committee on education yesterday.

Mrs. E. C. Sawyer had a very narrow escape last Saturday noon, while riding, losting control of her horse as it was passing the dry bridge over the Boston and Albany railroad. When in front of the post office the team struck another one, throwing out Mrs. Sawyer. Dr. J. W. Hastings assisted her to her feet, when it was found that she was not injured.

Danforth Keyes, while fixing over the old block on the corner of Bacon and Main streets recently, found the records of the first public library in town. The date of the first meeting was June 1, 1862, and the name given to the library was the Western Circulating Library. When the library was started there were 100 books, some of them being now on the shelves of the present library. Capt. Field was the first treasurer, and Fred Carpenter the librarian.

The lyceum league met Monday evening in Library Hall for debate. The question for discussion was: "Resolved, that Revenue of the Government Should be Raised by Tax on Incomes of $4000 and over." This was decided in the affirmative. The subject for the debate next Monday evening is: "Resolved, that Action in Accordance with One's Own Will, Judgment or Conscience, is Preferable to Answering Allegiance to One Party." The speakers will be: Affirmative, Eugene P. Howard, William F. Taylor; negative, Rev. Harris G. Hale and Charles F. Harwood.

Sudden Death.

Harrison Underwood, father of Haschal Underwood, who lived on the West Brookfield road, died very suddenly last Friday night. Returning from the village that night after a hearty supper he sat down as usual in his easy chair. At seven o'clock he was apparently asleep, but on trying to awaken him it was found that he was dead. Heart trouble was the cause. He was 82 years old, and very much liked by all who knew him. Two others of the family have died from the same trouble.

A Wedding at Warren.

A pleasant wedding took place Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Alice F. Day of Warren and Peter J. D. Kuntz of New York city were married on Coy's Hill by Rev. Harris G. Hale. The house was decorated with ferns, potted plants, smilax and carnations. Among the guests from out of town were Mrs. Antoinette Kuntz, Mr. and Mrs. William Schmitt, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Sutton, Edward Schmitt, all of New York city; E. B. Maynard and family and Mr. and Mrs William H. Doty of Springfield; Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Spaulding of Amherst; Mr. and Mrs. Lyman D. Potter of Enfield; Dr. and Mrs. Blodgett of West Brookfield; Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Blair of Worcester. Refreshments were served by Misses Emma and Alice Waite of Worcester, Miss Ruth Maynard of Springfield and Miss Lulu Grahl of New York city.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb 7, 1894.

The greatest matter on Thursday was the vote of the House by 86 to 72 on a roll call in favor of a bill to give municipal suffrage to women, after rejecting an amendment of Mr. Kniel of Westfield to refer the matter to popular vote. This vote was said at the time by some of the leading members of the House to be not upon the merits of the bill, but it was affected by a desire to attach a referendum amendment to it. So the apparent victory needed the interpretation of subsequent events.

The Senate and House are in agreement that the attorney general shall be asked for his opinion on the validity of the lease of the Old Colony road to the Consolidated. An investigation of the lease of the Connecticut River road to the Boston and Maine is proposed, and the House has acted favorably upon an order for an investigation into the way of doing business at the state prison. So the Legislature is likely to have plenty to do in keeping the commonwealth straight, besides passing laws.

The second step in the woman suffrage contest in the House was taken on Friday by the adoption of the order of Mr. Wellman of Malden for asking the opinion of the supreme court on several phases of the question of popular referendum, only one of which was involved in the amendment which had been offered by Mr. Kniel of Westfield. As an answer by the court to this question would give much light upon future perplexing questions of the referendum, it was doubtless a wise act for the House to adopt the order. If the popular referendum which both Republican and Democratic conventions indorsed last September is unconstitutional, then an amendment is the first thing in order.

Capt. Joe V. Meigs has come up once more, hopeful and indefatigable, with a bill for an elevated road in Boston. This time he says that capitalists are with him who will build the road if the state will only grant the charter. He is a most ingenious inventor, who thus far has suffered great disappointments.

The special recess committee of the Legislature of 1893 upon the revision of the corporation laws has reported to the Legislature 12 bills with proposals affecting the leading corporate interests. It is impossible within these limits to summarize these many bills, but it may be said of them broadly that they try to do what was attempted by the well-remembered defeated bills of last year to prevent the watering of stock of corporations, particularly those affected by last year's legislation,—street railways, railroads, water, gas and electric companies. This is also a acodificrtion of insurance law and the laws relating to fraternal beneficiary corporations.

It is remarkable that with the expiration of the main Bell telephone patent and with the petition of the Bell company for an increase of capital stock from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000, there should be a shower of bills to curtail the powers of telephone companies. It is proposed to have a telephone commission with enormous powers, and other bills are pending to compel a reduction of rentals of telephones, and to restrict the profits of the monopoly.

The Legislature of 1894 is making a very creditable beginning. Of course it cannot help wasting time at the beginning, but it has settled down to solid work early, compared with some of its predecessors, and it is showing a good working temper. It is disposed to take hold well of committee work. For instance, on Wednesday there were 23 hearings, which is an unusual record so early in the session. They show a disposition to debate, especially in the House, but that may be clipped later. There is a lot of hard work before the members, and the session promises to be highly important.

One of the notable matters of the week is the report of the commission to examine the Norwegian system of licensing liquor selling. It was presented in the House on Wednesday, and is a thorough research into the practice of both Norway and Sweden. The investigation abroad was made by John Koren, a Norwegian who is a thorough statistician and is well equipped for the work. He has made careful and widespread inquiry in both Sweden and Norway, both in the countries as a whole and in several of the large cities individually. He gives a large amount of statistics, and the regulations in detail by which the sales are conducted. The issue of licenses is put into the hands of companies which cannot make over 5 per cent profit for themselves, and all of whose employes are under no pecuniary temptation to increase the sales of liquor. All the profits over 5 per cent are given by vote of the stockholders to some public object. Supervision by the authorities is constant and ample. Great success has followed the introduction of the system. Drinking has decreased greatly, and the material condition of the people has improved at an equally rapid pace. The commissioners submit a bill whose passage they recommend. It allows any city or town in this state to adopt the Norwegian system by popular vote, and when once adopted, it is to remain in force three years, when another popular vote on it can be had. The present classification of licenses and the high license fee system are retained in the proposed law.

LANDON.

CARD.—Mrs. Parker and family return sincere and heartfelt thanks to all those who, by kindly assistance and loving sympathy, aided them in their recent bereavement.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

AN IMPERATIVE DUTY.

What greater duty is possible than the care of our health? Until recently it has been impossible for persons living at a distance from large cities to obtain the best medical advice without great expense. This is now obviated so that the purest persons, in any part of the land, may consult the great medical authority on nervous and chronic diseases, free of charge, and without leaving their homes. Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases, has lately adopted the plan of giving the sick everywhere consultation and advice by letter correspondence, free of charge.

Write him a description of your complaint and he will return you an exact expanation of your disease, with advice as to its cure, entirely free of charge. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and will make your case so plain to you that you cannot fail to understand exactly what ails you, Dr. Greene is the discoverer of that wonderful cure, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. He uses nothing but harmless vegetable remedies in his treatment. What sufferer can resist such an opportunity as this to regain health and strength? Write him about your complaint and you will never regret it.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Dr. Thayer, of Boston, says Ayer's Hygienic Coffee is an admirable beverage, possessing none of the pernicious effects of coffee.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

MRS. L. E. CARPENTER.

If you need anything in the line of ladies' furnishings, now is the time to buy. Millinery has about gone by, but we have a few trimmed hats left, which we will sell far below cost. You can get a handsome hat at a very low figure, and the trimmings will be of such quality that they can be used again. There isn't much to do now, and you will be repaid for your trouble if you come in and look us over, even if you do not care to purchase.

PHYSICIANS SAY SO.

The only way to cure salt rheum, eczema, pimples, boils, blotches and ulcers is by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. "I used numbers of so-called blood purifiers, writes Mrs. Belinda Hoidsdon, of Haverhill, N. H., without benefit, until I began to take Favorite Remedy. Although suffering from an ulcerated sore leg, a few bottles entirely cured me." 44

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

A Musical Neighborhood.

I live in a musical neighborhood,
And I'd certainly move out at once if I could,
But I've taken my flat till the first of next May.
So you see very well that I can't get away.

There's a young man down-stairs who sits up late at night,
And thumps on the banjo with wearisome might,
While I walk up and down, for I can't sleep a wink
For the sound of his plinkety-plinkety-plink!

On the floor just below there's a man with a flute—
Oh, that tootlety-tootlety toot!
To the nerves it is quite as distressing, I think,
As the other one's plinkety-plinkety-plink!

A man on a trombone below tries to bang,
But all he gets from it is whangety-whang;
And its dreadful, mixed up with the banjo and flute—
Whang-whangety-plinkety-tootlety-toot!

And then there's a quartet of zealous young men,
Who try glees and anthems again and again;
But all that they do is so woefully queer
They should go to a wood, where there's no one to hear!

There's a lady besides, on the very first floor,
And on a piano the scale she runs o'er—
Just do, re, me, fa, sol, and la, si and do,
First up, and then down, sometimes fast, and then slow.

The janitor too has the musical craze,
And on the front steps an accordion plays;
Oh, I'd move right away if I could—would n't you?—
But my rent is all paid, and so what can I do?—
Malcolm Douglas, in February St. Nicholas.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

THE WAY OF THE WEST.

At four she wanted bonbons;
At eight she wanted gum;
At twelve she yearned for novelettes,
At sixteen, beaux—yum-yum;
At eighteen she became engaged,
Like many other misses,
And wanted spoony tete-a-tetes
And scores and scores of kisses.
At twenty she was married—
Big wedding, rich and tony;
At twenty-two, alas, alack!
She wanted alimony.

DAY AND EVENING EXHIBITION OF OIL PAINTINGS AT GILL'S GALLERIES

A Startling Story.

One of Civil and One of War Life.

A Brave Man Wins a Medal and a Woman Finds a Prize.

They Will Both Interest You and Tell You Just What You Want to Know.

A most fascinating story comes to us from Montpelier, Vt., concerning Mr. Wallace W. Noyes and his wife, prominent people of that city. Mr. Noyes fought all through the war with distinguished bravery. He was in the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Winchester, Cedar Creek and others.

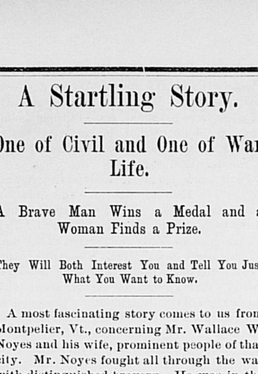
He was wounded April 2d, 1865, at Petersburg. He is one of the few privates who have ever received a medal of honor from the U. S. government for distinguished bravery. He stood on the wall of the fort at Spottsylvania in the bloody angle, and was the only man that lived in that spot. Mr. Noyes was wounded seven days before the final surrender, and up to that time never lost a day during the whole war, enlisting when 17 years of age.

His wife had an equally interesting experience. We give it to our readers in her own words expressed in the following letter:

"I was completely run down," she said, "and my nerves were in a very weak condition. I had no refreshing sleep and felt tired and dragged out all the time. I was so extremely nervous that when the door bell rang I would scream out and if any of the children dropped anything it would affect me the same way.

"My work was very hard and exhausting at that time. My appetite and digestion were very poor, and what I did eat did not do me much good. I was one day going to my family physician for help, not being able to work any longer in that condition.

"I had read and heard a great deal about Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and that day I took up a paper and saw more of the testimonials. That very day I got a bottle and commenced taking it. Before I had taken the first bottle I could see that it was helping me and I was feeling better.



MRS. WALLACE W. NOYES.

"I have now taken five bottles and do not feel the need of any more, being completely cured. I sleep well and have a good appetite. If I should be taken again I should take Dr. Greene's medicine. Please publish this to the world for the good of everyone."

What greater prize could the world contain than a medicine which can cure such suffering as that? Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is constantly performing the most wonderful cures all over the land.

Are you sick, weak or in pain? Then take this wonderful medicine and it will surely cure you. You need it especially at this season to prepare your system for spring. You need not fear to use it, for it is purely vegetable and harmless, and is the discovery of Dr. Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor can be consulted at his office free, personally or by letter.

The Path of Gold.

An Indian legend, beautiful and old,
Tells how a sinner sought the path of gold

Cast by a midnight moon on waters deep,
And there lay down to his eternal sleep,

With faith that though the sea his bones should hold,
His deathless soul should mount the path of gold,

And steal, unchallenged, through the gates of heaven,
Its guilt forgotten, or, perchance, forgiven.

Oh, low-hung moon! Oh, quivering path of light!
The savage legend comes to me to-night.

At water's edge I stand, and at my feet
The sands of earth and heaven's gold do meet.

Would that I held the simple faith and hope
That bore the Indian's soul up yon bright slope!

But even as my prayer is cried aloud,
Thy face, O moon, is hidden with a cloud;

Thy light is gone; the waters, cold and gray,
Clutch at my feet and chill all hope away.

Oh, can it be that souls in sin grown old
Can never find the shining Path of Gold?
—Carrie Blake Morgan, in October Lippincott's.

A SPECIMEN DAY WITH SAVAGES.

Never satisfied with ordinary activity or common adventures, George was accustomed to employ green trappers to work by the month under his direction; then, pushing beyond the usual line of trapping into the Yankton country, he would establish a camp out of the way of Indian haunts and distribute his men up and down the streams to trap. During the winter of 1858-9 he planted his camp on Devil's Lake, a large body of water in what is now northeastern Dakota.

A Sioux chief of the Yankton tribe, whose Indian name signifies "old man," heard that the adventurous handcart-drawers was trapping at that point, and fitted out an expedition for the purpose of robbing him, partly perhaps under pretext of vindicating a Yankton claim to a riparian ownership in all the musk-rat and otter that paddled in the streams of that country, but influenced still more strongly by an Indian's love of plunder.

It was a bright winter morning, and George had followed an elk six miles through the snow. He had just shot it, and was stripping off its coat, when he saw an Indian scalp-lock rising above the top of a little knoll. He threw himself into a thicket, put his hand on his bullet pouch, and found by touch, without counting, that there were fifteen bullets in it, while thirteen Indians soon came into view.

"Is The-Man-that-draws-the-Handcart here?" asked one of the Indians, for they knew Northrup's aim too well to approach without caution.

"If any one man comes nearer," cried George, in the Dakota tongue, "until I know whether this a war party or not, I will shoot him."

One of the Indians fired off both barrels of his gun into the air, which was a pledge of peaceful intentions, but it put George under the necessity of emptying his gun and trusting to the uncertainties of Indian good faith, or of accepting battle with the odds of thirteen to one. Slipping the cap from one barrel, George ran out and fired one barrel of his gun, bringing the hammer down on the capless tube of the other, as though that barrel were empty. He was now virtually a prisoner, but he dexterously replaced the other cap and kept a good hold on his gun. He afterward managed to load the empty barrel without attracting attention.

He understood perfectly the Indian plan. They knew that an attempt to take the life of a man with so sure an eye and quick a hand as George's would probably cost some Indian his life. They meant to detain him on some pretext while a detachment should plunder his camp, guarded only by inexperienced men.

The boldest way was the only one. After standing in the Indian camp a while he confronted the chief and said, quietly, "I'm going home," immediately turning about and taking the trail that led to his camp. The savages were nonplussed by the suddenness of the movement, and they fell into line behind Northrup. At every step of that six miles George expected a rifle ball from behind.

Guns, provisions, furs, were scattered about the trapper's camp in confusion; if the Indians on their arrival should find things so, the camp would be utterly stripped. George tried again what virtue there might be in impudence. Turning to the old chief, when they came in sight of the camp, he said:

"Old-Man, my men are green; they do not know that you are coming in friendship; if you go in now, they might fire on you. Wait here until I go and tell them that you are friends."

In fact, George feared nothing so little as that his men would shoot. But the Indians were deceived, and with a "Ho!" of approval, the Sioux consented to remain until their welcome should be assured. When they reached the camp, George had everything in order, the things all under guard, and the Indians saw themselves outwitted.

There were thirteen savages to six or seven white men; but the Indians liked to keep their own skins whole, and to attack so vigilant a man as Northrup was dangerous. George overheard them disputing which should have his rifle.

"Where is your gun?" he demanded of one of his men.

"The Indians are sitting on it and I cannot get it."

George walked up to the row of Indians who had taken the gun in this tentative and diplomatic manner, and, eying them sternly, he seized the stock of the gun, whereupon the cowed savages rose up, and he returned the gun to the man and ordered him to hold on to it.

The crisis came at last. There was of flour but thirty-seven pounds in the camp, carefully hoarded against extremity. To George's consternation he found that Old-Man had seized it, while his frightened men did not dare offer resistance. Northrup walked directly up to the place where the chief sat with the sack of flour by his side, and laying hold of it, started off.

"Stop!" cried the Indian, getting to his feet. "Man-that-draws-the Handcart, bring back my flour!"

George turned about, and with a gesture of that cool dramatic kind which so impresses a savage, he opened the breast of his coat and said,

"Old-Man, if you want to kill me, shoot, but you shall not take away my food and leave me to starve."

"Then," said the chief, fiercely, "Man-that-draws-the-Handcart, you shall go south."

The Dakota tribes believe that the soul, driven out of the body, journeys off to the south, and "to go to the south" is, among the Sioux, the favorite euphemism for death. George looked unflinchingly at the chief and said:

"Very well, Old-Man. I will go south then. But if I go south you have got to go also and just as many more as I can take with me. But you first."

At this the chief quailed. He saw that he was hostage for the good behavior of his whole party, and indeed, Northrup had given orders that if a movement towards an attack were made by any Indian, the chief should be killed first. The Indians at last succeeded in stealing an old flintlock musket and a bag of pemmican, with which they made off. As soon as they were gone George pushed off to a grove far out on the open prairie, which grove he had reason to think the Indians were not acquainted with.—Edward Eggleston, in Harper's Magazine for February.

"Now," said the storekeeper, as he gazed proudly at the lettering on his new brass sign, "that's what I call polished English."—Washington Star.

SHOOTING A LION.

Then from behind the camel there came a huge, gray thing. It was the lion, but too far for certain shot. As he crouched with extended paws and elevated back, his head near the ground and glaring at me in defiance, I slowly raised my rifle for a careful shot, for he seemed upon the point of charging. But as I did so he turned and lumbered off, and the shot I despatched to hasten his movements only struck the sand. Then began the chase. My horse was out of sight behind but I was soon in the saddle and away. Meantime the two mounted natives had taken up the chase, and after running the lion for two miles, he went to bay in a thicket of small mimosa-trees. Brandishing their spears and keeping at a respectful distance on their active little horses, the men hurled at him what were no doubt the most insulting and scornful epithets. Fara came up as I was dismounting, just in time to hold my horse.

As I approached the clump of trees, rifle in hand, it was a moment or two before I could distinguish the lion; when I did so he was crouching full length behind a many-stemmed mimosa, facing me and evidently in charging mood, as he was swaying his body and working his tail from side to side with great impetuosity. As I walked round outside the clump to get a flanking shot, he kept turning and facing me. So at last I sat down and fired twice at his head between the stems; and reloading like lightning, I rested the rifle once more. Upon receiving this shot, he left his bush and came straight at me as fast as possible, without giving me time to reload the right barrel. When he was about five yards off, I gave him my last barrel in the chest, and jumped aside, and instantly everything was hidden in a cloud of dust. My last shot had broken his charge and caused him to swerve round. When the dust settled, I saw him under the same bush as before, but badly hit. He was my lion now, and running up to within easy range, I put two bullets into his shoulder, which finished him.—Mr. Seton Carr, in November Century.

A MODEL SALESMAN.

There was an etching hanging in the window of a Broadway store, and in front there was a young woman looking at it admiringly. By and by she went in and asked the clerk who seemed to be in charge of the picture department to show it to her.

"Do you want to buy it?" inquired that gentleman, sharpening a pencil as he spoke.

"I want to see it," replied the young woman with surprise, but commendable firmness.

"Well," drawled the clerk, shutting his pocketknife and favoring the customer with his undivided and somewhat insolent attention. "If you want to buy it, I'm willing to take it out of the window. As for seeing it, you can see it perfectly well from the street. I haven't it in stock, and it's a great deal too much trouble to get it out if you ain't going to buy it. If you are, I'm willing to take it down. It's $2.

The young woman was dumb with surprise. Then she said in soft and polite tones:

"You are too kind. I will not trouble you."

And in the mind of the witnesses there arose a question as to what the province of an attendant in a store was.—New York World.

"Come to stay?" asked the fish. "Oh, no," said the worm. "Just dropped in for a bite."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Food that Feeds Most is Wheat Germ.

You have perhaps noticed that you can do more work on a Wheat Germ breakfast than on any other. That's because Wheat Germ is mainly gluten and gluten is one of the most sustaining and satisfying articles of food.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatuleney. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Optimism.

You may reap your harvest of wheat and tares.
You may gather your cockle and barley.
You may husband a harvest of joys and cares,
Laboring late and early—
The grain of gold,
And the poppy bold,
And the cornflower blue for adorning—
But the fullest ears of the seven fat years
Will be gleaned by the gleaner next morning.

You may draw your nets, you may draw your line,
Find silvery fish in plenty;
You may angle for honor, hook titles fine,
And of places and posts fill twenty;
The fish of weight
Swallow up your bait,
Your lures and your wiles not scorning,
But the lustiest trout, there's no manner of doubt,
Will be caught by the fisher next morning.

You may think out thoughts that are witty and wise,
You may think some deep, some shallow,
You may store your brain with truth or with lies,
You may let your brain lie fallow.
Thought is good
Be it understood,
But this fact on your mind must be borne in,
That the latest thought that mankind can be taught
Will be thought by some thinker next morning.

You may cling to this world of time and sense,
You may think of another rarely,
You may sigh, Ah, whither? and ask, Ah, whence?
And find life puzzling fairly,
Yet life is sweet,
We still repeat,
On this dear old earth we were born in.
Good bettered to best, changed into blest
When we wake to God's cloudless next morning.
—Blackwood's Magazine.

MARJORIE'S PRESENT.

"Look here, dear boy, something's gone wrong, and you'd better make a clean breast of it. I don't suppose for an instant that you have come all this way for a few hours, just look at the little horse, though, upon my word, I think he's worth it. You should have seen him showing the field the way the day we found in Ottley Wood and killed close to Greyton Church. What a run that was! Tom Lawless, young Masterman and myself were the only ones to live to the end of it. Tom offered me then £200 for Hazard, but I'd have refused him treble the sum. I wouldn't part with him—but there, old fellow, enough of my pet weakness; you are only taking half an interest to-day. What's up, Phil?"

"Nothing—that is—everything; but it will keep. Where did you first lay hand on Hazard?"

"You remmember poor Jimmy Knowles? Rare good chap he was. I was with him just before the end came, and among other things he asked me if I'd keep Hazard, who had not then had the bit in his mouth. 'Comes of the Merry Venture stock,' says poor Jimmy. 'I was looking forward to having the training of the young 'un. I'll be bound that he'll never disgrace his parentage; you'd need to go far before you'd beat old Jess, and she's given him all her good looks.' Then he made me promise to break him in myself, and from that day Hazard has never known another rider. Poor Jimmy! He was about right in his calculations. Tell you what, Phil, I've never raced the little horse, but I believe he could show nine out of ten in the whole shire a clean pair of heels. Merry Venture's son is bound to have speed."

"Have you entered him for anything at your races next week?"

"Only for the cup. I'd like to win that. He's in capital training."

"Stopford was chanting his praises last night," remarked Philip, glancing approvingly at his brother's favorite, "and Stopford's no mean judge of a horse."

"By the way, have you and he been devoting your energies to escarté lately?"

Philip frowned and changed his position uneasily without replying.

"Oh, that's it, is it? Never mind, old chap; I expect we can square matters all right. Come to my quarters. We've seen enough of Hazard for this afternoon."

After all, it was not till seated over a blazing fire, with smoke clouds wreathing a kindly screen between him and his brother's searching gaze, that Philip Stansted found courage to own the truth.

"Fact is, I'm in a terrible hole. It's all up with me this time, and I'll have to make a clean break of it. You've helped me out often before, and I'm worse than a fool to come to smash again. Well, I'm past help now; it's a case of chucking the service and making tracks for America or Kamchatka, or some place where they'll never know anything about me."

"Nonsense," said Kit, "I'll go bail; your affairs are not past mending. What's the amount?"

"Near two thousand."

Kit's face fell. He was quite accustomed to Phil's difficulties, and it was perfectly true that at some cost to himself he had come to the rescue more than once. A spendthrift younger brother, he thought, was, on the whole, not an altogether unmixed blessing. However, they were pretty well alone in the world, and would hold by each other. Kit scarcely confessed to himself his almost womanish affection for the handsome lad.

"It's a large order. Tell you what, Phil, if you go on at this rate we shall both land in Queer street. I'm pretty near cleaned out myself, and can only just keep afloat, but it must be managed some'how. How soon do you want it?"

"By the first," muttered Philip, gloomily.

"The first? Next week! Impossible! In this out-of-the-way hole the thing can't be done. Surely Stopford will wait a bit?"

"Oh, yes, he'd wait, if that was all. But I told you it was hopeless. I've done all I know and can't raise the amount any way. No more can you, though I know you'd do your best, oldfellow. Great heavens! If I could undo this last month's mischief! I mind almost more for your sake than mine."

"The broad-shouldered scapegoat," smiled Kit. Then he continued gravely:

"But there's more in this than you've told me yet. Better have it all out at once."

He noticed Philip's hand tremble as he mixed himself a stiffish brandy and seltzer, and the usually boyish face looked strangely drawn. There was evidently something a good deal worse to confess. The stillness grew almost painful, the very dog moved uneasily in his sleep.

Then, little by little, in a voice hoarse with shame and misery, the story was told.

Kit listened in absolute silence. He could not trust himself to speak, and walked away to the window. It was a quiet night, suggestive of rest and untroubled thought. A few stars shone out here and there, looking placidly down from their eternal calm on the sleeping earth. The solemn majesty of the heavens, the soft soughing of the wind in the trees, the indefinable charm of such a night penetrating beneath the outer crust of the human heart, that crust which serves as a necessary armor against the rough usage of daily experience, appealed to the emotional hidden depths of Kit's character, and for a moment seemed to change illusion to truth, and the bitter truth to wildest imagining. He glanced within. Could that be Philip? That the dashing, handsome lad he had been so proud of and hoped so much from—on whose honor he would have staked his own life? Was it true, all that he had just heard? Surely not. But Philip's voice dispelled all fancies—it was quite true.

"You see, Kit, it seemed as if it would be so easy to pay it back at first. I made certain of Promoter winning the grand prize, and never thought ill-luck with the cards could last so long, the money was all in my hands; I've been secretary for the regimental funds this last year. Another month and I'd have paid it back somehow; but somebody has called for a settling day on the first, and I've to hand in the accounts."

Yes, it was perfectly true; he had taken this money for his own miserable follies. A few days hence Philip's name would be bandied from one to another with a shrug of the shoulders, a significant look, an open jeer, a well-meaning "poor devil." The disgrace and shame of it galled poor Kit beyond endurance. He turned back to the window with a groan. "I knew you were a reckless young fool, but I thought at least you were a gentleman."

Silence within and without; silent misery within, silent beauty without. Phil's head sank lower on his outstretched arms.

When next Kit spoke it was in an altered tone, and he came across to his brother's side.

"Cheer up, Phil! there is still a chance! You've tried every way you can think of?"

"Every one."

"It's such a short notice. Can't you put off settling day?"

"Impossible."

"Well, I've been thinking it over and I'll get the money for you if I possibly can. There's Hazard. If I enter him for the shire hunt Point-to-Point on the 20th, and he happens to win, it's worth a good lot, and it's a selling race."

"Not Hazard, Kit! You can't part with him. Is there no other way?"

"Bosh! Of course I can part with him. See here, the chances are we fail, in which case the lookout is pretty hopeless. But there; please fate, we don't fail."

A grasp of the hand, a voiceless promise, and, though Philip's lips refused their office, Kit was quite satisfied.

Monday, the 29th. Spite of secrecy and all precaution, a goodly crowd assembled for the Point-to-Point races, eagerly expectant. Fears had been entertained up to the last that they would have to be postponed on account of the weather, but the clouds cleared off and a bright spring day raised the spirit of the on-lookers to the highest pitch.

But as the list of entries was discussed the bright eyes of one who was usually gayest of the gay grew perplexed and troubled. Lady Marjorie, who was rich and beautiful, called Kit to her side.

"Is there not some mistake?" she asked. I thought you had entered Hazard for the cup?"

"I changed my mind; thought I'd keep him fresh for the shire hunt."

"But you are really not going to sell him, are you?"

"I really am," replied Kit, with the ghost of a smile. "Do you feel inclined to bid for him? You couldn't have a horse to carry you better. For looks, temper, and breeding he hasn't his equal, but you know him—know what I think of him."

Know him? Was there horse or rider in the whole country whom she had watched more closely as they dashed gayly along in the first flight? Was there one who had been oftener at her side as they trotted homeward in the winter evening? Had she not listened to his praises and heard his master vow that, come what might, Hazard should own no other master?

"It must be something very bad which has brought you to this decision. Must you sell him, Captain Stansted?"

"I must, indeed."

He might have resented such questioning from other lips, but who could resent word or action of Marjorie's? Not Kit, at any rate.

The little winsome face fell and the blue eyes filled. She guessed how sorely Kit must feel at parting with his favorite. Perhaps she pictured to herself the farewell in the dark stable the night before.

"I am so, so sorry," she faltered.

"Don't!" cried Kit; "for pity's sake, Lady Marjorie, don't unnerve me now."

She was frightened at the pallor of his face.

"You are ill; you are not fit to ride to-day. Do give it up!"

"It's nothing. I've had a touch of fever," replied Kit. "I'm quite fit to ride, thanks. I must ride, and must win, too. Wish me luck; it is time to saddle."

The pleasure of the day had vanished for Lady Marjorie. That Kit was in very grave trouble was evident, yet only ten days ago he was confiding to her hopes and plans untinged by any fear of coming distress. Of course, it was money. "Oh, why can't I give him mine!" thought the little heiress.

"Hullo, Marjorie! In a brown study? Here's the great race just coming off. What's your fancy for it?"

Marjorie looked up quickly. "Where are they, Edmund? Where do they start from?"

"There; don't you see them by that post?" answered her brother. "Stansted is just riding up. Can't think what induced him to enter Hazard at the last moment. Keen on selling him, too. I'll bet that brother of his is at the bottom of it."

"Edmund, I want you to buy Hazard for me," interrupted Marjorie.

"For you?" echoed Lord Silverdale. "My dear child, do you know that Stansted wants Hazard to fetch over 1000 guineas?"

"A thousand—2000—what do I care?" cried Marjorie passionately. "The money's there. Come," she added, coaxingly, "you'll do it for me, like a dear boy."

Silverdale glanced curiously at her, and vague suspicions took definite form in his brotherly mind.

"All right, little girl; I don't suppose you could find a safer or showier mount. Come on; if we get to that mound we'll have a better view of the course, and they'll be off in a minute."

Kit knew most of the horses he had to deal with. Bobby and Sly he dismissed with scarcely a thought. Masterman's Rocketer was a long, lean bay, who looked like mischief. Tom Lawless himself was riding Saturn, one of the heroes of the memorable Ottley Wood run. Tom greeted Stansted in his usual cheery manner.

"I must have a bid for the little horse. Hark ye, my friend, d ye see that gray old veteran yonder? Stands quiet, don't he? That's Kettledrum, and that's Nick Morris mounting him. Keep your eye on him, for he'll be in the van, bar accidents, as sure as my name's not Robinson. There, too, stands the favorite, Milord. Wish you luck. Who's this? One of your fellows, Stansted?"

With that Lawless trotted up to the post, and the new comer reined in beside Kit.

"How's the lever? You look a bit washed out. Look here, you are not up to the mark, and it's a stiffish course; best give in. Hold up, Juggins! Is it anything I can do for you, Kit?"

"No, thanks, Dolly. Hazard and I are both fit enough to fight for ourselves. It's sink or swim with us to-day, do you see?"

Aye, with 2000 and a brother's reputation on the issue, but Dolly did not know that.

A dozen of them, all told, and as fair a start as man could wish. Hazard showed well to the fore as they swept gayly over the grass land and headed for the hollow. Once into the plow, Kit took a pull at the young 'un, and let Rocketer and Sly slip past for the lead.

"Heavy going," said Silverdale. "Last week's rain has done no end of mischief; the meadows yonder are half flooded. By Jupiter! Hazard takes the cake for looks."

"He is beautiful," whispered Marjorie, with eyes fastened on the glossy black coat, the little ears pricked, the scarlet nostrils distended.

In and out of the lane was something of a scramble, and Booby left behind; the favorite and Saturn abreast, Hazard at their quarters. Kettledrum taking it easy. Up to the hill, then a dash for the hurdles. Dolly's horse pecked badly, staggered, fell out of the running, and Hazard, mud-be-spattered, straining eagerly at his bit, rose to the next jump level with Saturn. It looked forbidding enough, but there was no time for choosing. They landed side by side in the meadow, but Sly came to grief, and made such a gap that Kettledrum and Milford, taking immediate advantage of it, shot forward, and for a few seconds the horses were scarcely distinguishable—straight for the water, with the sunlight flashing broadly on the stream.

Kit drew his breath hard. Hazard was going strong, but his master felt miserably conscious that his own strength was scarcely equal to the effort. What if he should fail? The thunder of the hoofs, the cries of the crowd, the rush through the cold air to Kit's strained nerves seemed mingling with Philip's words. Phil's face, haggard and worn, came between him and the stretch of water in the blinding sunlight.

"Edmund," whispered Marjorie, "what has happened to Captain Stansted? Do look! Is he going to faint?"

A heavy pull brought Hazard almost to a standstill. Only for a moment; the mist cleared from Kit's sight in time to let him see that the field had been swept suddenly to the left, heading up the bank. Kit grasped the position at once; a dam had given way and the stream was swollen to undue proportions; even Lawless would not face it, and had made for the bridge higher up. The momentary check had lost Hazard a place it was more than doubtful he could regain.

"Now or never! Life or death, Hazard!" muttered Kit.

"By the Lord Harry, Marjorie, he's going for the water!" Silverdale's voice shook. It looked like certain death.

The crowd surged tumultuously, uttering shouts of warning, but as Kit neared the stream interest in the peril of man and horse gleamed strangely; he raised the whip once, but Hazard needed no spur. Mad at having been held back from the rest, his mettle was thoroughly roused. He shortened his strides ever so little. Like sire, like son. Had Merry Venture ever shirked? He rose like a bird, skimmed through the air. A thunder shout went up from the spectators. "Thank God!" murmured Marjorie, loosing her clasped hands, and Hazard forged ahead exultantly.

"They met at the rails—Hazard leading—Rocketer's beat—the little horse wins—no, Milord comes up. Milord! Milord!" The cries grew louder and coarser. Kit heard Saturn's labored breathing, heard Lawless mutter: "Ware the veteran!"

They turned into the straight—spur and whip, whip and spur, and Kettledrum creeping up. The tention greater with every stride. Kit's brain reeled. What if he were to fail? What then? What then?

A flight of hurdles, a crash. "The favorite's down! Hazard wins! Hazard wins! Bravo, Bravo!" Hazard still led, Saturn on the outside of his heels, Kettledrum up to his girth on the right. "Norris gaining! Neck and neck! The young 'un has it!"

The regiment shouted encouragement to Kit, but he heard nothing; his white face grew whiter yet. Hazard drew ahead, swerved—Kettledrum seized the lead—a spurt—shoulder to shoulder, head to head—a dash past the post—a loud acclamation from the crowd. The black muzzle passed first of all.

They wired for Philip that night. He alone knew for what cause Kit's life was so nearly sacrificed. When settling day came his accounts were found to be perfectly correct. He no longer thinks of going to America, and he no longer plays escarte.

And Hazard? Hazaard was Lady Marjorie Stansted's first present to her husband on their return from the honeymoon.—London World.

A VICTIM OF BARGAINS.

"I am a victim," began the man with the long hair as he unfolded his newspaper and dropped into a seat on the "L" train beside an acquaintance. "I am a victim of my wife's taste, enterprise and economy."

"But I say, old man, you ought to get a hair cut."

"That's what I say, but my wife won't have it. She says I look more distinguished with long hair."

"Say, I never saw you with a red tie before. You were always very particular about those things."

"I know, I know!" said the other wearily. "I thought I had taste, and I think so yet, but what am I going to do? This tie," and he gave it a savage prod with his forefinger, "was purchased at a sale—39 cents it cost—and I have to wear it to prevent a row. My wife says it looks well.

"See these cuffs! Well, they are twelves, and my size is ten and a half. They came off the bargain counter, too, at the rate of two pairs for 38 cents. Cheap! But I have to put tucks in them so they will fit inside My coat sleeves."

He gradually warmed up to his subject.

"You ought to see my underclothing. Job lots, every piece; fragments. Some are too large and some are too small. See this hat? It came home in pink paper, and cost $1.89. I wear a seven; this is seven and three-quarters. There is one morning and two evening newspapers in the band, so it will fit."

"But it was a bargain, sure. My hat cost me five dollars. You ought to be glad you're married. You must be saving money at that rate."

"Bargain? Bah! Don't talk to me of bargains. I'm sick of the word. I hear of bargains from morning to night, and sometimes during the night. I shouldn't be surprised if my wife should pick up a tombstone because it was cheap and would have to be used some time.

"And as for saving money! Whew! All the surplus cash goes for bargains. She has two trunks full of bargains that she says will come in handy some day. I live surrounded by a junk shop; but for the sake of peace don't dare to say a word."

He leaned slightly forward as he spoke, and there was a sharp click. He put his hand around to his back with a pained expression.

"What's the matter? Hurt yourself?"

"O, no," he said grimly. "Two of the patent suspender buttons bought at a bargain counter have parted the ways, and my 22 cent suspenders have broken. Say, you haven't a safety pin or a couple of feet of cord have you?"—New York Herald.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

HIS MOTHER'S SONG.

Beneath the hot midsummer sun
The men had marched all day;
And now beside a rippling stream
Upon the grass they lay,
Tiring of games and idle jest
As swept the hours along,
They cried to one who mused apart,
"Come, friend, give us a song."

"I fear I cannot please," he said,
"The only songs I know
Are those my mother used to sing
For me, long years ago."
"Sing some of those," a rough voice cried,
"There's none but true men here;
To every mother's son of us
A mother's songs are dear."

Then sweetly rose the singer's voice
Amid unwonted calm,
"Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb?
And shall I fear to own his cause?"
The very stream was stilled,
And hearts that never throbbed with fear
With tender thoughts were filled.

Ending the song, the singer said,
As to his feet he rose,
"Thanks to you all, my friends, good night,
God grant us sweet repose."
"Sing us one more," the captain begged.
The soldier bent his head,
Then glancing round, with smiling lips,
"You'll join with me," he said.

"We'll sing this old familiar air,
Sweet as the bugle call,
'All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall.'"
Ah! wondrous was the old tune's spell,
As on the soldier sang:
Man after man fell into line,
And loud the voices rang.

The songs are done, the camp is still,
Naught but the stream is heard;
But ah! the depths of every soul
By those old hymns are stirred.
And up from many a bearded lip,
In whispers soft and low,
Rises the prayer that mother taught
Her boy long years ago.

The celebrated silver statue of Justice for which Ada Rehan posed, and which formed part of the Montana exhibit at the World's Fair, is to be on exhibition at Forbes & Wallace's store in Springfield all next week; no longer. The statue is of solid silver, weighs 97,000 ounces, stand nine feet high, and its bullion value is $54,800. It will be remembered that Miss Rehan was chosen as the model for this statue because of being the nearest to an ideal figure of womanhood.

TABLE LINEN.

In the matter of economy in purchasing table linen there are two factors to be borne in mind. Where a pattern proves unpopular, the goods are soon to be had at a considerable discount from the prices of popular patterns of the same quality. This is generally the "inside reason" for the great "bargains" which are sometimes advertised in these goods. The purchaser must decide for herself whether this reason makes the bargain an undesirable one, in her particular case. In any case, it may be set down as poor policy and poor economy to buy thin, light goods, no matter how fine they may be, for ordinary table use. A much coarser article, with strength and firmness of fibre, will look vastly better after a little time, owing to its power of resisting wear.

Neatness, convenience and good taste will determine what shall adorn the family board, as its members gather around it at each mealtime. On more elaborate occasions, and in the homes where wealth and social position bring constant responsibility, fashions have their rise and fall, in table linen as elsewhere. For these the formal dinner, the less formal luncheon, the cozy tea, have

PALMER NEWS.

Twice Married.

It has been announced in the daily papers that Newell S. Taylor and Mrs. Albert Elmer were quietly married in North Brookfield last Monday. This report is true, ane the ceremony has probably saved Mr. and Mrs. Taylor considerable trouble. The case has been given to the public in such a disconnected way that perhaps an account of it may prove interesting to our readers. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer formerly lived in North Brookfield. Elmer left his wife on account of domestic trouble and about three years ago secured a divorce. He went to Greenfield to live, and some time after Mrs. Elmer came to Palmer. She entered the employ of Newell Taylor as a housekeeper, and shortly after her son Clifton secured work of H. D. Converse. Last April Mr. Taylor and Mrs. Elmer went to Brookfield, and upon their return it was reported that they had been married. Last fall Mr. Elmer also paid Palmer a visit. He stayed over Sunday, and seemed anxious to make as much trouble for his former wife and Mr. Taylor as possible. He saw his son and tried to persuade him to return to Greenfield with him, finally succeeding in getting the lad to do so. In a short time, however, the young man again made his appearance in Palmer. He went to Mr. Converse and asked to be taken into his employ again. Mr. Converse engaged him, but in a few days received a letter from the boy's father, saying that the latter would collect $1.50 per day for the boy's time. The young man was told of this letter, and as he did not care to return to Greenfield, or to work in Palmer if his father was to have his wages, left town for parts unknown. About this time Elmer brought a suit against Mr. Taylor to recover $500 damages for unduly influencing and harboring a minor child. The case is still pending, and will be tried in April. Elmer has from time to time written threatening letters. Last Friday he again made his appearance in this town. By a strange coincidence his son arrived the same day. Neither knew of the other's presence, and they did not meet. The father seemed not to care where his son was located, but directed his efforts to making it unpleasant for his former wife and Taylor. He went to Judge Robinson and asked for warrants for their arrest, making four charges, any one of which in his opinion was sufficient on which to issue a warrant. The first was a charge of bigamy, Elmer claiming that his former wife had married Taylor before she had a legal right to do so. The next charge was of contempt of the order of the superior court of Franklin county, the claim being that when his divorce was granted the custody of his children was given to him, and that his former wife had persuaded the son, Clifton, to leave his father and live with her. The next charge was of misrepresentation. Elmer had certified copies of the minister's report of the marriage of Mr. Taylor and Mrs. Elmer, and the town clerk's record of the ceremony. He claimed that both Taylor and the woman had misstated their residences, one claiming North Brookfield and the other Brookfield as their places of abode. He also charged them with failing to have their marriage recorded in the town in which they reside. Judge Robinson refused to grant a warrant on any of the charges, ruling that two of the charges could properly come before the courts of Franklin and Worcester counties only, and that the other charges were covered in the civil suit now pending. Taylor was interviewed, but refused to throw much light on the case. He was told that if he had married Mrs. Elmer when Elmer claimed he had, a new ceremony would be neccessary to make the marriage legal. He would neither deny nor affirm that the ceremony had ever taken place, but said he had done nothing that he had not a legal right to do, and cared very little for any action that Elmer might take. On Monday morning Mr. Taylor and Mrs. Elmer left town on the Modoc. They have returned to their home, and it is reported that the knot has at last been securely tied.

Enthusiastic Temperance Meeting.

The union temperance meeting at the Congregational church Wednesday evening drew out a large audience of all classes. After singing by the Beveridges, the Nebraska no-license campaign singers, and prayer by Rev. H. F. Moulton, the first address was by Rev. S. T. Frost of the Baptist church, who asked if it were possible to drive the saloons out of Palmer, and answered the question by saying that it was if enough votes could be got. The friends of the liquor traffic are not idle, however, and it needed earnest work to accomplish the end desired. The best work, he thought, would be accomplished by a house-to-house canvass by the ladies, for then every voter would be obliged to pledge himself to vote, and vote "no," or come out and be counted as a friend of the saloon. He hoped and looked for a majority of from 300 to 500 against license at the annual town meeting.

Rev. Mr. Moulton stated that he should vote against license because he believed it to be the best policy for the homes, the churches and the business interests of the town. As a consistant temperance man he had no intoxicants in his home, had nothing to do with them on the streets, in his church not even unfermented wine was used at communion, and he should vote no at the polls, suggesting that this would be a good policy for the town to adopt. He looked for such a move, if not this year then next. But to faith must be added moral courage, and the end aimed at would then be accomplished.

Rev. Mr. Jenkins stated that he was there as a friend of the town and valued its citizenship. He appreciated its virtues and opportunities, the beauty of its surroundings, etc. He knew of no place so well adapted for the establishing of a home, and knew only one drawback—that which the company had assembled to fight. The reputation of Palmer was not the best among outsiders. The people of the town know its good qualities, but the people in other places do not; they know only its bad qualities, for it is known far and near as a rum town. And this affected its industrial growth, for several instances were known where manufacturers had looked the town over with an idea of locating here, but had declined to consider the matter after they knew that the town went for license, declaring that they could not afford the effect on their workmen. The speaker believed a new order of things was coming, and that before long no town officer who favored the license question could be elected.

Remarks were also made by Mrs. Dam of Holyoke.

Rev. Mr. Frost Again.

The not altogether harmonious state of affairs at the Baptist church was somewhat stirred up again last Sunday evening. In the course of his remarks the pastor stated that during the war of the rebellion there were in the South many Christians who were praying, honestly, for victory for their side, but that they finally came to see the error of their way, and at a meeting of Baptist clergymen held in Washington they acknowledged their wrong and begged to be forgiven. Later in the meeting someone asked that the hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds," be sung, and the pastor gave a history of the origin of the hymn, which was that a Baptist clergyman in England, who had been called to another place and had his goods packed ready to move, was importuned so strongly by his people to remain that he finally concluded he would, and going into his house wrote this hymn. The speaker remarked that this was somewhat different from the course pursued now-a-days, when the congregations kicked the pastors out and were glad to have them go, and he hoped that no one would sing the hymn who could not do so from the heart. After the singing of one verse he announced that many who had sung the hymn were hypocrites, and was replied to by one lady, who questioned his right to judge them. He retorted that he had the right, and immediately pronounced the benediction. As he walked down the aisle he met one young lady and told her she was the one he referred to; that she had made lots of trouble and he was glad she had left town, and hoped she would never return, with other remarks of an uncomplimentary nature.

Claims to Have Been Robbed.

Albert H. Bradley has lost between $330 and $340 in some unaccountable manner. Bradley had the money in his pocket and lost it some time between Saturday night and Sunday forenoon. He left his work at the straw shop as usual Saturday night and went home to supper at Mrs. Hatch's on Main street. After supper he went out and passed the evening with some of his friends. The money was all right when he left the house. Bradley went home about 11 o'clock and retired. In the morning, soon after he had completed dressing, he found that his money was gone. He at first did not worry, thinking that some of his companions of the night before had taken it in fun. One of them, Hiram Penn, lived in the house with Bradley. He has a Sunday paper route in Monson, Brimfield, Wales and Holland. Penn had been in Bradley's room the night before, after the latter had retired. Bradley saw Penn, but did not ask him about the money. He asked Penn when he was coming back, and Penn replied that he was not coming back right away. Bradley went out and saw his friends who had been with him on the preceding evening, but all of them professed ignorance of the missing money. A consultation with a lawyer did not give Bradley much comfort. He learned that as he could not prove having lost the money, and did not know whom to suspect of having stolen it, not much could be done about the matter. Since he went away Sunday morning Penn has not returned. Bradley has tried every means to locate him, but so far has failed. There are many who think Penn is the guilty man, although he has always borne a good reputation.

Another Swindler.

The authorities were put in possession of facts yesterday which brought to light the operations of a swindler who worked this locality last October. He gave his name as Charles Haskell, and claimed to represent the New York and New Bedford Portrait Company. His business was to make crayon portraits from photographs, and of course he claimed to do the work at a ridiculously low rate. His custom was to collect 50 cents for each photograph which was given him, the customer agreeing to buy a suitable frame for the picture. He operated extensively in the eastern part of this town and the western part of Brimfield. It is also said that he did considerable business in Brimfield village. Nothing has been seen of the photographs given him until yesterday, when Judge Robinson received eight of them with a letter from the Tanquerey Portrait Company of Brooklyn, N. Y., the letter stating that the company had received the photographs from some unknown person. The company says that it employs no agents, but suspects that a swindler has been operating in this section. They requested the judge to do all in his power to cause the arrest of the man, and agree to appear against him if he is apprehended. Deputy Sheriff Studley called upon several of the swindler's victims yesterday, but can get no trace of the man's whereabouts. It is not quite clear to the authorities why the swindler should have sent the pictures to the Tanquerey company if he is not connected with them in any way.

And Still They Come.

The orders for the Magic Citys. They have been greater during the past week than ever before. So many have called for back numbers who have not the coupons that instead of printing a special coupon this week for part one we shall next week print a coupon which will entitle the holder to any or all of the first four parts on the payment of ten cents for each part. Remember that the parts can be obtained at this office, or can be sent by mail to any address at no additional expense. Part four is ready now, and is fully equal to the first three. The series is the most elegant published, and can be had from no other source in this vicinity. The parts are published weekly at a subscription price of $25 a year, which would make the numbers 50 cents each; the JOURNAL gives them for ten cents each and one coupon. If you have not seen one of the parts call at this office and have a look at them.

Rev. H. F. Moulton of the Universalist church exchanged pulpits last Sunday with Rev. Mr. Farnsworth of Charlton.

W. M. Parks and wife of Clinton, Ia., have been in town to attend the funeral of Mrs. Parks's father, Loren F. Whiting.

Holden & Fuller are running full time at their woolen mill, and have orders enough on hand to keep going a couple of weeks or more.

Mrs. R. W. VanTassel and daughter, who have spent the year with Mrs. VanTassel's mother, Mrs. G. W. Randall, have gone to New York.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will meet again next Friday evening, when Mrs. Auger will read a paper on "Witchcraft in New England."

The reception which the members of the Eastern Star were to tender to the Masonic brethren Wednesday evening was postponed until the 28th.

A jolly party of sleighriders from the Reynolds straw show at Monson had supper and a good time at the Nassowanno House last evening.

Last Saturday was a regular New England day for weather, there being rain, snow, hail and sunshine at various times between sunrise and sunset.

Oliver LaSalle returned to town Monday, and will continue his barber shop and undertaking business in Caryl's block on Main street as formerly.

The engagement of Orville P. Townshend, brother of Mrs. J. W. Weeks, Jr., formerly of Palmer, to Miss Jean Bleloch of Springfield, is announced.

A Junior Christian Endeavor Society was formed last Sunday afternoon at the Congregational church, and meetings will be held Friday afternoons at 3 15.

Next Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Moulton will begin at the Universalist church a series of Lenten sermons by preaching on the topic, "What Shall We Do With the Lenten Season as Universalists?"

The wheelmen of the place are considering the formation of a bicycle club, with rooms in the Eager block on Main street. Every rider who has been spoken to about the matter favors the project.

The pastor of the Congregational church will preach next Sunday morning on "The Feeding of the 6520." It will be the second of his two sermons on "A Catholic Church and a Catholic Religion."

The selectmen announce in another column that all bills against the town must be presented on or before the first day of March, as they will hold their last meeting for the present year on that day.

C. E. Little of Monson has bought of L. W. Parkhurst his milk route, taking possession yesterday morning. Mr. Little will move his family here from Monson as soon as he can find a desirable tenement.

A party of young men in this village had planned a sleighride party to Springfield last evening for the purpose of attending the theater, but it was postponed on account of the storm, and they will go to-morrow evening.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Randall have gone to Malden for a stay of a couple of weeks with friends. Mr. Randall, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, will spend much of his time near the salt water in the hopes of benefiting his health.

Palmer Lodge of Odd Fellows will receive a visit from the lodges at Ware and Monson next Friday evening. The Palmer lodge will work the first degree, and the Ware lodge the second, after which there will be a banquet and social time.

The New England Insurance Exchange has raised the rate on farm property in this vicinity, and insurance on farm buildings and their contents will hereafter cost 75 cents per $100 for one year, and at the same rate for three years. The old rate was 50 cents for one year or $1 for three years.

Although he has not received his complete stock, O. P. Allen has his new drug store in the Lawrence block open for business, and is constantly adding to his various lines of goods. The store is lighted by electricity, and is in much better shape than when he moved out to go into the opera house block.

The second recital given by the pupils of Mrs. H. M. Auger will take place at the residence of E. G. Hastings next Friday afternoon at 3.30, to which all interested are invited. A group of variation pieces will be given, with explantaion of their origin, also miscellaneous selections. There will also be a vocal solo by Miss Effie Moffatt.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church will hold an "Experience Party" in the church parlors on the evening of March 28th. Cards are being given out on which the members pledge themselves to try and earn a certain sum before that time, and the "Experience Party" is the report of the various members as to how the sum was earned. Two prizes will be given, one to the one who earns the most money, and the other to the one who writes or tells the best "Experience" story.

The Woman's Relief Corps has arranged for a supper and entertainment next Thursday evening in celebration of Washington's Birthday. A chicken-pie supper will be served in the rooms of the order in the memorial building from 6 to 7.30 for 25 cents per plate. This will be followed by an entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music, tableaux, pantomime, statuary, etc. Admission to the hall will be 10 cents. The fame of the suppers provided by the ladies of the corps should, and no doubt will, ensure them a large patronage.

The Lend-a-Hand Club of the Congregational church met last Monday with Mrs. J. M. Converse and made a large number of bed and pillow ticks for the sufferers in the South sea islands along the coast of the Carolinas, who were made destitute by the storms of last fall. The work was done in response to a call from Clara Barton of the Red Cross Society, which is working there, and the cloth, over 100 yards, was given by Agent Hobbs of the Thorndike mills. Next Monday afternoon the club will meet with Mrs. L. H. Gager.

The mention in the JOURNAL of last week of the possibility of a meeting of the fire district to consider the matter of requiring new buildings within certain limits to be built of brick or other non-combustible material, has caused some little discussion among business men and others. That it would be a good thing there is no disputing, but there are some who question whether the district is ready to take such a step at this time. There is no time like the present. The sooner we have buildings which are as near fireproof as possible the better off we shall be.

Church societies which are looking for something new in the way of entertainments might get a pointer from the following, the notice having been given in a Welsh parish and copied in a London paper, for a copy of which we are indebted to J. W. Phelp, who will be pleasantly remembered by many Palmer people:

LLANDRINDOD NATIONAL SCHOOL.

A TEA PARTY

Will be held on Saturday, January 6, in the new Class-Room at the School at 3 o'clock.

Each person to bring a cup and saucer and something to eat.

The regular services of the Baptist, Universalist and Congregational churches will be omitted next Sunday evening, and all will unite in a no-license mass meeting in the Congregational church. The Nebraska singers, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, have been secured to sing, and the pastors of the churches will give short addresses. Mr. Moulton will speak on "The Moral Aspects of No-license," Mr. Frost on "The Spiritual Aspects of No-license," and Mr. Jenkins on "How Far Shall we Apply the Dominant Principle of License?" Everybody is invited to attend.

A clerk in one of the stores and a customer had not a little fun one morning this week at the expense of a well-known citizen. The customer had purchased a new wallet and discarded his old one, which was stuffed with a little cotton and thrown down in the street. Pretty soon the citizen came along and spied it. He glanced this way and that, and seeing no one swooped down on that wallet like a hawk on an innocent sparrow. It was out of sight in his pocket in no time, and he almost ran as he turned about and started for home to investigate the contents. O tempora! O mores!

The yellow Angora cat which has been an object of much admiration at Bills's meat market for the past ten years has evidently reached the end of the last of the nine lives usually credited to felines, for it laid down and quietly departed this life one day this week. The animal had quite a history; when it was sent to Mr. Bills one of the first to see and admire it was a woman who insisted that she should be given one of the first of its progeny, and the promise was given. She hasn't the kitten yet—it wasn't that kind of a cat. Another woman was loud in her praises to a neighbor of "that handsome Dongola cat."

The 17th annual exhibition of American paintings, now open at Gill's art galleries in Springfield, is receiving a liberal patronage, and is worthy the careful attention of every lover of fine art. Mr. Gill has gained an enviable reputation and fame as a promoter of art in Western Massachusetts, and his exhibitions have been looked forward to with increasing interest from year to year. Ninety American artists have contributed to the present one, which contains 127 pictures, ranging in price from $40 to $2500. The selections have been made with great care and good taste, and a number of the paintings have already been sold. The exhibition will close March 3.

The overseers of the poor disposed of the McKelligot children Tuesday. The father of the children, it will be remembered, was sent to state prison last fall, for seven years, for an assault upon a woman in Ware. The children have since been with the mother at her father's home in Warren. The latter refused to support them longer, and the town was asked to take charge of them. The priest in Warren took the two oldest children and sent them to a school in Springfield, agreeing that the town should never be asked to contribute further to their support. The youngest child was returned to the mother at her request, she agreeing to care for it in a proper manner.

There was a large audience at the Congregational church Tuesday evening to hear the concert under the auspices of the Firemen's Relief Association, the Old Homestead Male Quartette being the chief attraction. Another entertainment is announced for the 13th of March, when Col. Russell H. Conwell of Philadelphia, well known to Palmer audiences, will deliver his famous lecture, "Acres of Diamonds." As the announcement says, this lecture has been given many times, but never twice alike. It has been given once in Palmer, a number of years ago, but may safely said to be as interesting now as then. The Philharmonic Orchestra of Springfield will also be present.

A session of the probate court was held in the district court room in this village Wednesday, at which the following business was transacted: Administration granted in the estates of—Charles B. Parker, late of Springfield, Charles W. Parker administrator; Clarence Coenen, late of Springfield, Frank Coenen administrator. Wills approved of —Louisa Perry, late of Palmer, Catherine H. Shumway executrix; Clara Stickney, late of Longmeadow, Charles R. Stickney, executor. Administration de bonis non with will annexed in the estate of Joshua D. Sawyer, late of Palmer, Melissa Richards, administratrix. Michael F. O'Connor appointed guardian of Daniel V. O'Connor of Springfield, minor. Partition of real estate made in the estate of Elijah M. Trumble, late of Monson. Removal ordered of Thomas T. O'Connor, guardian of Daniel V. O'Connor of Springfield, minor.

The Hampden County Woman's Christian Temperance Union held a quarterly convention in the Baptist church yesterday. Mrs. S. T. Frost welcomed the delegates, and Mrs. Helen E. Bennett responded. Mrs. John Blackmer spoke on "Scientific Temperance Instruction," Mrs. M. E. Cook on "Loyal Temperance Legions," Mrs. Hubbard Lawrence gave an address on county fairs, and Mrs. E. E. Mallory on the flower mission. A devotional exercise was led by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, and Mrs. M. E. Kimball spoke on "Prison and Jail Work." Dinner was served in the church by the women of the union. At the afternoon session the executive committee made its report, and Mrs. M. L. Kniel, Miss Helen Pendleton and Dr. Frissell gave a report of the national convention. A collection was taken and the committee on resolutions reported. Mrs. Helen G. Rice made an address, at the close of which some time was given to questions.

License or No License.

Editor of the Journal:—It is very evident that a good deal of agitation is to be had on this question before the coming spring election. If we vote no license we should make a clean sweep and rule out every drug store in town. Under no license a few years since the drug stores were licensed for the insignificant fee of one dollar each to debauch the people by making some three thousand sales in less than ninety days, as reported by the town committee chosen to investigate their doings. The people of the town are well aware what the result will be under no license. The kitchen saloons and pocket flask brigade in the highways, byways and hedges will be no news to them. It is said, "Choose a committee which will enforce the liquor law." Every voter knows that a committee has not been found in the town in the last ten years which cared a whit about the enforcement of the law. The programme of the committee chosen at every election is how not to do it, the only ambition is to get the amount of money appropriated by the town into their pockets in the course of the year with as little trouble to them as possible, and they have nothing to show for the expenditure but false alarms. The only interest certain voters seem to have is to vote as large an appropriation as possible for a sinking fund, "out of sight" as far as any good results or value received by the town in the way of good morals is concerned. A false search was recently made to catch the "fox in the flower garden on the corner," where the well-to-do and high-toned resort to get their tipple. No license money is paid, and no one to molest or make afraid. He is a lucky fellow. He ought to run a drug store in his place among the flowers. If no license is for the best interests of the people why does not the dominant party of the state, which claims to be the temperance, most moral and undefiled, party, change the local option law and take all instead of a part of the blood money, so-called, accruing from the traffic in liquors? If this was done every city and town would vote no license sure, and the result would be, as the party well knows, that it would be voted out of power at the next election. It is reported that at a meeting of ministers in your village a short time since a reverend gentleman stated, and regretted to say it was a fact, that wherever the town of Palmer was known in this union of states, it had the reputation of being the most immoral and rum town in the state. Will the gentleman name a town, population considered, where more young men and women are graduated from public schools to a college education, and more money appropriated for the transportation of scholars to its public schools? Where property owners are less addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors? Where taxes are more promptly paid? Also name the town where a larger amount of money and goods are raised and sent to the West and South in charity or for a suffering people anywhere, and where more buildings are erected every year of various kinds? Better results can be obtained by educating the people to see the sure results of and inevitable penalty of wrong-doing than by slandering the town and its voters for the manner in which they manage their town affairs. If Palmer is such a demoralized town as proclaimed in public meeting, we should suppose certain gentlemen would shake its dust from their feet and withdraw from its borders.

THE TRUTH ABOUT IT.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. Edward Paro of Harvey avenue is quite sick at her home.

Miss Mary Labonte returned on Saturday from a short stay with friends in Northampton.

Hiram Grigware has gone to Ware to live, having severed his connection in the mills here.

Edward Wilson of Hartford, Ct., formerly of this place, was the guest of B. F. Emery during the week.

Misses Julia Sullivan and Julia Joy, both of Amherst, were in town during the week visiting relatives.

John H. Keefe has accepted a position in the Palmer Mill at Three Rivers, and commenced duty on Monday.

The drama, "Between Two Fires," will be presented by the St. Mary's Temperance Society at Union Hall on Fast Day eve.

Joseph Walpert, the clothier, sold out the remainder of his stock at auction last Saturday evening, and has returned to his home in Fiskdale.

J. W. Miller, the coal and wood dealer, has recently purchased a wood lot near Bondsville and has a gang of choppers at work cutting the same.

Mrs. Burpee, who has been keeping the corporation boarding house, has resigned on account of ill health, and is succeeded by Mrs. James H. Clark.

The grammar school pupils took a sleighride to Belchertown on Saturday, taking dinner at the Belcher House and returning in the evening, and voting the trip a successful one.

Molloy & Ronan, who managed the presentation of "Shamrock and Rose," gave the ladies who took part in the entertainment a sleighride to Ware on Sunday.

Miss Mary Gerald, one of Thorndike's most popular young ladies, is ill at her home. Her many friends trust that her illness is not of a serious nature, and hope to see her about soon.

An item in last week's JOURNAL, stating that the Columbian Band of Thorndike played in Palmer on the evening of the 3d, was a mistake; it should have read the band from Three Rivers, as they are entitled to all the credit.

George Robinson, who has lived here for many years and who has had much sickness in his family, was presented with a purse of $75 by his friends on Saturday night, nearly every one in town contributing a little toward the amount.

The rink was opened for roller skating on Saturday for the first time in many months, and a large party were present. There will be skating to-morrow evening from 7 until 10.30. The Columbian Band will be in attendance, and Manager Clifford intends to have plenty of skates to accommodate all.

BONDSVILLE.

Rev. Mr. Osgood of Ware will give a lecture in the M. E. church next Wednesday evening on the "Life of Christ," illustrated with stereopticon.

Services were held in St. Bartholomew's Catholic church Monday commemorating the third anniversary of the death of Con. O'Leary, who would have been 100 years old had he lived.

An alarm of fire was given about half-past five Wednesday for a blaze in Thomas Landers's new block. Some clothes hanging over the stove took fire, but the blaze was soon extinguished and not much damage was done.

Willie Morse of Ludlow, formerly of this place, and Miss Minnie Blanchard of Belchertown were married at Amherst last Wednesday. The best man was Frank Towne and the maid of honor Miss Minnie L. Morse. After a short wedding trip they will be at home at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. M. D. L. Towne in Ludlow.

THREE RIVERS.

There are several cases of measles reported in this village.

Lillian, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brown, is quite ill.

Raymond Russell, son of Charles Russell, is sick with chicken pox.

Charles Bernard has taken the agency for the Ware Steam Laundry.

Harry Putnam of Springfield visited Miss Bertha Paine over Sunday.

Lilla, daughter of H. N. Fish, is confined to the house with measles.

Dr. Delaval, formerly of Three Rivers, visited friends in town yesterday.

Edith and Mary, daughters of Mr. Filmore, are quite sick with the measles.

Miss Clara Green spent Sunday at the home of her parents in Brimfield.

John Vendette and family moved Wednesday to L'Epiphanie, near Montreal.

Mrs. Peck, who has been quite ill for several weeks, was out Wednesday for the first time.

Mrs. Woodworth of Ware is spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. L. B. Kendrick.

Miss Etta Ruggles took a party of ladies to Palmer Wednesday to attend the W. C. T. U. meeting.

There is a movement on foot whereby Rev. Hollis Jordan, who has been holding a series of meetings at the Union church, shall remain in Three Rivers for the present to assist Rev. Mr. Butler.

Several of the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Moore, formerly of Three Rivers but now of Lowell, received cards yesterday announcing the birth of a daughter, Carrie Louise, January 9. Mrs. Moore, who has been seriously ill of pneumonia, is now able to sit up.

No little complaint is being heard lately from people who are obliged to be on the road between this place and Thorndike after dark about being stopped by tramps and asked for money, food or clothing. Some of the tramps even go so far as to make threats, or demand certain articles.

Zed Pratt had a narrow escape from freezing Monday night. He left Three Rivers about dark for West Warren, but just this side, at a place called the "pool," his horse fell and died before anything could be done to relieve him. Mr. Pratt started to walk home, but the blinding storm retarded his progress and it was midnight before he reached Three Rivers, completely exhausted, and has not yet entirely recovered from the exposure.

Rev. Mr. Weeks is giving a series of interesting sermons Sunday evenings to an increased attendance. His subject last Sunday evening was "The Parliament of Religions at Chicago," and was ably presented. His subject next Sunday evening will be "The Attack of Modern Critics upon the Bible." Next Wednesday evening Mr. Weeks will begin a course of lectures on the epistles to the seven churches of Asia, as found in the second and third chapters of the Book of Revelation.

Mr. Harrison, second-hand in the mule spinning room at the mill, and another operator in the same room, in returning from a sleighride last Sunday afternoon had a narrow escape from serious injury opposite the boarding house. Their horse became unmanageable at the watering trough and ran, throwing both men cut. The horse fell, and was with difficulty extricated from the promiscuous heap. The men, who were not able to help themselves, were assisted to their homes by the bystanders, who also assisted in dressing their wounds and who took good care of their team.

Capt. R. H. Goebull of Togus, Me., has been visiting Horace Paine this week. Capt. Goebull and Mr. Paine were members of the same company in the United States Army, and were on intimate terms, but after the war lost track of each other and for thirteen years had not heard of each other. Recently Capt. Goebull learned of Mr. Paine's residence in Three Rivers and wrote to him. A few weeks ago Mr. Paine visited Togus, where Mr. Goebull is stationed as captain, and this is the return visit. Horace says it's equal to hard labor to talk it all over; what Dick don't know about the U. S. A. might as well be left out, and although he will admit his day is passed, he is proud to remind you that his wind power is still good. May he remain young until his shadow grows less.

MONSON.

FOUND DEAD IN THE SNOW.

The Sad Death of Chester P. Stebbins,

Monday morning the town was startled by the news that Chester Stebbins, a young farmer living in the southeastern part of Monson, had wandered away from home and had been found dead in the snow. He left home Sunday afternoon to take a walk, accompanied by his dog. He did not return to do the chores, which caused alarm on the part of his widowed mother, with whom he resided, and who immediately informed the neighbors. Monday morning he was found near Conant's saw mill by Edson Walker and Alonzo Weldon, members of the searching party. He was found near a stone on which he had evidently sat down to rest. His dog had remained by him and the body bore evidence that the faithful animal had licked the face and hands in hopes of bringing back to life his dead master. No marks of violence were found, and nothing to show how he had met his death except a little froth at the mouth. Medical Examiner Holbrook of Palmer was summoned, who decided that death was caused by heart failure. The deceased was a popular young man, and was well liked by every one who knew him. His family has the sympathy of the neighbors in their sad bereavement. Rufus Stebbins, brother of the deceased, who is professor of gymnastic in a College in Wisconsin, was called by telegraph and was present at the funeral which took place Wednesday.

The Special Town Meeting.

William J. Ricketts was chosen moderator at the special town meeting held in the town hall last Saturday afternoon. There were three articles to be acted upon. The first, "to see if the town would give any instructions about maintaining a police force," was left in hands of the selectmen, who removed the men doing police duty Saturday night, giving as a reason that it was costing the town $185 a month, and that it was a needless expense. The second was "to see if the town will take any action toward reducing the number of the school committee in conformity with the law in such cases made and provided." After some discussion between Dr. Rand and Rev. F. S. Hatch, who thought the number ought to be reduced to three, William Sutcliffe, who held that twelve was the correct number, and Rev. J. F Lee, who advised that the number be reduced to six, taking one off every year till 1897, the latter proposition was adopted. The third was "to see if the town will choose a committee to consider plans and estimates and report to the annual town meeting April 21, or take other action toward providing itself with a water supply for fire and other purposes." R. M. Reynolds spoke at some length on this subject, and gave figures to show that the iron pipe used in the construction of suitable water works could be bought for $20,000 less than it could five years ago, also that surveys had been made and one or two excellent locations for a reservoir had been selected, and that it was much easier and cheaper to go on with the construction now than it had ever been before. After the matter was explained it was voted to choose a committee of ten to look into the matter further, and make estimates of the cost and time to be used in the construction of suitable water works. The following were chosen: R. M. Reynolds, A. D. Norcross, E. F. Morris, E. D. Cushman, A. A. Gage, W. N. Flynt, A. D. Ellis, John Leahy, G. H. Newton and Dr. G. E. Fuller.

Miss Lizzie Pope of Enfield is visiting E. H. Graves.

Charles L. Ricketts is home from Tufts College for a few days.

Ralph Clifford is confined to the house on account of the grippe.

On account of the storm Tuesday there was only one session of school.

T. G. Carew, employed by W. N. Flynt & Sons, is sick with appendicitis.

The Windsor Club gave a whist party last evening in its rooms in the bank block.

Mrs. Charles Bruce was called to Springfield Monday by the illness of her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyman C. Flynt are recieving congratulations on the birth of a daughter.

The storm Tuesday delayed all the trains and no Boston mail was received until afternoon.

Mrs. James C. Hale entertained a whist party Tuesday evening at her home on Pleasant street.

John Orcutt, Jr., of Somers, Ct., spent Sunday with his father, John Orcutt, on Lincoln street.

The Dorcas society of the Congregational church met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Rufus Cushman.

Mrs. Dearth, mother of Mrs. James Stott, died Thursday morning of apoplexy at the home of Mrs. Stott.

The Universalist society is preparing the drama "Comrades," to be presented in Memorial Hall some time in April.

Mr. and Mrs. William Stebbins of Worcester have been called home by the death of Chester P. Stebbins, their brother.

H. T. Chapin gave a whist party and supper to a small number of friends Tuesday evening at his home on Green street.

John Bogan has bought the Dr. Pease farm in the west part of the town of Mrs. C. M. Handyside of Springfield for $1800.

Mrs. Susan E. Thrall attended the department of Connecticut Woman's Relief Corps convention at Rockville Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Ladies' Benevolent society of the Congregational church gave a sociable and entertainment in the church parlors Tuesday evening.

Rev. Harry Blackford will preach a sermon on "The Bible" next Sunday morning, and in the evening will preach from the text, "Christ."

Newsdealer Murphy is out a small sum of money on account of the disappearance of Hiram Penn, who delivered Sunday papers for him in Wales and Brimfield.

Rev. H. C. Puffer of Salem preached to a fair sized audience in the Universalist church Wednesday evening. Rev. W. H. Perkins of Meriden, Ct., will preach next Tuesday evening.

Rev. A. B. Bassett of Ware preached in the Congregational church last night. Mr. Bassett is an interesting speaker and his sermon on "Christ, the Friend," was well appreciated.

Richard Ritter, recently of the Folly Co., has engaged with the Wonderland Theatre of Lawrence, where he will be heard in some of his clever character songs, of which he has a large repertoire.

G. T. Clemence of Southbridge, who was to have addressed the Farmers' Institute Tuesday, was prevented from coming by the severity of the weather, thus making a postponement necessary.

The physicians report an unusual amount of sickness, brought about no doubt by the sudden changes of the weather. Most of the cases reported are of the prevalent disease, grippe, with a few cases of pneumonia.

Mrs. West Aldrich, who formerly occupied rooms in Central Block, has returned to town from North Prescott and has engaged rooms in Mrs. Luther Peck's house, and will be pleased to see all her old patrons.

Rev. W. H. Marble began last Sunday a series of sermons upon Old Testament characters: 1st, "Inexperienced Adam;" 2d, "Righteous Abel;" 3d, Pious Enoch;" 4th, "Patient Noah;" 5th, "Self-conscious Lot;" 6th, "Spiritual Abraham."

There will be a concert and dance in Memorial Hall the 27th of March. The music will consist of singing by the Old Homestead Quartet and selections by the Springfield Mandolin and Guitar Club. A social dance will follow the entertainment.

The prospects are good for considerable building in town in the spring. Eugene Foskit expects to build a dwelling house at North Monson; Patrick Purcell is to build a barn, Dennis Purcell a house, Thomas Faulkner an addition to his residence, and Mark Noble a business block on the site of the burned bakery.

Chapin, the new meat dealer, is to build a small block just north of Pendergast's market. He will use the greater part of the building for his business, but may rent a small part. Leary, the plumber, is also to build on the site of his late place of business.

Merrick's Music Rooms will give a free concert in Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, assisted by the Ladies' Altra Club of Springfield, Miss Ora Hitchcock and Miss Florence Bruce, violins, Mrs. Celia Hoyt, cornet, and Miss Josephine Miller, pianist, and Mr. J. S. R. Coy of Monson, organist. Admission will be free and all will be welcome.

The subcription list of the Monson Herald has been purchased by the proprietors of the JOURNAL, and subscribers to the former whose names are not already on the JOURNAL'S list will receive the latter paper until their subscriptions expire. H. M. Graves will act as agent and correspondent for the JOURNAL, with an office at Murphy's news rooms, and will take orders for advertising and job printing.

The work of compiling the new directory of Monson is progressing as fast as the difficulties of travel at this season of the year will permit. Residents in the out-lying portion of the town will be called upon soon, and all who desire copies should order them of the compilers when called upon, as no extra copies are to be printed. They will be delivered at $1 per copy.. H. M. Graves is assisting in the work of compilation.

Col. French will give an illustrated lecture and entertainment in Memorial Hall Feb. 26th, under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the M. E. church, his subject being "Chicago, Columbus and the World's Fair." Col. French is an eloquent speaker, and in his descriptions of the sights and scenes, and in the stories he tells about them he uses such fine language that all will be interested without the views. He will also visit the public schools on that day by consent of the committee and superintendent, and give instructive talks to the scholars.

Again the snow has come in abundance, making excellent sleighing. A number of sleighrides are the result. The Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church enjoyed one Wednesday evening to Thorndike and Three Rivers, then returned to Monson and had supper at the Cushman House. The empioyes of the South straw shop took the same route last evening but stopped at the Nassowano House in Palmer, where they had supper, dancing, etc. These are all which have been reported up to date, yet many private parties have embraced the opportunity and enjoyed the sport, in this class being six young ladies, who went to Ware and back on an ox sled.

The State Board of Agriculture held its annual meeting in Boston February 6th to 8th, inclusive. W. M. Tucker, the delegate from the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society, attended the meetings on Wednesday and Thursday, and found them very interesting and instructive. W. R. Sessions of Hampden was unanimously elected secretary for the ensuing year. Some members of the board expressed the opinion that, as bad as the gypsy moth has proved to be, it was not nearly as injurious in its effects as the Wilson bill will be. The rooms for the secretary of the board in the new part of the state house have been assigned, and when finished and ready for occupancy will be light, pleasant and commodious.

Academy Notes.

The two societies are busy preparing a program for the open session, to be held November 27.——One member of the school has been suspended for misconduct.——Delegates have been chosen to the Western Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association convention, to be held Saturday at Amherst. ——There were the regular prayer meetings this week.——On account of the storm Thursday there was no school.

McGregory & Casman of Springfield have just made sarcophagus for John T. Combs and family of this place. It is of Quincy granite, the surfaces being polished and ornamented with vine work. There are also seven large individual tablets, polished throughout, encircled with an ivy vine, the names coming under an ivy arch.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mrs. P. M. Brigham of Worcester is visiting Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Wall.

Burglars Cause a Fire.

The Liberty Hall block was burned to the ground yesterday morning. The fire originated in F. A. Fuller's store, and is supposed to have been caused by burglars. The flames were discovered about 5 o'clock by Levi Collins, who gave an alarm, but nothing could be done to prevent the burning of the building. One of Mr. Collins's sheds in the rear of the store was burned, but his barns and other buildings were miraculously saved. After the flames had destroyed the building it was found that the safe had been broken open. A small amount of money which it contained had been taken; the books and papers had been taken out, and probably were burned. The blacksmith's shop near the store was broken into, and a quantity of tools were stolen. The theory is that tramps broke into the shop and stole the tools, after which they visited the store and robbed the safe. In some way they started the blaze which resulted in the destruction of the building. The building was owned by Joseph Baldwin, being valued at about $3500, and was insured. Mr. Fuller's loss is estimated at about $4000, and was partly covered by insurance. The blow is a severe one to Mr. Fuller, as his books containing his accounts were all destroyed, and he must depend upon the honesty of his customers for his collections. He expects to start in business again soon.

WALES.

Stage Driver Dimmick did not make his trip to Palmer Tuesday because of the snow drifts.

George S. Rogers and wife, who have been confined to the house and bed for three weeks, are recovering.

Isaiah Hiscock has been confined to his room about three weeks with grippe, but is now getting out a little.

There is to be a special town meeting in the town hall next Monday evening, to see see if the town will authorize its treasurer to pay for the new bridge near Gibb's crossing, to see if the town will appropriate $1100 for the poor, and to see if the town will pay for work done on the highways.

F. R. Cunningham gave an interesting lecture last evening at the Unitarian vestry on "The Evolution of the Phonograph." The lecture was illustrated by mechanical devices and drawings, and a phonograph made by Mr. Cunningham was exhibited. There was no admission fee, but the lecture was much more interesting and instructive than many that a high price is paid for.

It is reported that Judge Strickland has given an opinion to the selectmen to the effect that when the town voted last spring to abolish its road commissioners it abolished them then and there, so that Messrs. Morse & Co. have never had any legal standing. A prominent citizen also raises the question, if the board presumptive could not resign neither could Messrs. Eaton and Cummings resign last spring; and has the town three, five or no commissioners at the present day?

Mrs. George K. Cutler, aged 63, died at her home on Tuesday, after an illness of only five days with the grippe. Mrs. Cutler was one greatly beloved by all who knew her. She has been a member of the East Congregational church for many years, and was always interested in the work connected with it. Mrs. Cutler was formerly Miss D. S. Bliss, a native of West Springfield. She leaves a husband, two sons—Rev. George B. Cutler of Ware and William H. Cutler of Chicago, and a daughter, Miss Carrie B. Cutler of Ware. Two sisters, Mrs. Austin Cummings and Mrs. A. L. Fenn, both of Ware, survive her.

Horatio Fisherdick, a wealthy citizen who has been drinking heavily of late, while in a state of intoxication on Saturday evening was robbed of $92 by John Launier, known as "Nazzar." The robbery took place back of Caryl's saloon, where the men had been drinking shortly before. They were seen together, and in a few minutes Launier came back alone. He was watched until Chief of Police Fitzgerald was notified, who took him to the lockup for searching. At first but little money was found, but later the remainder, $85, was discovered in the toe of his boot. The evidence is so strong that it will be some years before Ware will be troubled with him again.

Rev. Mr. Kelsey, assistant pastor at Berkley Temple, Boston, addressed a meeting of men at the chapel Tuesday evening. The subject was "Men's Work for Men." He said it was personal work that was needed. The best sermons most eloquently delivered amounted to but little without this personal effort, and one to be the most effective must be such a Christian in the shop or counting room every day that they will be pointed out as earnest, honest Christian men. To reach men one must adapt himself to the needs of those he is trying to reach. Go down to where the men are, no matter how low; at the same time have the holy love and sympathy of the Savior to aid. After the address questions were asked and answered in reference to the work in Berkley Temple. A social hour was afterward enjoyed, cake and coffee being served.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 14, 1894.

The movement for sessions of the Legislature at four o'clock in the afternoon, which was begun by President Butler of the Senate and which was approved unanimously by that body, failed by a unanimous vote in the House. It did not come to a direct vote there, but the House went on record unanimously against the idea. The Senate is to be credited with good intentions, but not with as good judgment as the House. Senate work is always easier than work in the House, and an afternoon in the Senate does not signify as much as in the House. By the time the House members have finished three hours of committee work and then have done their afternoon work there is no time for good work afterward. There is something plausible to be said for the Senate side, but it is not broad enough to cover all the facts, and the House view is most sensible.

Opposition is made to the increase of capital of the Bell Telephone Company, and the remonstrances have begun to come in so as to show an organized effort. The remonstrance is a printed slip and the indorsement is in print, as if a large number more were expected. Many people seem disposed to "jump on" the telephone company, and the increase of capital will probably not find an easy enactment.

Lines are being formed for the coming taxation struggle. Not only have the petitioners for a repeal of the law taxing foreign corporation stock put in a paper of imposing length and of prodigious weight, considering the character of the signers and the millions of money represented, but the people who believe that all personal property should be taxed, no matter if it has been taxed once before outside of the state, have begun to send in their petitions for such tax laws as will compel all property owners to make returns. Gov. McKinley of Ohio is quoted to the effect that capital should bear its full proportion of taxes.

Bearing on the same line is the effort to repeal the collateral inheritance tax on the one hand, and the effort on the other to extend it so as to include direct inheritances and successions. So public-spirited and unquestionably honest a man as Richard H. Dana is warmly for the repeal of the present law on the ground that it works great injustice and tends to foster extravagance on the part of the state. A case in point, he might have said, is Senator Bill's plan to apply the whole of this tax to improving the roads of the state.

A phase of the progress of science in agriculture and horticulture is illustrated by the petition of the agricultural college people for an appropriation of $7700 for an electric plant at the college. Part of it is for power, because modern invention has so revolutionized the dairy industry that hand machines are no longer up with the times. Part of it is for experiments with electricity in the growth of plants. It will be remembered that electrical experiments elsewhere have shown the great beneficial effects of electricity in the development of plant life. This seems to point to the time when every farmer, to meet the competition of modern times, must include in the list of plants he cultivates an electric plant. It may not make his other plants grow like lightning, but if he does not have it and his neighbors do, they will be pretty sure to beat him like thunder, and to have a lot of beets without planting a seed.

The committee on public service has reported a bill to raise the salary of the secretary of the State Board of Education from $3000 a year and $400 for travel, to $4000 a year and $500 for travel. The board says that Mr. Dickinson might have had it, if he had asked for it.

The more progress that has been made with the hearings for a new state normal school, the more remarkable does the enthusiasm for it appear. Leading men of the towns and cities which are competing for the school come to the state house in large numbers, and it has been the very best people of Berkshire, Franklin, Worcester and Middlesex counties who have been present. No clearer proof could be given of the popularity of education in the old Bay state, and of the advantages which are likely to accrue to towns which employ professionally trained teachers. Whatever be the outcome of the hearings, normal school instruction has received a wide and complimentary advertising, which will make still less remunerative the probably inferior service of those who have no normal training. If young women cannot now have that training, it is their misfortune. If they can but do not, then it is their grievous fault, which they will most certainly pay dearly for if they ever try to secure an engagement as teacher in the public schools. This singular tribute to the value of normal school instruction shows how wise and far-seeing was the service of thelate secretary of the State Board of Education—John W. Dickinson.

Particular attention should be given to a story which was told on Wednesday by ex-Representative Dolan of Lawrence to the committee on election laws, which was considering the report of the recess committee on caucus reform. He was chairman of the Democratic city committee in 1888, and proposed substantially the chief reforms which are recommended by the pending bill. He was unsuccessful at first, and after he did succeed one year, the Democratic ring politicians beat him, but the Republicans, who now control the city, are so satisfied that he is right that they will use the method hereafter. In brief it is merely for an honest expression of popular judgment and will at the caucus. The Australian system of voting is used for the sake of a secret ballot, and the polls are open from three o'clock in the afternoon till eight in the evening for the sake of allowing all voters to vote. Attendance at the caucuses in the one year the plan was tried rose from 650 to 2200; there were no bolting nominations; the party was united and successful. It seems that it is practicable to reform the caucuses, and that what will work well in a country town will not do at all in the cities. LANDON.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Dr. G. Howard Jones of Boston says that Ayer's Hygienic Coffee will fill a long felt want to persons who cannot use coffee on account of the effect it produces on the liver. Principal grocers sell it.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

For the Multitude.

Many great blessings of the world can only be had by the few, but here is one for the benefit of all, and absolutely free of charge. Nothing is of more importance to us than our health. It has, until recently, been impossible for the poor, or those living far from large cities, to obtain the best medical advice except at great expense. But now comes forward one of our greatest and most successful specialists in curing nervous and chronic diseases and offers to every one, far and near, the privilege of consulting him by letter, without charge. This is none other than the well-known Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the discoverer of that wonderful medicine, Dr. Green's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

You who have sought in vain to learn what you are suffering from, or to obtain help, write him a description of your complaint, and he will return you a letter stating exactly what your disease is, and thoroughly describing each symptom, so that you can clearly understand just what ails you. And all this is entirely free of expense to you. The doctor gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and is having wonderful success in treating disease through his system of letter correspondence, using as he does, nothing but harmless vegetable remedies in his practice. Write the doctor at once all about your complaint. It is the surest way to regain your health.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February, 1894.

The famous statue of Justice from the World's Fair may be seen here for a week, beginning February 19th. This statue was modeled after Miss Ada Rehan. It is of solid silver, and its bullion value is $64800. It weighs 9700 ounces; is nine feet high, and takes fifteen men to handle it. The sculptor, Mr. R. H. Park of Chicago, was paid $7,700 for modeling the figure in clay. The casting cost $4000. The silver was mined in Montana.

Everyone is invited to see it; no charge, of course, for the seeing.

It may be a month before you are ready for the new carpet; but it is none to soon to see what there is to see, and be turning the matter over in your mind.

One of the advantages you have here, and not everywhere, is that our stock is entirely new; not only new patterns, but a new way to sell them, viz., one price to everybody, and that the least possible.

Second floor of Pynchon street building.

Genuine China silks, printed in Lyons, France, 58 cents a yard; and 27 inches wide at that. One dollar is the regular price of the goods 24 inches wide; so you can see what the bargain amounts to.

New dress goods are coming in freely; but whatever happens probably no greater surprises are coming than

French 50-cent cashimere, all wool, 38 inch, at 33⅓ cents a yard; with seventeen first-rate colors to select from.

Whipcord 75-cent serge, all wool, 40 inch, at 50 cents a yard; black and twenty first-rate colors to select from.

Satin Berber, cotton and wool, 38 inch, 25 cents a yard. (Satin Berber is like rich and costly dara d' etc; rich in appearance; not costly.) Sixteen colors to select from.

Raye, a fine wool black dress stuff with a narrow cord. $1 up till now; now 75 cents; 40 inches wide.

French brocaded black weaves, seven different effects, 55 cents a yard; value 75.

Samples of any of the above sent, when requested.

If you need anything in the line of ladies' furnishings, now is the time to buy. Millinery has about gone by, but we have a few trimmed hats left, which we will sell far below cost. You can get a handsome hat at a very low figure, and the trimmings will be of such quality that they can be used again. There isn't much to do now, and you will be repaid for your trouble if you come in and look us over, even if you do not care to purchase.

TEETH EXTRACTED

Give Ear to the plain facts about Pearline, and then give Pearline a chance to prove them, by giving it a fair trial. Nothing else will give the same result. It washes safely, as well as surely; it cleans carefully, as well as easily. It is as cheap as soap and better. Anything that can be washed, can be washed best with Pearline. It lightens labor and does lightning work. As nearly as we can figure, about eight millions of women use it. Do you? You will sooner or later.

Beware of imitations. 287 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

On the West Shore R. R.

An Engineer and Conductor's Experience.

Mr. Wm. Huston, of Weehawken, N. J., the oldest engineer of the West Shore R. R., a member of Unity Division, No. 135, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, suffered for years from an aggravated kidney trouble and dyspepsia.

In conversation with our reporter, Mr. Huston spoke in glowing terms of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy as the one medicine that does what it is recommended to do. "For" said Mr. Huston: "I had been under the treatment of some of the best physicians, and used many preparations without deriving the least benefit. One day Conductor Frazer of our road said to me, 'If you want to get well and cure that kidney trouble and dyspepsia, just use Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.' I acted upon Mr. Frazer's advice, and used Favorite Remedy but a short while, when my old troubles passed away and I have been sound and well ever since.

One of Palmer's physicians said. "I prescribe Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy altogether now for dyspepsia, kidney or liver complaints, rheumatism, and all urinary diseases, instead of the old-time medicines, as the results from its use are quicker and more satisfactory, and I believe every dyspeptic or rheumatic victim should use it."

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation others are taking this valuable remedy." Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

Four Dogs.

The han'somest dog I ever see
(Said Brooks, with a knowing leer)
Was the one the General lent to me,
An' said he was good for deer.
Now everything proceeded right
So long as you kep' the fool in sight;
But all at once perhaps he'd see
A red-tailed squirrel agin a tree,
Or maybe a mother-bird distressed
For fear some fellow would find her nest;
An' once a rabbit family meek,
A-playin' the game of hide-an'-seek,
Or often a wavin' bush or limb
Would seem to make a dive at him;
Whatever would thus appear,
He'd start right off for it crazy-quick,
The same as a two-f.ot lunatic;
His mind would probably lose its grip
Concernin' the object of the trip;
An' he'd come home, some time that day,
A-lookin' as if to try to say,
"You're all of ye eq'al queer!"

The savagest dog I ever see
(Said Snooks, with a thoughtful air)
Was the one the Governor lent to me,
And said he was good for bear.
An' he was an interestin' sight,
A-gettin' the other dogs to fight;
He'd boldly draw 'em up t' the game,
An' hurl anathemas on the same;
They'd follow him straight, an' own the corn,
That he was a regular leader born;
But when the bear would open his jaws,
An' make a parenth'sis of his paws,
This dog stepped back with merciful smile,
An' let the other ones lead awhile.

But still he would skirmish near,
An' yell, bla-pheme, an' tear aroun'
The outer parts of the battle-groun';
An' pass his comrades, wounded red,
To worry the animal when 'twas dead;
Then, spick an' span as a dog could be,
He'd say, with a wag and a wink at me,
"I've human natur' to spare!"

The foolest dog I ever see
(Said Crooks—same afternoon)
Was the one the Coroner traded me,
Ah' said he was good for 'coon.
An' he was a cur of fair appear,
An' carried the blood for a fine career;
But e'en a'most every other night,
As soon as the moon would bob in sight,
He'd chase it off in elegant style,
For somethin' less than a hundred mile;
He'd keep a-goin', an' never stop,
Until he was all prepared to drop;
But if, by chance, he would stay it down,
He'd think he had run it out of town.

An' next day, not too soon,
All covered over with conscious shame,
Because he'd failed to bag his game,
He'd sneak it home with a lengthened jaw,
As if he had married a mother-in-law;
Yet seemed to be sayin', I had a whim,
To them who tried for to laugh at him,
"You've all of you got your moon!"

The homeliest dog I ever see
(Said Spooks, with an air of thought)
Was the one the Minister gave to me,
An' said he was good for naught.
But somehow 'r other, day by day,
He struck his gait, an' he made his way;
He j'ined the family, one by one,
But didn't perform as the pampered son;
He carried a cheerful tail an' face,
But wasn't desirous to embrace;
He didn't go sniffin' along our track,
But al'ays was glad to see us back;
He helped at huntin' an' loved the fun,
But al'ays knowed who carried the gun;
He schemed an' worked an' fought
To keep the thieves from our abode,
But never would superintend the road;
He managed to be our love and pride;
An' when that fellow fell down an' died,
He had a buryin' such as men
Gets give to 'em only now an' then;
For honesty can't be bought!"

Why Can't I Work?

Why Do I Get Weak and Tired so Easily?

Questions That Are Constantly Asked by Thousands.

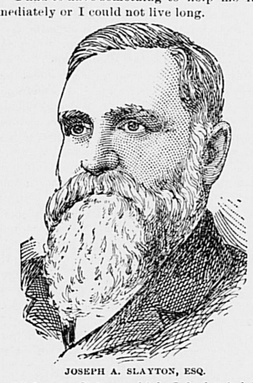
A Prominent Business Man Gives Advice Needed by Everybody.

The world is filled with weak, suffering men and women. Oh! if they could only be made well and strong how different their lives would be! And they can be so just as well as not. Read the following letter from Mr. Joseph A. Slayton, one of the most prominent men of Calais, Vt.:

"Two years ago I was taken with the grippe. I had to take to my bed and was very sick. I came very near death. I was confined to my bed six weeks. When I got up I was very weak and could but just get around. I employed physicians who did me very little good.

"I had serious trouble with my heart, so bad that I fell and received serious injury. I was completely run down and could not do any work on account of nervous prostration. I was thoroughly discouraged. A friend advised me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"I had to have something to help me immediately or I could not live long.



JOSEPH A. SLAYTON, ESQ.

"Other medicines which I had tried did me no good. I took one bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and it set me right on my feet.

"I could not help having faith in this wonderful medicine even if I wanted to. It cured me completely. Before I took it I was so dizzy I did not dare go away to work alone, I would fall down and hurt me badly. Since taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy my health is good and my nerves are steady. I know it is the best medicine and advise all to use it."

If you are weak, sickly, nervous, run down, or have any nervous or chronic disease, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will surely cure you. The spring is the best time to take it. You can always be cured quickest at this season. Everybody needs a spring medicine, and there is none which will do as much for you as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is a positive cure. Try it. It is purely vegetable and harmless, and is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted personally or by letter, free of charge.

Town Meeting.

A meeting was recently held in town
To help the poor. Good Minister Brown
Arose, and made a splendid oration
About the present business stagnation,
And he said, for his part, he could not see
What caused the depression and misery
Of the unemployed, and prayed before long
The weak might triumph over the strong.

Deacon White came forward midst loud applause,
And made a speech on effect and cause;
Then old Judge Greene spoke on tariff and tin,
The political parties out and in.
Professor Wilson talked of the ocean
Seen on Mars, and perpetual motion!
They talked of everything—of the weather,
Science, art, taxes, free wool and leather.

A wise old Farmer said never a word,
But listened and smiled at all that he heard;
When they got through, he stepped out to the front
Of the platform, and said, "Perhaps I'm blunt,
But talk is cheap, and you're all great scholars,
The speeches is fine, but where's the dollars?
Now here is fifty—it's money they need,
Fine speeches and talk make mighty poor feed!"

—Henry Coyle.

THE OLD PIANO.

It stood in the show window of a large music store on a much frequented avenue, and as its extreme old age and ugliness were accentuated by a price mark, some of the passers-by paused to inspect the valuable ruin.

"Papa, did they make ugly little frights of pianos like that for people to play on?" asked a happy child of her young father.

"Not in my day, child," answered the father, gently amused.

"Is that the thing my grandmother played when she was young!" asked a graceless youngster of a white-haired man beside him.

"Your grandmother was not born when that thing was made, boy," retorted the grandfather disdainfully.

No one admired the ugly, old-fashioned thing that was jeered at for its awkwardness, and it stood there alone of its kind, stiff and clumsy, showing through its cracked coat of veneer all the landmarks of time, the pitiful helplessness of age.

Presently a quaint old woman with a basket on her arm hobbled up to the window. In earlier days she had been known as a "character," now she was shunned as a crank. Her dress—if such it could be called—was the rags of a gentlewoman. Her face resembled those porcelain lamps in which a rose light burns. But her light had gone out, leaving an ash color. When she saw the old piano with its yellow keys set far apart like the sentinel teeth of age, she clasped her shriveled hands and gave a great cry.

"Where did they find it? and how dare they exhibit it here? When I saw it last 'twas in grandfather's room with the tall clock and the old harmonium. It was old, old then. I used to play for the poor old man when I was home from school—that was before I ran away with handsome Harry. Ah, me, ah, me, there is something wrong here"—she tapped her head lightly—"it's all wrong—a mad world, my masters."

Then she laughed shrilly, and the crowd cheered her good-humoredly.

"It won't speak for you, but I can make it sing—'listen!'" she shrieked.

The crowd made way for her to enter the store and the dealer, thinking to advertise his antique possession, helped the little old woman up into the window and seated her before the old piano as if she had been a prima donna.

Selfishness, my brothers. It is at the root of many a kindly action in this world, but then—

Tinkle-tinkle-tinkle. The sounds produced from those yellow keys were not as musical as a sheep bell's jangle, but the crowd laughed and cheered, and the frail old fingers—it was said they had done the business for handsome Harry, but that was when she was mad—struck a chord, and "Auld Lang Syne" floated out in a weird melody that was full of passion and pain, and the sobbing of the loneliness of life. Then a pause and the accustomed fingers struck an air of the past, and a mournfully sweet voice sung the words of an old love song:

"Once you said you loved me dearly."

The people whispered to each other that she had been a great musician in her day; all pressed forward to hear her and—no one smiled.

"I'll buy that old piano," said a gruff voice, "it's got more music to the square inch than any of your new-fangled instruments—it's got a soul in it, so it has."

"Did they tell you I was false, Harry, darling."

She sang the old song through, and broke off to give them "Bonaparte Crossing the Alps." They could hear the very tramp of the martial feet as her fingers struck the loose keys that responded with their last thrill of harmony to her compelling touch.

"It's a trick to sell the piano—the music-dealer stands in with her—but she and the old instruments are mates," said a man in the crowd.

"Aye," answered his friend; like those bird-whistles the street fakirs sell—no one ever can make such music out of them as those fellows do. It's one of the tricks of the trade."

The old woman turned a white, tired face on them.

"Ghosts, ghosts, all of ye; but this is real," and she touched the keys that answered with a plaintive air.

"Mad," they whispered to each other. But the music she played held them spell-bound. It was the cry of the homeless, the desolate, voiced like a prayer. Men took off their hats and bowed their heads; women sobbed. The music became a chant—a requiem:

"There's no place like home,
There's no place like home,
Home, sweet, sweet home."

As the last note died away the singer laid her head on the keys and did not lift it again.

"This piano is sold," said the dealer, as he stepped to his show-window and dropped the curtain.—Mrs. M. L. Rayne in Detroit Free Press.

LION-TAMING.

There are tamers and trainers. A tamer is simply a man of unlimited nerve. A trainer has nerve and judgment. My friend tells me that a trainer can teach a lion about as many tricks as can be taught a dog. Sometimes the lion himself will unconsciously suggest a new trick. I had to train four lions to jump a gate. One of them was so stubborn that I determined to leave him for the last. When I came to him he was lying in a corner. I began striking him. He sprang up and came toward me. He had a wicked look, so I hit him a sharp blow from below on the end of the nose with my cane, the only weapon I ever take into the den. The blow stung him so it turned him around, and, as if to escape another, he jumped up to the bars and remained standing with his fore feet upon one of them. He gave me a look which said plainly, 'I'll stop here if you won't do it again.' He looked superb standing there drawn up to his full height. So I sat down on the gate, lit a cigarette, and kept him in that position till I had finished. I trained the other lions in the act, and a fine appearance the four made standing against the bars.

Another friend of mine was in the audience when a lioness killed a trainer at the Paris Hippodrome. She had been trained to approach him from behind, rise on her hind legs and place her front paws upon his shoulders. She did so this time. Then quickly thrusting her head over his shoulder she seized him by the throat and literally tossed him over her back. The other lions in the den fell upon him, and though he was rescued from the den he died within an hour.

I asked the trainer why he never armed himself with more than a cane. Tamers rarely did, he said. There was no use. A lion's attack was like a thunderbolt. One bite, one blow with the paw was deadly. The men stationed outside with carbines and red-hot irons are there only to drive the lion off the body of his victim, so that he can be got out of the den alive, and the spectators saved the horror of seeing him devoured.

MORE THAN HE COULD ENDURE.

He came into the office of one of our leading attorneys and plunged dejectedly down into a chair.

"Say," he began, are you a tip-top lawyer? Never fail in a case?"

"I try to be," was the lawyer's modest reply.

"What can I do for you?"

"I want to get a divorce."

"Have you sufficient cause for separation?"

"You just bet I have."

"Well, kindly tell me your troubles, and I will let you have my opinion."

"Five years ago I married a country girl because I thought I'd get a sensible one. Got that down?"

"Yes."

"Well, things went nicely for two years, then came the rub."

"Yes."

"The first thing she did was to go and buy a lot of Bertha M. Clay's love-sick novels to find out how society in London was carried on."

"Yes."

"I didn't mind that, but after she had nosed around a bit she began to get her high-falutin' ideas."

"Yes."

"Well, she commenced with makin' me get two servants. Then she made us have breakfast off the mantelpiece—that is, get up an' help yourself."

"Yes."

"Then she made me belong to three or four clubs, an' made it hot for me if I came home earlier than 1 o'clock. Got that?"

"Next, she made the servants call her milady. But she capped the climax by sayin' one day that she was suffering from en we. I went to a doctor an' asked him what the deuce that was, an' he told me it was French for that tired feeling. That settled it. From that time on it was en we, an' enternong an' bullyung, an' saloong, an' parley voo, an'—well then she went in for music. She called Wagner Vogner, Liszt 'Leest,' an' ended the whole business by calling me her charmangie. Say, don't you think you could fix it up right off, before she takes to runnin' around with Italian singers and runnin' for school commissioner?"

The lawyer smiled a sad smile.

"I'm afraid you can't get a divorce on these things. Will you pay your $10 for my opinion now, or shall I send in my bill?"

And the other took out ten silver circles and went over to the police station and asked for a night's lodging.—Syracuse Journal.

LOVE IN RAGS.—A baby carriage stood in front of a small shop. In it slept a pretty, dimpled baby. A drowsy puppy lay on the pillow, its black nose close to the baby's cheek.

By the carriage stood a ragged little waif, dirty, with scarcely enough clothes for decency. She stroked in turn the baby and the puppy.

A lady, passing by, noticed the strange picture,—the beautiful baby, the little dog, the ragged child. The baby's mother was in the shop.

"Are you caring for these?" said the lady to the waif.

A wonderful smile lit up the dirty little face. "No, please, ma'am, I'm only loving them."

Of the late Mrs. Eunice Emerson of Hermon, Me., who died the other day in her ninety-eighth year, it is related that up to her last moments she could give the name and age of every one of her twelve children, seventy-five grandchildren and forty-eight great-grandchildren from memory, without hesitation or mistake.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by foreing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

The House at the Head of the Town.

Many a change it has undergone,
And many a tenant known
Since my infant eyes first stared upon
Its walls of lime and stone.
Since I, as a boy, the dwelling viewed
Where my humble life began,
The roof has been many a time renewed,
And the rafters smoked to tan;
Lintels and porches, once so white,
Are weather-stained, worn and brown.
All has changed but the air and light
In the house at the head of the town.

Merrily there the shuttle flew
Through the woof of linen green,
When I, as a child, looked up at the blue
Through the chimney wide and clean;
Sweetly there the good mother sang
In the long summer days of yore,
When father and she were blithe and young,
And life's path lay fair before.
Now she has gone to a home above,
She has gained her heavenly crown,
And naught remains of her name but love
In the house at the head of the town.

Well I remember the smooth, brown latch
Made for the thumb to press;
The sharpened eaves and the roof of thatch,
Warm and light as a goodly dress;
The hawthorn tree, and the wall flowers red
That bloomed at the gable ends,
The marigold's flame, and the flower-bed
That for rusticity made amends;
And well I remember the blue-eyed girl—
A rose in her rustic gown,
Who, dropping in rarely, seemed like a pearl
In the house at the head of the town.

O, dear old house, like a rough-coated shell,
You held my pearl for an hour!
O, dear old home, many a sad farewell
Takes place 'tween the frost and the flower.
But the sky is blue o'er the dear old home,
And the grass is green there still,
And happier children rest or roam
In the hollow or on the hill.
That home and that hill, unknown to fame,
I would raise to some renown,
Were the hopes realized that to me came
In the house at the head of the town.

Like Noah's dove, sent forth at first
From the ark and the one of her kind,
On the sea of life I pine and thirst,
And no rest for my foot can find;
There are homes by the million in this fair land,
Habitations good to see,
For the rich man there is a welcome hand,
But no home and no heart for me;
And I long for the day the night to bring,
When at peace I shall lay me down,
Where daisies spring and the song birds sing
Near the house at the head of the town.

MOSES TEGGART.

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE.

"Yes, gentlemen," said the young lieutenant, "you may say what you like, conscience is an affair of geography. Put the best man you like down in a foreign country, and he'll laugh at things that he'd drop a hard hand on here in Gotham. Don't believe me—eh? I fancy I can convince you. You all know old Roberts, and know that he's as good a Christian as he is a captain, and that's not saying a little; well, I've seen that man twisting and turning like a cat on hot bricks for fear that a rogue should be punished, and it wasn't because the fellow had only broken some petty local law either, for he would have got five years' Sing Sing here, and the captain have been the first to say, 'He's got off easy.'

"I was serving in the United States of America frigate Delaware, and we had been cruising on the China station for a couple of years, and for the principal part of that time we'd had a young Chinaman helping in the cookhouse. He was a pleasant, good-tempered young fellow, not bad-looking for a Celestial, and had become a great favorite with us all, officers as well as men.

"There was a bit of romance attaching to him; he was in love with the orphan niece of an opulent ship chandler at Hongkong, and that was why he was with us. His sweetheart, little Sing Ooh, was a great beauty, with eyes like buttonholes, and 'golden lilies' no bigger than a three-years-old's fists; so her uncle had made up his mind that she must connect him with some middle-class mandarin or rich banker, and when Wan Lee made his advances the old rascal simply demanded a payment of 500 ounces of silver as a recompense for the expense he had been put to in bringing her up.

"Now, as far as Wan Lee was concerned, he might just as well have asked 5000, and that the old rascal knew very well, and doubtless thought that when poor little Sing had taken time to dry her tears and reflect how impossible it was she should never become Mrs. Wan Lee, she would, like a sensible girl, take the man of her uncle's choice rather than run the risk of becoming that most miserable of created beings, a Chinese old maid. And no doubt Lung Sien ('Long Sinner, the sailors called him, and they weren't far wrong) was correct in his calculations, for Chinese girls are very much like their American sisters.

"Well, Wan Lee had taken service on the Delaware as a last despairing hope. All the foreign devils were rich, and surely among them there must be some chance of making money. But the poor fellow found that, even on such a mine of wealth as the Delaware must have seemed, there were very close limits to the amount to be picked up by a 'pigtail.'

"Had it been only a small sum he needed, he might have got help when the men knew his story, but 500 ounces means $500, more or less, and that was beyond even Jack's open-heartedness.

"So poor Wan's gains were confined to what he could save out of his monthly $5, and that was roughly shaken every third month (when we ran into Honkong) by the preserved violets, candied slugs, and similar dainties which he would smuggle in to Sing Ooh, for human nature is pretty much the same whether under a dude's silk hat or a coolie's skull cap.

"We were lying at anchor on one of our visits, and as it was my turn for leave I had togged up and was coming on deck when I was summoned to the captain. 'Oh, Mr. Arnold,' he said, 'I want you to do a little commission for me.' 'Certainly, sir. What is it?' 'Why, its rather a queer affair. Wan Lee says his relatives have raised the money for his marriage, and begs me to let a 'Melican officer' go with him to see it paid over to Lung Sien—and, by the by, Mr. Arnold, as I have promised to put him ashore at Cheefoo when we weigh anchor, I want you to keep an eye on him and see that he comes back to the ship after he is married. It may be all right, and he is a very civil fellow, but I shall have the officers' jewelry looked over. It's rather queer his coming into this money so suddenly.'

"Of course I wasn't sorry for the chance of seeing a little real Chinese life, so, solemnly promising to keep my eyes glued on to Wan Lee, I went on shore with him in the gig.

"Wan, who was dressed in his best, took me to a little teahouse near the quay, where we found a couple of coolies waiting for us, for the expectant bridegroom had come on shore the night before and made his preparations. I expected to see some of his relatives waiting to meet us, but no one appeared save the proprietor, who received us most obsequiously, and led us into the back room, where Wan took out a key and opened the door of a little off-room he had hired for a treasure chamber. In it was a long box, which he instructed the coolies to take up and follow us. Now, as you most likely all know, there are no Chinese coins larger than the 'cash,' about six of which go to a cent. So all large sums are paid by silver ingots, which are always carefully weighed at each transaction, and the balances adjusted by strings of cash, so I could make a very fair guess at what the box contained. We hadn't far to carry it, for, of course, Long Sinner's place was near the river, and very shortly we were in the cool shade of the mat-hung piazza and Wan was unpacking the box.

"The old merchant had evidently had notice of our coming, for his money scales were ready, and in the room behind the shop we could hear soft voices and the swish of calico. As might be expected, my companion had eyes for nowhere but the door into that apartment, and the old man and his cashier had the weighing pretty much to themselves. I nudged Wan once, and asked if he oughtn't to check the weights, but his only answer was, 'Lung Sien honorable merchant, if watchee him take away his face,' (namely, make him blush, which I knew to be a grave breach of Chinese etiquette). I must own I stared a little at Wan's ill-timed politeness. I've been in love a few times myself, and I knew how soft it makes a man, but it struck me if it could blind poor Wan to the character of the villainous old chandler opposite us, he must have it badly; but it was no affair of mine, I had done my duty by warning him. So when Lung Sien had weighed each bar very carefully, he brought over the receipt, signed and countersigned by himself and his cashier, and also the balance, for the bars weighed a few ounces over the 500, which he handed to Wan Lee in long strings of cash, for I can tell you a dollar in Chinese currency makes quite a respectable show.

"The next thing to settle was the marriage, and Lung Sien intimated that the 'honorable festivities' should take place as soon as the astrologers had picked out a lucky day; but this didn't suit the lover; he very soon informed the old gentleman that, being on the books of the Delaware, he was 'allee same Melican man,' and that he meant to be married at the American consulate that very day, whatever might be the luck. The uncle remonstrated pretty vigorously, and threatened to return the silver and break off the match rather than submit to such an indignity; but Wan was firm, and it ended in the matter being left to Sing Ooh's decision, and that young lady was brought out from the back shop to give it. She was not long in making up her mind; her remarks to the old gentleman I was not scholar enough to understand, but from the stamp of the small foot and the expression of the little mouth it seemed something decisive, and from the way her lover and the coolies laughed I think it must have been slightly sarcastic. In fact, I fancy that the idea that had passed through my mind, that if Lung Sien was left with the money in his hands a lucky day might be some time in coming, had also presented itself to her, and she spoke as a young woman would be apt to under such circumstances. Anyhow, she settled the question, for a jinrickshaw was fetched and the poor little maid packed it in and trotted off to the consulate. Neither her uncle nor any of his family accompanied her, for he had evidently washed his hands of her. Her belongings were bundled out; one little bamboo box held all, and that was carried on the head of a coolie, who did not need to shirk his turn at the 'rickshaw in consequence.

"When we got to the consulate the poor girl was helped out and up the steps, looking rather frightened and woebegone, as ladies, white or yellow, will do when they've got their own way, and are not quite sure what's coming of it; and any one who knows the amount of fuss and ceremony attending a Chinese marriage, even of the lowest class, can understand her feelings in such a position.

"'With no glad bells, no marriage feast,
No joyous home returning.'

"But, pale and trembling as she was, there was no back-out in her, and, by the aid of the interpreter, the happy pair were made one in a very few minutes. Then my worry began, for I was afraid that Wan Lee would make some excuse for not going straight back to the ship, and if he did I should be at my wits' end to find out how to fulfil my promise to Captain Roberts.

"If Hongkong had been under native rule, it would have been easy enough; just take him by the pigtail and march him down to the boat, and let the captain and the American consul put it right afterward with the authorities.

"But under the despotic rule of her Britannic Majesty, where a man mustn't wallop his own nigger, this would have been a risky proceeding, and I should have been stopped before I had got three streets' length by some puggareed oppressor.

"However, my trouble did not last long, for Wan himself was the first to propose an immediate return to the Delaware. So I escorted him and the 'rickshaw to the quay and did not leave them until I saw both in the gig and the oars splashing up the water. Then I went off for my own private spree. Well, that has nothing to do with this tale, so I'll only say that the next morning I was just thinking of getting up (I was staying with an old friend in the tea trade) and trying to make sure whether the thing on my shoulders was a head or a forge with the hammers going inside it, when there came a knock at the door, and one of our midshipmites was shown in. 'Captain Roberts wishes you to meet him at the police office at once, sir; Wan Lee has been arrested, the silver he paid for his wife wasn't silver at all, and you are wanted for a witness.' You may guess I tumbled out sharp and dressed at a sailor's rate, and was soon on my way, the boy giving me the particulars as we went along. After the first surprise was over I didn't so much wonder at Wan Lee's fraud as at his being so mad as to stay near the scene of his knavery, knowing how soon it would be discovered. When we had got to the office the case had commenced before the police magistrate and a red-buttoned mandarin, who was sitting with him to act as assessor on knotty points of Chinese law. Wan Lee was in the dock, looking pallid, but not so cast down as I expected; but poor little Sing Ooh was weeping bitterly, in spite of a gruff word of sympathy given her by the old captain from time to time. There were the usual court loungers and a number of liberty men from the frigate mixed among them freely expressing their sympathy for Sing Ooh and their desire to give 'Long Sinner' a keel-hauling. Lung Sien was giving his evidence as I came in, and it was terribly simple and plain. Wan Lee had paid him the silver, it was put straight into the strong room, and on being tested in the morning was found to be base metal.

"On the magistrate asking him if it was his custom to take silver without at once testing it, he replied, 'Certainly not,' but that the fact of an American officer, whom he knew to belong to the Delaware, coming with the prisoner, had thrown him off his guard, as it seemed to corroborate the tale which Wan Lee had told him the night before, that the officers of the frigate had raised the money by subscription for him.

"I felt rather a buzzing in my head at this answer, which was not improved by Frank Morley, the wildest young scapegrace in the ship, whispering in my ear, 'Oh, Arnold! Arnold! only to think of the cute Jack Arnold being used as a tool by a Chinese coolie; what will they say at Harvard when I write home?' However, the magistrate seemed to think it was a very reasonable answer, and the plaintiff left the stand, to be followed by his cashier, whose evidence was only a copy of his master's. Then came my turn, and I, of course, corroborated them as far as the buying of the silver was concerned.

"Then a silversmith was called to prove the baseness of the metal, and that closed the case for the prosecution, and very black it looked against poor Wan Lee as the magistrate turned to him for his defence. 'That poor little girl is in for two years' widowhood at least,' whispered Frank to me; 'they can't give him less for such an attempt.'

"But before the prisoner was sworn following the very sensible custom of the 'middle kingdom,' where they don't shut out the evidence of the man who may be supposed to know most about the case, a question arose as to how the oath was to be administered. The other witnesses had taken it in the usual Shintoo way, by breaking a plate, and the mandarin was for swearing Wan in the same way; but the magistrate, looking to the marriage of the day before, thought the oath should be put in the usual Christian form. After some little discussion the prisoner's opinion was asked, but that astute young man, with an evident determination to offend neither of his judges, disclaimed any partiality. 'Kill im cock, break im plate, smell im book—allee same, allee good ways,' averred this Celestial broad churchman; so it was finally decided to let him 'smell im book,' on the ground of economy.

"On being sworn, his tale was as simple as his opponent's.

"He was a poor orphan, the honorable court was his father and mother; he had bought his wife and paid for her with good silver, and he could not imagine why Lung Sien should charge him with the crime he was accused of. The magistrate pointed out that the charge did not rest on Lung Sien's evidence alone; he was corroborated on all points by independent testimony; the officers swore to the bars being sold, and the silversmith, a respectable tradesman, had testified to their baseness. Would the prisoner like to have it tested by another expert? No; the prisoner was quite willing to accept the honorable witness's statement; but still the fact remained that he had paid good silver, and he could only imagine that Lung Sien had changed the bars to be revenged on him for insisting on an immediate marriage.

"This line of defence seemed very strong to Wan's friends, the sailors, in the body of the court, and a loud murmur against Lung Sien arose, which, alas! was destined to die out before the magistrate's matter-of-fact suggestion that he should call the person he got the bars from to testify whether they were the same or not. But this, however willing to oblige the honorable court, the prisoner declared his inability to do, —because he had saved the silver up little by little and had cast the ingots himself. I must confess with shame that this artless plea produced a considerable amount of 'loud smiling' among the very sailors who had backed up the prisoner a few minutes before.

"The good old captain, who had about as much humor in his composition as an overloaded camel, and whose honest heart was full up with pity for the poor bride, turned on them with a look of scorn, before which the laughter soon died out; but there was some little excuse for the poor fellows. None but those who knew the princely salary poor Wan had been receiving since the day he came on board the Delaware—'fair change for a nickel, counting rags and bones,' as the boatswain judicially expressed it—could feel the full force of this assertion.

"But though the court must have been unable to appreciate the beauty of the defence at its full value, is was clear it had pretty well made up its mind, and that the only question in debate between its members was the amount of the sentence. Poor Wan Lee, however, was fumbling about in the lining of his round hat, and at last produced a carefully-folded piece of paper, which he held out toward the judgement seat, explaining that it was Lung Sien's receipt for the bars and entreating that it might be compared with them. As he held it out I happened to be looking in Lung Sien's direction, and what I saw there startled me. Could those starting eyes, that pallid ghastly countenance belong to the snug, oily merchant? I drew Morley's attention to it, and for a moment he stared as hard as I did; but the next a light seemed to break in on him. Though young, he had had more service in the Chinese seas than I had; his local knowledge and general shrewdness gave him the clew, and in less than a minute he was over by Sing Ooh's side, trying to make her understand something in his Pidgin English. So far as the words went he might just as well have tried her with pure Boston; but his gestures were unmistakable, and the poor girl began to look up with a little hope brightening her features. The magistrate, after examing the paper, had given some orders, and the officials were busy weighing the bars. A dramatic scene it was to the mystified spectators, comprising all of the Delaware men except Frank.

"The magistrate and mandarin were conversing in an undertone, and evidently trying to conceal their amusement at something. Morley was boiling over with exultation, Lung Sien and his cashier were looking the picture of misery, and the good old captain was glaring at the lot.

"At last the fiery old man could stand it no longer, and slipping around behind me, laid his heavy hand on the shoulder of Frank, who had come back after his partially successful effort to cheer up the poor bride. 'What's in the wind, you young scapegoat?' he whispered hoarsely. 'You seem to be having some nice little joke all to yourselves. Is there any chance for the poor fellow—girl I mean.'

"'Nothing particular that I know of, captain,' answered Morley in his most provoking drawl, 'only it crossed my mind that if Lung Sien should happen to have taken advantage of Wan Lee's eagerness, and our young friend here's innocence, to cheat a little in the weight of those bars, it might be awkward for him just now.'

"The old man stared a moment as the idea slowly filtered into his mind, and then, 'He's done! by Jove!' broke from his lips, as his mighty hand rose and fell again on Morley's shoulder like a 20-ton steam hammer with patent grip attachment.

"It was the only time I ever heard him swear, and I believe that his shame at it caused him as much pain as his impetuosity did to poor Morley. For the rest of the time they spoke not. Poor Frank busied himself with tenderly trying to raise and straighten the crushed bones of his left shoulder with his right hand, while Captain Roberts was mainly occupied in hiding a two-foot blush with an 18-inch handkerchief.

"By this time the weights had been taken and handed up to the judges, and I must say the gravity with which they compared the two papers did them credit, as also did the calm tone in which the magistrate drew Lung Sien's attention to the discrepancy, and asked for an explanation.

"Highly creditable, too, was the manner in which the latter took the blow. He had had time to somewhat recover from the shock, and the eager and astonished air with which he compared the two papers would have made a Bowery actor's fortune; carefully did he examine them ere he handed them over to his cashier with some remarks, which, evidently, bore reference to the differences. Had there been but one bar he would doubtless have claimed a mistake in his receipts, but four ingots, each with different errors, varying from three to six ounces, and all in his own favor, were too much for even Chinese effrontery. Sadly did he hand them back to the usher, and gravely did he admit that he had misjudged an innocent man, that some one of his clerks must have abstracted the ingots from his safe and replaced them with the base metal in the hopes of delaying the discovery. So he freely withdrew from the prosecution.

"There was a quiet smile on the magistrate's face as he ordered the prisoner's release, but that was about all the quietness there was in that court. Wan Lee was instantly surrounded by a shouting crowd of sailors, and the poor injured innocent was partly dragged and partly carried out of court, along with the happy Sing Ooh.

"Poor Lung Sien had a longer stay, for he had to pay the different court fees, and his purse by the time he left was a good deal lighter than when he came in.

"We dropped down the river next day, and as we passed Cheefoo we put the happy pair ashore within twenty miles of Wan Lee's home, with a nice little sum collected for them as a start for housekeeping. At dinner time that day young Morley tried very mildly to chaff the captain on the inconsistency of a church member encouraging fraud; but the old man turned on him rather savagely: 'You young scamp,' he exclaimed, 'would you blame a dog for barking, or a Chinaman for swindling? they must act according to their lights. The next man of you that tries to jolly me I'll stop his shore leave as long as we are in Chinese waters.' So, as he was a man of his word, we dropped the subject."—John Bowtrey, in Gentlemen's Magazine.

"NO."

"No!" clear, sharp and ringing, with an emphasis which could not fail to arrest attention.

"I don't often hear such a negative as that," remarked one gentleman to another as they were passing the play ground of a village school.

"It is not often anyone hears it. The boy who utters it can say 'Yes,' too, quite as emphatically. He is a newcomer here, an orphan, who lives about two miles off with his uncle. He walks in every morning, bringing his lunch, and walks back at night. He works enough, too, to pay his board, and does more towards running his uncle's farm than the old man himself. He is the coarsest dressed scholar in the school, and the greatest favorite. Everybody knows just what to expect of him."

"Quite a character; I should like to see him. Boys of such sturdy make-up are getting to be scarce, while the world never had more need of them than now."

"All that is true, and if you wish to see Ned, come this way."

The speaker moved on a few steps, pausing by an open gate, near which a group of lads were discussing some exciting question.

"It isn't right, and I won't have anything to do with it." When I say 'No,' I mean it."

"Well, anyway, you needn't speak so loud and tell everybody about it," was responded impatiently.

"I am willing everybody should hear what I have got to say about it. I won't take anything that don't belong to me, and I won't drink cider anyway."

"Such a fuss about a little fun!

Karl Brush, employed at Marcy's livery stable, was thrown from a sleigh Tuesday night between Bondsville and Thorndike, and compelled to walk home. The horse came in all right with nothing broken.

Jane Austin came before the court Monday charged with concealing personal property bought on the installment plan. She denied the charge but was found guilty, and settled the case by paying the officer's fees and $15, which was due the company.

C. E. Little, who recently bought L. W. Parkhurst's milk route, has introduced a new method in distributing milk. It is delivered in glass jars, tightly closed, and as they are filled full the milk is not shaken up in carrying it about before it is delivered.

The morning subject at the Congregational church next Sunday will be "Strength from Doing Christ's Commands." In the evening there will be a gospel praise service under the care of the Men's Sunday Evening Club. Mr. John J. Eberhardt, cornetist, of Springfield, has been engaged to play at this service.

The relief committee is having numerous calls for assistance, and is running out of supplies in certain lines, particularly those needed for children, and would like more contributions. One place which was visited yesterday contained four children, not one of whom had either a pair of shoes or a pair of stockings.

The belt on the governor at the electric station parted late last night, and but for the thoughtfulness and quick action of the attendant the lights would have gone out, but by quickly shutting off the street lights the incandescents were left burning with but little diminution of power, and the belt was soon repaired.

Alexander Gordon crushed his hand badly in the Rogers & Osgood machine shop Saturday morning. He was turning a shaft on a lathe, when it fell, catching his hand in the machinery. Dr. Wilkins dressed the wound, which proved not to be as serious as was at first supposed. Mr. Gordon will be unable to attend to his work for some time.

Rev. H. F. Moulton will preach next Sunday morning in the Universalist church on "The Significance of the Lenten Season." In the evening there will be a vesper service, and the subject of the sermon will be "Knowledge." The hymns of Whittier and Alice and Phoebe Cary will be sung, and short sketches of the lives of the authors given.

The wheelmen interested in forming a bicycle club met Tuesday evening and discussed the matter, 31 names having been secured as sure members, with the probability of several more when the organization is completed. Committees were appointed to draw up by-laws and to investigate the matter of rooms, and another meeting will be held a week from next Tuesday.

The overseers of the poor have been taking the annual inventory at the town farm this week, and find the valuation to be $2209.30, which is a gain of $203.42 over last year, and a gain of $443.91 in the two years under the present warden. The expenses at the farm the past year have been $1150. The whole number of inmates during the year was 25, and the average 16½. The cost per week per inmate has been $1.40, the lowest for several years. There has been a great deal of sickness at the farm, and four deaths, a larger number than the aggregate for five years previous. One child was born at the farm, which has been adopted into a good family in Springfield. Michael Manning, one of the inmates, went to the Massachusetts General Hospital at Boston this morning.

State Primary School Notes.

E. G. Ward is spending the day with friends in East Brookfield.

Twenty-five boys were received Saturday from the Lyman school at Westboro.

The members of the Boy's Improvement Club are enjoying the reading of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which was presented to them last week by Miss Minnie Moore.

Dr. Gable gave a birthday party Tuesday evening. A large number of friends were present, and a pleasant time is reported. Harry E. Sisk succeeded in capturing the first prize, a handsome cup and saucer, in the guessing contest which was one of the principal features of the entertainment.

Washington's Birthday was pleasantly spent by the boys. The coasting and skating were perfect, and almost the entire day was devoted to these sports. At 12.30 a salute of ten guns was fired. A number of the officers took a sleighride in the afternoon, and at 6.30 the superintendent addressed the boys on the observation of the day, after which the boys responded with several facts in connection with Washington's life.

License or No License.

Editor of the Journal:—In the interesting town campaign which is upon us it seems but fair to ask that anyone who may have a communication for the papers should allow it to be published over his signature. Upon such questions as the present it is always important to know what the moral character of the writer is, and also his standing in the community. If he is a manufacturer and finds that the legalized saloon tends to make his men more sober and industrious, or if he is a merchant and finds that the saloon makes less bad bills, or if he is a farmer and finds that the open saloon helps him to sell his produce and get his pay for it, his statements will have much weight with some; while he would have little influence who favors license because it makes his taxes five dollars less and cannot look far enough ahead to see that he will lose fifty dollars in his business because of the saloon. In the past we have known of anonymous communications being sent out at such times by men who feigned great sympathy for the taxpayer and marvelous interest in the morals of the community, who were afterwards found to be themselves engaged in a business which creates eight-tenths of all the pauperism and crime in the community.

F. J. Hale, Bondsville.

"The Truth About It."

Mr. Editor:—There is always an advantage in having arguments in print. It is so much easier to examine them and de-termine their strength. I was glad to see in your last issue an article signed "The Truth About It," giving the arguments in favor of license. It is not always that men who favor license trust their arguments in cold print—they have such a way of losing their force when they cool off in type. I am very happy to agree with our friend, "The Truth About It," on some points, and I hope he will forgive me if I differ from him on others. I note the following points:

1. He and I are of one mind in thinking we are to have a good deal of agitation on the question of license and no-license before the spring election.

2. We agree heartily also that if we vote no-license we should not let any drug store become a saloon. I hope he is as ready as I am to help prevent this, if necessary.

3. We disagree on the force of his drug store argument for licensed saloons. According to his statement, in the time of no-license the drug stores made at the rate of about thirteen thousand sales a year, or less than two to each inhabitant of Palmer and about ten a day for each drug store. But in an ordinary year of license the sales in our six saloons amount to considerably over a million, i. e., at least two hundred to every man, woman and child in Palmer, and more than four thousand daily sales. If the drug store sales seem to have been unnecessarily large, the argument for saloons from this fact does not seem conclusive to a candid mind seeking "the truth about it."

4. Our friend declares that our town is so paralyzed by rum that it cannot protect itself from kitchen saloons, etc. The writer can hardly believe such an imputation on the citizenship of our town. He has seen shrewd kitchen saloonists walk up and pay their fines and humbly promise not to do so any more, and that in a town with no smarter a citizenship than Palmer has. If "The Truth About It" is really anxious to have the law enforced, he will find a goodly body of fellow-workers who are in earnest in this matter and who are determined to see that our honest officials shall have a generous backing in enforcing the law and that, if any of our officials shall prove dishonest or incompetent, they shall have a chance to retire quietly to their political graves. There is a moral force gathering in Palmer that will put down the saloons—parlor and kitchen alike—this year or next. If "Truth About It" wishes to know all that is going on let him watch the papers for the next few weeks.

5. Our friend states that all Palmer's liquor law enforcing committees during the last ten years have been dishonest scamps. I hope he does not mean to imply that we have no other material. Careful, brother, and not "slander" the town. Who knows but "The Truth About It" will reveal his identity in time to be put at the head of a committee that will do its whole duty? There is hope yet for Palmer!

6. With our friend's attack upon the Republican party the writer will not deal. This is not a political campaign, and this point will be passed with a mere mention for completeness sake.

7 Our friend says "It is reported that at a meeting of ministers in your village a short time since, a reverend gentleman stated and regretted to say that it was a fact, that wherever the town of Palmer is known in this union of states, it had the reputation of being the most immoral and rum town in the state." There is just enough "Truth about it" in this to be recognizable. The writer stated, not in a ministers' meeting, but in five or six public meetings with audiences aggregating several hundred of the citizens of Palmer, that wherever Palmer is known it has the reputation of being a rum town, and that this is one of the reasons why Palmer, with such unusual advantages in many respects, has not grown faster. Our friend knows this to be true if he knows "the truth about it." The writer has stated it, states it now, and will state it again, and he does it as a friend of the town trying to help save it from a damaging reputation.

8. Our friend implies that our saloons have helped to send young men and women to college, keep our property owners from drinking, secure the prompt payment of taxes and send money and goods West and South in charity, etc. The writer is compelled to confess that he was unaware that our saloons were doing these beneficent things. It is certainly too bad if the saloons have thus been robbed of the honor due them. It is a general supposition that the churches and sober citizenship of Palmer were doing these things in spite of the saloons. This wrong should be righted at once. Cannot "The Truth About It" publish a list of the boxes sent West and South by the saloons? Ought not our taxpayers who have been made teetotalers by the ministrations of the saloons be willing to pay their debt of gratitude by sending their names to "The Truth About It" to be published with the list of boxes?

9. Finally, may I be permitted to suggest that from now to the 19th of March is not a good time for dust. How can we find enough to put on our feet to shake off in accordance with our friend's kind suggestion? We hope, however, that after May 1st this town will be drier than it is now, and that dust will lie on the saloon counters. Yours sincerely.

Frank E. Jenkins.

BONDSVILLE.

Miss Mary Donevan is on the sick list.

Miss Ora Parent is home from Smith College.

Miss Maggie Kavanaugh of Westfield visited friends here last week.

Daniel Sullivan of Amherst College spent Sunday with his parents here.

O. A. Parent, who has been quite sick the past week, is somewhat better.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bolton are both on the sick list, having the grippe.

Master Dennis Quirk of Ware Center visited relatives in town last Sunday.

Mrs. Henry Morgan visited friends in Wilbraham and Springfield this week.

Miss Kate Kennedy of Holyoke is spending a few weeks with her parents here.

Jerry Shea has opened a fish and oyster market at his old stand on Main street.

The Wide Awake Whist Club will not meet again till after the Lenten season is over.

Miss Bernice O'Regan was the guest of her cousins, Misses Elsie and Elner O'Regan of Ware, Sunday.

Pat Maloney, the "funniest Irishman living," will appear at Liberty Hall next Monday night.

James Gloster, an old and respected resident of this place, is quite sick at his home on Pleasant street.

Rev. Father Mullen of Monson preached in St. Bartholomew's church Tuesday night to a large congregation.

Ruth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Armstrong, who has been very sick with bronchitis, is convalescent.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hobbs entertained the Swift River Whist Club at their residence in Thorndike Thursday evening.

Michael Shea of this place, a brakeman on the main line of the Boston and Albany road, was hurt quite badly last Saturday evening.

The Rev. Mr. Osgood of Ware gave a lecture on the "Life of Christ," in the Methodist church Wednesday evening, illustrated with stereopticon. A large audience was present.

THREE RIVERS.

Gilbert Forte is the victim of several of "Job's comforters."

W. F. Thompson of Woburn is visiting Miss Jennie Kendrick.

Yesterday being a legal holiday there was no session of the schools.

Deacon Sikes is contemplating putting in an extensive silo this spring.

Mrs. Johnson, stopping at the boarding house, is quite ill with the grippe.

Mrs. Hutchins, mother of Mrs. G. S. Butler, has been seriously ill the past week.

Miss Vina Webb of Springfield spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Warriner.

Miss Sikes, who has been teaching at West Hill in Belchertown, is taking a vacation.

The teachers from the Thorndike schools visited the schools in this village Tuesday.

The ordinance of baptism will be administered at the Baptist church next Sunday evening.

Miss Bessie Burgess of Chicopee is to spend Sunday with her cousin, Miss Mary Martin.

Mrs. H. J. Kendrick of Greenfield, and Mrs. Bennett of Springfield are guests of Mrs. L. B. Kendrick.

The river is the scene of much pleasure these pleasant evenings. The skating is good and the crowds large.

Clayton Barnes received quite a serious injury yesterday while skating, badly cutting his nose and narrowly escaping injuring his eyes.

Eighteen ladies went to the home of Mrs. E. H. Maxwell Tuesday and held a Bible reading. Mrs. Maxwell later gave them a treat on butternuts.

At the next regular meeting of the Monday Evening Club the subject, "Resolved,—That Women Have More Influence in the World Than Money," will be adopted.

The ladies of the Baptist church are to have a chicken pie supper this evening, from 6 to 8, at 25 cents a plate. All who have eaten of their chicken pies do not need to be told that they are toothsome.

A stranger had a mishap at the crossing of the Central Vermont road yesterday. His sleigh got caught somehow, and then his horses becoming frightened ran, demolishing his sleigh and breaking the harness.

Several loads of ladies were taken over to Mrs. Higgins's Wednesday afternoon to a district meeting. One of the teams had its complement of mishaps, which badly frightened the occupants. Going to the meeting it was badly demolished, and in returning the horse fell down, breaking the shafts and necessitting a visit to the carriagesmith.

Edward Myotte, one of the operators at the Palmer Mill, had a narrow escape Tuesday. He works in the dye house, and in moving one of the warp machines he somehow fell into one of the blue vats. He did not lose his head, however, and clung to the sides, thereby keeping his head above the coloring matter. He was rescued from his perilous position as soon as posible by his fellow workmen, but thinks he had a close call.

Two young ladies from Indian Orchard who were visiting in town the first part of the week asked one of our prominent merchants to take them sleighriding. He could not refuse, of course, but having no sleigh he secured a double rip, and going to the river placed the ladies upon it and then played horse. At noon, while the operatives were going by he and his party were out of sight behind the ice house, but when the string broke Charlie was in a quandary, and thought it best to adjourn the sleighride. However, he says they all had a good time.

Rev. Mr. Weeks is delivering a course of lectures in the Baptist church on Wednesday evenings in connection with the regular prayer meeting on the following topics: "Ephesas: the Decline of the Church;" "Smyrna: the Double Assault of the Enemy;" "Pergamos: The Church United with the World, and the Promise to the Overcomer;" "Thyatira; the Reign of the World-Church;" "Sardos: Sleeping Among the Dead;" "Philadelphia: the Revival of the Word of Christ and the Brotherhood of Christians;" "Laodicea: What Brings the Time of Christ's Patience to an End?"

THORNDIKE.

John J. Dailey has purchased a new horse.

Mrs. Abbie Nichols is visiting friends in Enfield.

Miss Hobbs of Boston is visiting Mr and Mrs. C. H. Hobbs.

Miss Maggie Murphy of Holyoke is expected home this week.

Mr. and Mrs. George D. Moores are visiting friends in Orange.

Thursday being Washington's Birthday, there was no session of the schools.

Manager Clifford has decided not to open the rink for skating again until after Lent.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hobbs entertained a whist party from Bondsville last evening.

A large party enjoyed some good skating above the No. 1 mill dam on Tuesday evening.

Several from this village attended the supper and entertainment given by the Woman's Relief Corps at Palmer last evening.

A. P. Adams has just completed a fine portrait of H. E. W. Clark of this place, which is to be placed in the memorial building at Palmer.

Washington's Birthday was observed in the schools here this afternoon in an appropriate manner, the programme consisting of songs, recitations, etc., by the pupils.

Rev. Francis J. Lynch left this week to attend the consecration of Father Tierney of Hartford to the position of bishop. Father Tierney was a former college classmate of Father Lynch.

James Lawton, father of William Lawton of this place, died at the home of his son on Commercial street Sunday morning after a brief illness. The funeral took place on Tuesday, with burial at Ware, Mr. Lawton's former home, where he was well known and much respected.

Frederick Samson, who has lived in this town for a number of years, died on Friday evening at his home on Gay avenue. Although being ailing for some time past, his death was a great surprise to his friends. The funeral took place Monday morning from St. Anne's church, the interment being in the Catholic cemetery on the hill. A wife and daughter survive him.

A few days ago an article appeared in a Springfield paper stating that the selectmen offered quite a sum of money for a certain piece of land in the Depot Village upon which to build a new building, for the use of the town officers, or in other words a new town hall. The question has been discussed considerably by the citizens and taxpayers of this village, and if an article should appear in the town warrant for the spring meeting they propose, with the assistance of Bondsville and Three Rivers citizens, to put a veto on such a scheme, as it is unjust and unfair to ask for such at the Depot Village. They say it a new town hall is needed, have it located where it will be most central. The present site of the old town house is about central—tear the old building down and erect a new one in its place which will be suitable and accommodate all concerned.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

Boston, Feb. 20, 1894.

The first House vote on the abolition of Fast Day, 100 yeas to 59 nays, was followed by the introduction of a bill by Mr. Kneil of Westfield to abolish Fast Day and to establish the first Thursday of April as "Puritan's Day," to be a public holiday, the same as the other holidays of the year, on which a part of the day shall be devoted, in all the schools of the Commonwealth, to exercises relating to the history, purpose or principles of those who settled and founded the Commonwealth.

It was to be noted in the Fast Day debate that complaint was made that Memorial Day is no longer observed in its spirit, as it should be, but that it was fast becoming a day for sports and recreation, with utter indifference on the part of many of the people to the purpose for which the day was established. So a common fate seems to be overtaking the days which are set apart for what is sober or serious, and the universal tendency to relaxation and rest is to make a popular play-day of it, no matter what was the original purpose of the day. Fourth of July, Thanksgiving and Christmas can hold their own because they are days of general jubilation.

The session of the House on Friday was marked by a flank movement to defeat the bill to abolish Fast Day. Mr. Hayes of Lowell made it, and his plan was to keep Fast Day and let those who want to celebrate April 19 have another legal holiday then. But the House was not to be captured in that way. The motion did not have as much support as the square opposition to the bill. Mr. Kneil's bill for "Puritan's Day" was ruled out of order, and he accepted the adverse ruling with a protest against defeating the bill in this way. He implied that trickery had been used, which was warmly resented by Mr. Malone of Greenfield, who was in charge of the bill. Nothing more can be done in the House, and now the hope of the friends of Fast Day lies in the Senate alone.

Mr. Irwin of Northampton has an important bill which proposes a way by which people in cities can originate legislation as they used to do in town meeting days.

The interest in biennial elections this year is small, judging by the slim attendance at the committee hearing. Organized labor is solid against it, as usual.

The sensation of the week at the State House has been the demonstration of the unemployed on Tuesday afternoon. But it was not formidable, nor portentious of future disaster. It has been greatly exaggerated by the sensational papers, and it would have been less incendiary if less stir had been made about it. Morrison I. Swift, leader of the crowd who took Doric Hall in the State House while the Legislature was in session, and who presented to the governor and the Legislature, the man who made the remark that if the Legislature did not favor them they would clean out the State House, was cowed and cautious when he found that the governor was firm in his assertion of law and order, and that even the man who presented their petition to the House, Mr. Mellen of Worcester, said that he would be the first to resist them if they attempted to use force. The mob which filled the lower part of the State House seemed to be composed largely of men who have come recently from Europe, and who have not yet learned the ways of our law-abiding and self-supporting people. Of course no one can tell what crazy men may have been among them, nor what infatuated men may do in the future, but there was nothing to show that either property or life are in danger, or that there is any material support of the doctrines of the petitioners, that it is the duty of the Legislature or of the public to provide farms and factories for the unemployed.

Gov. Greenhalge's speech from the State House steps to the crowd was marked by firmness and good sense, and he told them wholesome truths which they ought to know about the limitations upon the governor and the Legislature, and the impossibility of giving relief in the way proposed. If there was any show of weakness, it was on the part of the House in suspending its rules to admit the petition without referring it to the committee on rules to see whether the rules should be suspended, and then in appointing a special committee of seven to consider the petition. As to the first point, the House has made a precedent that it accords more favorable treatment to a petition accompanied by a noisy display of numbers than it does to an equally deserving single petitioner, —which is a deplorable precedent to establish. As to the next point, the committee on labor is the exact and proper committee for the consideration of a petition of this sort, and by voting to create a special committee the House once more showed a consideration for numbers and display which it would not have shown to an equally meritorious case of a single individual. There is this excuse for the House, that the matter was sprung upon it without opportunity for consideration, and that it doubtless would not have seemed to be indifferent to the appeals of people who said they were starving.

This Morrison I. Swift, who led the crowd, is an educated man. He is an Ohio man, having been born there in 1856; and was at the Western Reserve College in 1875 to 1877. He entered Williams College in 1877 and graduated in 1879. Then he went to Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore and studied political science and philosophy there. After that he studied for a year in Berlin in Germany. Latterly he has been holding meetings at the so-called "Equity House" at No. 20 Oak street, Boston. He has been one of the foremost of those who look to the state as the one to run all human affairs, going further than the Nationalists and Bellamyites do at present, but with whom he has some affiliation.

The joint special committee to hear the petition of the unemployed consists of Senators Lyford of Hampden, Cronan of Suffolk and Gray of Norfolk, and Representatives Wellman of Malden, Mellen of Worcester, Jones of Melrose, Irwin of Northampton, Phelps of North Adams, Ewing of Enfield and Atwood of Stoughton. The Senate has also adopted an order for an inquiry by the labor committee, with the governor, council and commissions, whether any public employment can be given on buildings or other public works in process of construction.

A great demonstration was made in the Green Room on Wednesday for the preservation of the present State House, but it also developed the fact that many people believe the best way is to build new.

Gov. Greenhalge gets many compliments for his courage and tact with the mob. The Knights of Labor disclaim all sympathy with the affair of Tuesday.

A prodigious protest is being raised against the bill for the registration of doctors.

Nine cents a pair for all wool black hose seems absurdly low, but we are selling them at that price in infants' sizes. Also a line of black and colored wool hose, in boys', girls' and ladies' sizes. These hose have been sold regularly from 25 to 50 cents a pair. To close out the line we are offering them at 19 and 25 cents. All wool goods can be bought at a great reduction. We have hoods, knit skirts, mittens, leggings, etc., which we do not wish to carry over. It will pay you to do so, however, at the prices we are getting for them.

The farmers' institute which was postponed last week on account of the storm, will be held in Grange Hall March 6. G. L. Clemence of Southbridge will speak on Dairy Farming.

Fred Hitchcock is in Boston with his wife, who has been sick in a hospital there for five weeks. Mrs. Hitchcock underwent a serious operation Tuesday, and is reported somewhat better.

The selectmen will hold their last meeting of the financial year at 1 p. m. next Thursday, in Memorial Hall. It is requested that all holding bills against the town present them at that time.

Although the sleighing was poor Tuesday evening, yet a party of young people took a ride to Palmer, where they had a supper at the Nassowano House and a social dance. A good time is reported, if they did have to walk some of the way.

Whist seems to furnish a great deal of entertainment this winter, judging from the number of whist parties there have been held. A small party of young people met with Miss Minnie Gilligan last evening and played whist. Mrs. A. D. Norcross also entertained a whist party last evening.

Arrangements are being made to hold a grand concert and ball in Memorial Hall, April 10, with music by Brigham's full orchestra of Marlborough. The affair is under the direction of the young men in town. As there has been no grand ball in town since Thanksgiving, good music and efficient management should warrant a large attendance. Posters will be put up in a short time giving programme, etc.

The belt of the electric governor at the electric plant parted late Thursday evening, and but for the quickness and thoughtfulness of the motorman the lights would have gone out, but by turning off the street lights the house circuit was kept burning with but little apparent loss of voltage, and in five minutes time the belt was repaired.

Joseph Duplisse of State Line left his horse for a moment last Monday to go into the post office; while he was inside the horse started slowly along, then suddenly began to run and ran the whole length of Main street, leaving blankets, robes, and pieces of the somewhat primitive sleigh along the route. The horse, a young colt which took a prize at the Stafford fair, was captured at South Monson, and so far as could be seen received no injuries.

The concert given by Merrick's Music Rooms in Memorial Hall Tuesday evening was enjoyed by fully a thousand people. A very acceptable programme was rendered by the Ladies' Altra Club of Springfield, assisted by J. S. R. Coy of Monson, organist, and George H. Ayer, banjoist, of Springfield. The selections were all finely rendered, but the violin solo by Miss Ora Hitchcock was the principal feature of the evening. Two very fine Trowbridge pianos and a seven octave Lehr organ were used.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the M. E. church has secured the famous entertainer from Chicago, Col. C. H. French, who is unequaled as a descriptive lecturer. He will give his illustrated entertainment on "The Life of Columbus, the Wealth and Wonders of Chicago, and the World's Columbian Exposition," at Memorial Hall next Monday evening at 8 o'clock. This lecture is most elegantly illustrated with hundreds of the most beautiful stereopticon views in the world, costing thousands of dollars. You miss an entertainment if you do not go.

Mrs. Thomas Tobin of South Monson slipped on the ice Wednesday and fell, striking her head against the doorstep and inflicting a severe scalp wound. Dr. Fuller was summoned and ten stitches were taken. The injured woman is doing nicely now.

Rev. F. S. Hatch's course of six o'clock Sunday evening lectures upon the social and industrial problems of the day is proving to be of more than ordinary interest. Few who have been able to attend the two lectures already given will fail to be present at the four which are to follow. Mr. Hatch has given the subject much careful thought and research, and no one can afford to lose an opportunity of hearing it thus ably presented. Subject for next Sunday night: "Some Remedies Proposed." Go early and secure a good seat.

Academy Notes.

The annual meeting of the Western Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association was held Saturday in Pratt gymnasium at Amherst. Walker and McCarthy, P. G.'s, were delegates from Monson Academy. It is said that Mr. Caruthers has written to some of the farmers here asking the price of board, and many people think he intends to come back. If he does he will no doubt receive a warm welcome.

Herbert S. Gay, a late graduate of the Westfield Normal School, has accepted a position as principal of the grammar school at Slatersville, R. I. Mr. Gay's home is in the Rockrimmon neighborhood.

A meeting of the deacons and supply committee was called last Tuesday night to consider the application of Dr. Wendall for the pastorate of the Congregational church. It was decided that further action be deferred until Sunday, when another candidate will probably preach.

Rev. Payson W. Lyman, a former pastor of the Congregational church in this town, has been nominated by Governor Greenhalge as trustee of the state almshouse and state farm at Bridgewater. Mr. Lyman is a native of Easthampton and a graduate of Amherst College. He is a historian and well-known writer, and has always been interested in this town.

A Republican caucus was held Monday evening, and the following officers were nominated: Town clerk, G. W. Longley; selectmen, Nelson Randall, Myron Barton, Asa Smith; assessors, William Burnett, George A. Keith, Myron G. Ward; treasurer, Arthur Bridgman; auditor, E. R. Bridgman; tax collector, William Burnett; constables, William Burnett, L. W. Dillon, Homer Pratt, H. D. Randall, William Landers; school committee, G. H. B. Greene; burial ground commissioner, George E. Sanford.

A number of people in town were swindled last October by a person claiming to be agent for a crayon portrait company in Boston, New York and New Bedford. He collected portraits to be enlarged, and 50 cents with each picture, giving in return a ticket which he said entitled the holder to the picture when it was finished. Nothing was ever heard from him until last week, when Constable Burnett received a package by mail containing about 50 portraits, and Friday received a letter from the Tanquery Portrait Company of Brooklyn, N. Y., which said that unknown persons had been representing themselves as their agents.

LUDLOW.

James Knowlton and wife spent Sunday in Palmer.

Henry W. Cleveland has sold his grocery business in the Hampshire House block to C. Hitchcock & Co.

A Bryson & Co. are making extensive changes in their store, to enable them to carry a larger stock.

F. Bombard left for Canada on Thursday, to be gone about ten days. He will bring back a car load of horses.

John Launier (Nazzar) was sent to jail last Friday to await the action of the grand jury for robbing Horatio Fisherdick.

Mrs. Thomas Stafford, aged 69, died at her residence on Otis avenue Sunday evening, after years of suffering from a complication of diseases.

A salad supper is served at Unity Hall this evening, to be followed by an entertainment consisting of a farce, "How the Colonel Proposed."

F. R. Cunningham's lecture on the phonograph was so well appreciated that he will give another, continuing the same subject, at no distant day.

The schools had a holiday yesterday, on account of Washington's Birthday. In some of the schools there were appropriate exercises on Wednesday.

New York Belle, the trotting mare owned by Felix Bombard, dropped dead on West Main street a few evenings since. Supposed cause, heart disease.

Walter Reilly's pleasant greeting will be missed at Turner's book store, he having accepted a position with J. Keefe & Co. Hugh Brown takes his place at Turner's.

The new high school building is open for inspection this week, and will be occupied next Monday without any ceremony. It is a handsome building, and very conveniently arranged.

At a meeting of the East Congregational church last evening Chas. W. Eddy was elected deacon to fill out the term of two years made vacant by the removal of H. A. Smith from town.

C. Hitchcock & Co. are showing some samples of their stock of wall papers in the window formerly occupied by H. A. Smith & Co. They have the largest and finest stock ever seen in this vicinity.

F. P. Clark & Co., are issuing circulars calling attention to a change in partnership April 1, and offering rare bargains in fine furniture, pianos, organs and sewing machines for the next 20 days.

Lewis B. Sibley has bought out the grocery business of M. L. Lane. Twenty years ago Mr. Sibley was one of the most go-a-head business men there was in Ware, and after several years in the west seems to have lost none of his business enterprise.

H. P. Cummings & Co. have the contract to build a fine hotel in Springfield, on the site of the old Glendower. It is to be completed the 1st of August, and work will be commenced as soon as possible.

The musicale by the Smith College Glee and Banjo Club at Mrs. J. H. G. Gilbert's last Saturday afternoon was a most enjoyable affair, and was largely attended by the members of the Social Science Club and invited guests.

A large audience, which went away greatly pleased, attended the organ recital at the East Congregational church on Wednesday evening. Prof Safford gave the people of Ware a better idea of how fine an organ was here than they ever had before. W. A. Anderson as vocalist gave great satisfaction.

There is to be a grand temperance rally under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. on Wednesday evening, March 7th, when the Nebraska vocalists, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, will give an evening of song on the no-license line. It will no doubt draw a full house.

Those who predicted a slim house at the Methodist church Tuesday evening to hear Rev. A. M. Osgood's lecture on "Christ in Art," because a small admission was charged, were mistaken, as the house did not have seating capacity to accommodate the large audience.

C. W. Eddy has the contract to print the town report this year, which promises to make a much larger book than in years past, as it is understood that the records as kept by the town clerk are to be printed in full in the report, as well as other papers and documents that have never before been printed for distribution.

The fire department was called out about 3 o'clock this morning by an alarm from box 58 to the burning of the dwelling house of James Irwin on Clifford Street. The house and contents were a total loss. It was occupied by Mr. Irwin and a young man by the name of McKeys. Fire probably started from a defective flue.

The third lecture of the course will be given next Wednesday evening at the town hall by Dr. Henry Boynton, A.M. Subject, "From Marathon to Waterloo." Dr. Boynton is said to be a very fine speaker, holding his audience in rapt attention from beginning to end. The lecture is highly spoken of, the battle scene being especially graphic and realistic.

The interest in the illustrated lectures by Rev. A. M. Osgood on the life of Christ does not seem to lag in the least. For 13 evenings large audiences have been entertained, instructed and made better. There was a disappointment in not receiving the views illustrating the Pilgrim's Progress for Thursday evening, so probably they will be put on later. The Old Testament series will be begun next week.

James Lawton, one of Ware's old and respected residents, died Sunday at Thorndike, at the residence of his son William. Mr. Lawton was by trade a painter and paperhanger, and worked for many years for the Gilbert company. A widow and two sons survive him, William and Erastus, the latter living in New York, and two brothers, Joseph R. and William B. Lawton, reside in Ware.

F. D. Nichols, who was sent to the poor farm last fall, left there about 9 o'clock last Saturday night. Warden Perkins found him at Orange on Tuesday, he having done a good many miles of walking for a man of his age, being about 70 years old. He was evidently trying to get to his wife, who is living at Gardner, as he has not been satisfied to be separated from her, she having friends that could take care of her.

There will be a union temperance meeting in the town hall Sunday evening under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Rev. A. B. Bassett will preside, and an illustrated lecture will be given by Rev. A. M. Osgood. The stereopticon will be used, showing the gambler's career, the drunkard's downward course, and the drunkard's reform. There will be singing by the male chorus, led by an orchestra. A collection will be taken to pay expenses.

At the special town meeting Monday evening it was voted to pay R. F. Hawkins & Co., $1750, the full price of the Gibbs crossing bridge, over which there has been so much controversy, as it was shown it was not this company's fault that it was not all right. It was also voted to appropriate $1100 additional for the overseers of the poor. The treasurer was instructed to pay out money for work on the roads under the approval of the selectmen.

George C. Hall, who recently resigned after many years of service as organist at the East Congregational church, was presented by members of that society last Saturday evening with an elegant leather-covered easy chair, which will no doubt be more restful for years to come than the organ bench of other days, also a fine piano lamp. In all the years of service Mr. Hall has ever been ready to assist in singing at funerals without any charge, and his friends are glad to show their appreciation of such services.

C. P. Morse, the road commissioner, as he would seem to consider himself in spite of his resignation, which was accepted, broke the lock on the town barn the other day and put on one to which he held all the keys. The selectmen put on another lock, and there is likely to be more legal squabbles before the matter is ended. Meantime the costs go on, and the people will have to pay.

A liberal religous mass meeting will be held next Monday evening in the Unitarian church at 7.30. Subject: "The Liberal Church; its Mission and Nature." This general theme will be variously discussed by speakers from abroad. Rev. G. W. Kent of Worcester will speak on "The Liberal Church as a Means of Worship;" Rev. J. C. Duncan of Clinton will speak on "The Liberal Church as a Means of Education;" Rev. W. F. Greenman of Fitchburg will speak on "The Liberal Church as a Means of Embodying the Ideal."

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February, 1894.

The Montana silver statue of Justice will entertain you every day this week, up stairs in the carpet room, where light is plenty. You are more than welcome.

It is time to think of carpets; when you think, you will act; and here is the place to make up your mind.

We have a great many patterns; nearly all of them such as our careful and tasteful people will buy. We do not believe there is a better place to go for carpets anywhere; for our stock is entirely new.

Besides you never know when a carpet is dear or cheap in any other store in Western Massachusetts. Here you always know; for we have but one price. We manage carpets as we manage everything else.

Second floor of new building.

Black satin rhadame at 49 cents a yard is a greater novelty than the last new thing from Paris. Sample will be sent, if requested.

Chenille portieres at $3.75 and $4.50 a pair, heavy, soft and yielding enough for a dollar more. Indeed they were $1 more a few days ago, and will be again probably when the next lot comes.

At $3.75 a pair old blue pomegranate peach
At $4.50 a pair camel pomegranate bronze

Second floor.

We have an all-wool suiting, 45 inch, at 50 cents, that ought to be seen by every woman in search of a plain substantial dress stuff for $3.50 the dress.

Gilbert's all-wool suiting at 37 1-3 cents is another worth mentioning. Comes in different mixtures, including the favorite browns, blues, greens and grays.

BURGLARS WANTED!

THAT SOUNDS FUNNY, DOESN'T IT?

BUT WE MEAN IT,

and want the public to know that when they accept a commonly finished photograph and pay from $4.00 to $5.00 per dozen, when one dozen

High Gloss Cabinet Aristographs

can be obtained for

$3.00 PER DOZEN,

they BURGLAIZE THEMSELVES to the extent of $3.00.

We have adopted this beautiful "Aristo" finish for all our Photographic work, for which we ask no more than competitors will ask you for the common albumine finish.

Our Lace Edge Finished Aristo

Only $3.00 per dozen and, NEVER has the public had the opportunity of such as is now offered them by

There is no place like home —when Pearline is used in it. There is no place about home where Pearline can't be used. Pearline takes the hard work and drudgery out of—keeping a home clean. It is next to having the washing and cleaning done for you, and well done at that.

It washes everything that can be washed It cleans paint, marble, carpets, hangings—in fact everything cleanable. It is a luxury in the bath. It is emphatically without harm to person or things. With Pearline you have rest; it rests with you to have Pearline.

Beware of imitations. 528 JAMES PYLE, N.Y

On the West Shore R. R.

An Engineer and Conductor's Experience.

Mr. Wm. Huston, of Weehawken, N. J., the oldest engineer of the West Shore R. R., a member of Unity Division, No. 135, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, suffered for years from an aggravated kidney trouble and dyspepsia.

In conversation with our reporter, Mr. Huston spoke in glowing terms of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy as the one medicine that does what it is recommended to do. "For" said Mr. Huston: "I had been under the treatment of some of the best physicians, and used many preparations without deriving the least benefit. One day Conductor Frazer of our road said to me, 'If you want to get well and cure that kidney trouble and dyspepsia, just use Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.' I acted upon Mr. Frazer's advice, and used Favorite Remedy but a short while, when my old troubles passed away and I have been sound and well ever since.

One of Palmer's physicians said. "I prescribe Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy altogether now for dyspepsia, kidney or liver complaints, rheumatism, and all urinary diseases, instead of the old-time medicines, as the results from its use are quicker and more satisfactory, and I believe every dyspeptic or rheumatic victim should use it."

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co, Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

The Amateur Gardener.

The man who, in the early spring
Laid out a garden plot,
May not have raised a paying crop,
But, oh! he knows a lot!
Next year, when spring comes, you will see
Him sitting on the fence,
And telling others doleful tales
Of his experience.

Until a man has tried it once,
He never gets to know
How hard it is to hoe and spade,
And how fast the weeds can grow.
How hot the summer sun can shine,
How dry some weeks can be,
And how the Lord has made a bug
For every plant and tree.

But he who in the early spring
Laid out a garden plot
Has learned all this, and more by now,
And next year he will not Go into gardening very deep—
Not if he knows himself—
And all his tools, all summer long,
Will life upon the shelf.

SPRING NEEDS.

What Everybody Requires at This Season.

Some Things Are of the Utmost Importance to You.

This Will Tell You Just What You Most Need Now and How to Get It.

In the spring changes always take place in our systems which require attention. There is a tired, languid feeling, a depression, the digestive organs become deranged, the blood is bad, causing the complexion to become affected and the person feels an inability to work.

At such a time a spring medicine is absolutely necessary. It will overcome all these conditions. It will invigorate the blood, regulate the digestive organs, clear the complexion and make you feel strong and well. The following letter written by Miss Nettie Fraser, of Patterson, N. J., will interest you.

"Since my childhood I have been extremely nervous, easily excited and at times suffering with extreme nervous prostration. A year ago last June I was so bad that the attacks were almost hysterical, and my appetite and digestion were in a terrible condition. I also suffered with great mental depression.

MISS NETTIE FRASER.

"I was induced to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and the first bottle had a wonderful effect on my condition. After four bottles were used I was entirely cured. I never used any medicine that helped me so much, and I would recommend it in the highest terms possible, as too much cannot be said in praise of this wonderful medicine."

We are constantly receiving just such letters telling of the great good which is being done by this medicine. You want to get up in the morning and feel like doing a good day's work, do you not? And you want your children to feel strong and vigorous, don't you? Well, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will do all this.

It will give to you and your children perfect health, and that is exactly what you want. It is the best spring medicine known, and has the advantage of being purely vegetable and harmless. It was discovered by Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

NIPPED IN THE BUD.

When I was a boy I attended a public school in a New England town not many miles from the Hub. The teacher of classics in that institution was a man of the name of Virgil Monson, who was by birth and training a Puritan, but one whom culture had somewhat liberalized, though he retained many prejudices of the average Yankee.

In person he was short, heavy and thickset. His head was dome-shaped, but it appeared to me that his bumps of veneration and combativeness had been unduly developed at the expense of the bumps of conjugal affection, which was sufficient explanation of the fact that he had not yet committed matrimony, though he had turned 35 at the time I knew him.

Whatever may have been his defects, I must do him justice to say that his forehead was broad and high, sure sign of intellectuality; his nose of the Roman variety, which always indicates strength of character and tenacity of opinion, while his manner of compressing his lips pointed not the less certainly to his firmness, to which a square chin also contributed.

His disposition was by no means lamblike, nor his temper equable, as his red hair—what there was of it—and red beard bore abundant testimony to the contrary. I grieve to say that much learning had made Mr. Monson not mad, but bald. The dome part of his head was wont to shine like the golden dome of the state capitol in Boston, especially after the vigorous polishings he gave it in his toilet. A fringe of sandy hair surrounded the aforesaid bald surface like the diverging rays of light around the aurora borealis.

Add to the foregoing an excitable temperament, a quick and nervous manner, a love of pedantic display, a fondness for Greek and Latin roots, and most of all for natural science, and you have a tolerably fair description of an interesting personality.

It was our professor's habit to seek recreation in the woods during the intervals of pedagogical labor, and there, amid the sighings of trees and singing of birds and the chirping of crickets, to combine his pursuit of health with the study of natural science. After spending an afternoon in the fragrant seclusion of the forest he would return with his pockets full of botanical and entomological specimens. Among the last may be mentioned caterpillars, moths, butterflies and other denizens of the woods.

His room was next door to mine and had the appearance of a museum. There were numerous books, of course, on all sorts of subjects, frneries, cabinets of minerals and chloroformed butterflies, suspicious bottles containing queer creatures in all stages of alcoholic intoxication and aquaria containing living fish, toads and lizards.

Absorbed as he was in his duties at school, his favorite studies and pursuits, Mr. Monson had had but little time to think of matrimony, and though some designing mammas had pressed the question home to him his invariable reply had been:

"I don't need a wife. I am happy enough as I am."

This reply served as a wet blanket to the enthusiastic interest his lady acquaintances entertained in his happiness. Though his character and disposition were not such as to make him popular with the fair sex, still the few who knew him respected him, wondered at his prodigious learning, which he took no pains to conceal, and secretly laughed at his eccentricities and hobbies.

Having evaded Cupid's darts so long and with such signal success, no one supposed for a moment that he would succumb at last to the charms of a coquettish country girl. But so it turned out, thus proving the truth of the old adage that there is no fool like an old fool. He fell a victim to love so late in life that, like mumps and measles, it attacked him with greater virulence than it would have done in his younger days.

The girl, whom we will simply call Lilian, was a brunette of fascinating manners, but rather homely features. But if she satisfied Mr. Monson's notions of an ideal woman no one else had a right to complain. She was still attending school, though past 21 years of age, and as fate would have it was boarding in the same house as the professor. It was observed by the landlady and her daughter that after Lilian's advent Mr. Monson was changed from his own self. He paid more attention to his toilet than before, brushing his fringe of hair with unusual care and having his beard trimmed oftener than had been his wont. At the table he had alternate fits of abstraction and loquacity. He lingered there as long as Lilian remained and would, after supper, follow her to the sitting room, where he would talk to her by the hour about some Greek poet or some natural phenomenon. And when he showed her his various bugs, insects and reptiles, making a running commentary on their peculiarities, the landlady formed the very natural conclusion that the professor was badly "stuck."

The girl was a splendid listener, and flattered Mr. Monson's vanity by her attention rather than by words of praise.

In about three months the professor had wound himself in a net as completely as the silkworm in its cocoon. As he grew more persistent in his attentions the girl became more coquettish. She would be very kind one day and distant and hard to please the next, thus tormenting the very life out of him.

At last, unable to bear the strain, he determined to risk all by a test question. A favorable opportunity presented itself one night when everybody had retired and the twain were alone in the parlor.

What took place there had better be told in the words of the young lady, who related the affair afterward to the landlady's daughter, not knowing that I was listening and taking it all in.

"Well," she said, "to begin from the beginning, your mother left the parlor as the clock struck 9, taking care to close the door after her. This emboldened him to draw his chair closer to mine. 'Do you think one can be happier when married than single?' he asked. I replied that I didn't know, not having had the experience of a married woman.

"'Well, don't you think so or believe so?'

"'Why, that depends on circumstances, Mr. Monson,' I answered. I knew what was coming all the time, but didn't want to show it.

"'But if there is love in the marriage, don't you think that there will be happiness?'

At this point he seized my hand and squeezed it until it fairly turned blue and said excitedly:

"'Then marry me, Miss Lilian. No man can love a woman more than I love you. Say but yes, and my very life is at your disposal to do as you please with it. Your happiness will be my first consideration. Here, on my knees, I ask you to grant my suit.'

"I turned my face around to look at him, and, oh! what do you think? You can never guess. I laugh every time I think of it. One of those nasty caterpillars had crept out of his pocket during the excitement and was making its way over his shoulder toward his collar. I nearly died with laughter at the comical situation. Upon this he got very mad and excited beyond control, but he remained on his knees the while. Said he:

"'You are laughing at a very serious matter. You trifle with me. Is this the way to treat the proffered love of an honest man?'

"'I am sorry, Mr. Monson. I was not laughing at you, but at something else.'

"I had barely finished saying that when that worm stood on the poor man's collar, and bracing its hind feet on it made a grab for his hair with its front feet. The nasty thing was so comical in all its movements that I laughed right out, making no attempt to control my merriment. He arose from his knees. His face was scarlet with rage. But as he turned the doorknob I commanded my risibilities enough to say to him:

"'Mr. Monson, I am very, very sorry for what has happened. I respect and esteem you as a friend, but I can never be your wife. But if you don't want another girl to laugh at you the next time you go a-courting you leave worms and bugs behind.'

"By this time the caterpillar had reached his bald spot and from that elevated perch was looking on the scene with placid enjoyment. He caught my eyes as they were bent toward the intruder, and just then, his excitement having subsided a little and no doubt feeling the nasty thing on top of his head, he caught it in his hand, crushing the poor worm at the same time. He then made a dart for the stairs, going over three steps at a time. That is all there was to this little romance of mine."

The next week the professor resigned his position in the school and left the town forever.—Van Phon Lee in St. Louis Republic.

SHE WANTED A BOUQUET.

A little girl poorly-clad and with a small coin tightly clenched in her hand hastily entered the store of a fashionable florist.

"I want the best bouquet you can give me for ten cents," she said to a clerk, who smiled audibly at her request.

"I'd advise you to wait till next summer, missy," he said in a patronizing way. "Flowers don't grow in greenhouses for nothing."

The snub was lost on the child, who said eagerly:

"Next summer won't be sister Lizzie's birthday, and to-morrow is. Besides, I don't want them for nothing. I told you I had ten cents."

She was as grand as though it had been $10.

"Go where the woodbine twineth," carolled the clerk, "we have no tencent bouquets here."

The child looked at him with incredulous eyes. How could he speak so lightly of what appeared to her like actual wealth. Tears of cruel disappointment rose in her eyes, and she turned away.

A young girl who was tying up flowers had overheard this dialogue and was sorry for the child. She whispered hurriedly to the clerk: "There are the waste flowers, Mr. Smith. They haven't been thrown away yet, and some of them look pretty fresh."

The girl was so much in earnest that the clerk called ungraciously to the child:

"Come back, little one. Here are some roses and pinks that aren't as fresh as they might be. You can have them for nothing if they'll suit," and he tossed them to her.

They not only suited, but they seemed to the grieved heart of the child as fresh and beautiful as those in the window. Her shining eyes and thankful words caused a little satisfied glow in the sallow cheeks of the careless clerk. He had helped another to do a kind deed, and the reflection of it warmed his nature. Lizzie's birthday was an all-round benefit.

A blue rose is an impossibility; it never did exist and under present conditions never can exist; in connection with this matter a floral authority states an interesting fact, a knowledge of which would save many flower growers hours of unavailing experiment and foolish hope, viz: "The three colors, red, blue and yellow, never all appear in the same species of flowers; any two may exist, but never the third. Thus we have the red and yellow roses, but no blue; red and blue verbenas, but no yellow; yellow and blue in the various members of the viola family, (as pansies, for instance) but no red; and yellow and red gladioli, but no blue."

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatuleney. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

ADVANCES IN SCIENCE.

The Natural Function of Digestion at last Perfectly Imitated.

We cannot go beyond a certain point in imitation of nature's handiwork. We have never been able to give life to artificial eyes, limbs, etc.

We can imitate processes—when we understand them. Till a short time ago scientists thought that the stomach digested all our food. Under this erroneous impression pepsin was always prescribed for indigestion.

Now we know positively that the stomach digests only albumenous foods (meat, eggs, cheese etc.), and that pepsin only attacks albumens.

Scientists discovered the ferments and the process by which starch (our most important food) is digested, and Paskola was the result of their discoveries.

To aid a weak digestion starch food must be cooked and digested before it enters the mouth. The best way of doing this is embodied in Paskola.

The free vegetable ferments in Paskola aid in the digestion of other foods and relieve all symptons of indigestion almost immediately.

Paskola is not a medicine but simply a pure nature starch food naturally pre-digested. It permanently cures where medicine gives only temporary relief.

What it will do for dyspeptics, anæmics, consumptives, all people suffering from thinness, mal-nutrition and wasting diseases, is explained fully in a 16-page pamphlet which will be sent free on request.

Dreamin' Of Home.

I can't jest tell what's come to her, an' yet, I think it's clear
That somethin's goin' wrong o' late—to see her sittin' there,
A dreamin' in the doorway, with that look into 'er eyes,
As if they still was restin' on the old time fields and skies.

She's always dreamin', dreamin' of the life we left behind—
The cosey little cottage where the mornin'-glories twined;
The roses in the garden—the yellow sunflowers tall;
The violets—but she herself the sweetest flower of all!

You see, she use to sit there in the mornin's—so content;
The sunflowers follerin' the sun, no matter where he went;
The brown bees sippin' honey an' a buzzin' round the place;
The roses climbin' up to her an' smilin' in her face!

An' now she can't forget it; when I tell her: "Little wife,
There ain't no use in grievin' for that simple country life,"
She twines her arms aroun' my neck, an' smilin' sweet to see,
She whispers: "We're so far away from where we use to be."

There ain't no use in chidin', or in sayin' words o' cheer;
There's nothin' in this city life like she was used to there.
Where preachin' come but once a month, an' street cars didn't run,
An' folks they told the time o' day by lookin' at the sun.

An' larks got up at peep o' day an' made the medders ring!
I tell you, folks, when one's brought up to jes' that kind o' thing,
It's hard to git away from it—old feelin's bound to rise
An' make a runnin' over in a woman's tender eyes!

So there she sits a-dreamin', till I git to dreamin,' too;
An' when her head droops on my breast and sleep falls like the dew
An' closes them bright eyes o' hers, once more we seem to be
In the old home where we'll rest some day together—her an' me!

JIM BAXTER'S APPETITE.

The Westminster Budget has a very clever story from the pen of James Harvey Smith, entitled "Burglars Three." The scene is a London suburban residence, and three burglars—Wilson Graham, Harry Montgomery and Jim Baxter—are engaged in looting it. Both Graham and Montgomery are men of education and culture. Baxter belongs to the lower orders. Graham is a leader in his profession and Montgomery is a young fellow who is his pupil and has only been in the business a comparatively short time. The only occupants of the house at the time are the owners, Mr. Braithwait, a railway officer and an aged housekeeper, his wife and daughters being out of the city. Montgomery, when the story opens, is engaged in rifling the upper rooms.

"If Braithwait makes a disturbance I reckon Harry can settle him," remarked Graham.

"I'd settle him," muttered Baxter surlily.

"You're a savage, Jim," said Graham, reproachfully. "How often have I told you that there is no virtue in violence. Haven't I convinced you that the easy way is the safe way?"

"Yah! Don't give me no more of that!" said Baxter contemptuously. "I ain't no missionary."

At this juncture, when the argument threatened to develop into a quarrel, Montgomery reappeared with a goodly supply of plunder, which put everybody in a good humor. Baxter insisted on having a lunch, despite the protests of his companions, and forthwith the good things of the larder were spread out on the table and the three sat down. While they were engaged in discussing a very appetizing menu of cold ham, tongue, olives, the remains of an oyster pie and other choice edibles, a spare man with long blonde sidewhiskers, wearing gold eyeglasses and a flowered dressing gown, stood in doorway. Baxter sprang to his feet and the drew a pistol, but Graham caught his arm and compelled him to sit down.

"Mr. Braithwait, I presume?" Graham said, addressing the gentleman in the doorway.

"That is my name," was the composed reply. "Burglars, I presume?"

"The presumption is correct, Will you take a seat?"

Mr. Braithwait sat down opposite young Montgomery, to whom he bowed gravely. There was then a moment of silence, broken by Graham, who had resumed his place at the head of the table.

"I was aroused by the reflection of the gaslight in the upper hall," explained Mr. Braithwait, "and I supposed that the housekeeper had left it burning—she has done so more than once. I came down to extinguish it. I heard voices in this room and I entered. Professionals, I suppose?"

He looked at Montgomery, who nodded nonchalantly and lighted a cigarette.

Mr. Braithwait coughed.

"I wish you wouldn't," he said deprecatingly. "Apart from the look I can't bear cigerette smoke. There's a box of very fine Conchas on the sideboard. Thank you"—to Graham—"if you will join me?—thank you again."

Graham laughed with genuine enjoyment, yet without vulgarity. The host suggested that they probably had some keepsakes belonging to his wife and daughters which they would in all likelihood dispose of at a ridiculous figure, and that he would like to arrange for purchasing them himself. Graham replied that he would be pleased to open negotiations for this purpose at an early date.

"As a business man," said Mr. Braithwait, "I accept the situation. My loss is your gain."

At this the youngest burglar broke silence for the first time.

"You are a philosopher," he said, in a tone of admiration.

"What sensible man is not?" responded Mr. Braithwait cheerfully. "My business is a sort of war, and I have my defeats as well as my victories. I must bear them both with equanimity."

"So is ours," said the youngest burglar. "As Horace says in his 'Epistles,' 'Caedimur e totidem plagis consumimus hostem.'"

"Permit me," returned Mr. Braithwait, "to reply with Catullus, 'Nil mihi tam valde placeat, Rhamnusia virgo, quod temere invitis suscipiatur heris.'"

Montgomery flushed slightly and Baxter growled an incoherent protest against the use of foreign languages.

"I suppose I may take it for granted," continued Mr. Braithwait, "that you gentlemen are experts?"

"We've been there before," said Baxter, coarsely.

"If an experience of fourteen years is any guaranty than I am an expert," said Graham, with a certain air of pride in his tones. "Our friend there," nodding at Baxter, "has, I believe, been in the profession since childhood, while Mr."—indicating Montgomery with his cigar—"you'll excuse my not mentioning names?—is a beginner. A skilled workmen, I admit, but this is only his second year."

"I don't wonder that he"—and Mr. Braithwait glanced lightly at Baxter—"remains in the business, but that you should follow the vocation for fourteen years surprises me greatly."

"Indeed?" queried Graham, with perceptible stiffness. "Why?"

"Because you appear to be a sensible man, and I should not think the business would pay. What is your annual income as a burglar?"

"On an average I should say £3000 a year."

"And you are an expert! I receive £6000 a year and I am only assistant general freight agent and have been but twelve years in the business. Then I may infer that these two gentlemen make much less than £3000?"

"I've seen the week when I didn't make hodcarrier's wages," growled Baxter, who had now finished eating and was preparing to smoke a black wooden pipe.

"You have made out a prima facie case, as the lawyers say," admitted Graham, "but the fact remains that there is a fascination in the life we lead, and some romance. There is a mystery about it, for one thing, and danger for another. Then we certainly have the sympathy of a certain class of society when we are prisoners."

"Is not the sympathy to which you allude confined to murderers, especially those who kill their wives?"

"As a rule, yes," replied Graham, "but the people who have sympathy for murderers generally have such a superabundance that they can spare some for us. I have known burglars to receive six bouquets in a single day, and from real ladies, too."

"I am afraid," said Mr. Braithwait, with a smile, "that the sympathy extended with such small discretion has little market value. But let us pass that by and glance at the disagreeable side of your profession. For instance, this night you have walked from the city, the nearest point of which is three miles."

"We come four miles," growled Baxter.

"Well, four; and four back is eight. It could not have been a pleasant walk, as the night is cloudy and the roads are heavy from recent rains."

"There warn't no choice," said Baxter, savagely. "We had to walk."

"There it is," said Mr. Braithwait, triumphantly, "you had to walk. Now, I don't have to walk. I ride in the train or my carriage at any hour of the day or night. No honest man has to walk if he has money—and of course you have."

"The point," admitted Mr. Graham, reluctantly, "is well taken."

"I feel certain of it. Nor is this the only instance in which your pleasure is marred by fear. The very frame for which you strive is a constant bar to your enjoyment. If you take lodging at a hotel you are ejected; you may be refused admittance to any respectable theater; in any place of entertainment, except the very lowest, you cannot make a new acquaintance for fear he may be a detective plotting your capture; you are compelled to eat, drink and sleep among vile associates and vulgar surroundings, and all for a pitiful three thousand a year! By heaven, it is worth thirty!"

"You use strong language, sir," exclaimed the young burglar, rising and pacing the floor in an agitated way.

"I do," admitted the master of the house, "because my business sense is outraged by your stupidity."

"Stupidity!" echoed Graham sharply.

"That is the word," returned Mr. Braithwait sternly. "Your profession requires acuteness, courage, skill, caution and endurance. Gentlemen, these are admirable traits, and with them you might be anything but burglars. Gentlemen, with all your qualifications you lack the one essential to success—common sense."

"Permit me," said Graham, leaning over the table and speaking with much force, "to call your attention to the fact that we are bright enough to keep society eternally on the defensive."

"Granted," said Mr. Braithwait, cheerfully, "but quite foreign to the point at issue. Society is terrorized through its inertness, and when society enters on an active warfare you gentlemen cannot make a show of resistance. And even under our present policy of passive resistance there is but one thing that will save a criminal from the eventual clutch of the law and that is—death. You cannot commit a crime without leaving a trace," went on Mr. Braithwait, impassively, "and every modern appliance is a stumbling block in your path. The modern bank safe, equipped with time locks, is impregnable; the electric light has made our streets as safe by night as day, and the telegraph has lengthened the arm of justice until it encircles the globe."

"And yet," retorted Graham, with a slight sneer, "you have been robbed."

"And yet I have been robbed," repeated Mr. Braithwait, calmly. "I cannot make my house a bank or surround myself with an army of watchmen. And I don't like dogs. So I have been robbed. Yet"—Mr. Braithwait looked Graham quietly in the eye—"yet I am not entirely defenseless."

"Hell!" said Baxter, breathing hard. "Have you been up to something?"

"You shall judge whether I have rightly accused you of lack of common sense. Before attacking this house did you make yourself acquainted with the surroundings?"

"I did," answered Graham, confidently. "Do you know that I am a railroad man?"

"Certainly."

"Did you notice a wire running through the woods at the rear of my house?"

"No!" cried Graham, violently.

"A strange oversight on your part. Very stupid. It is a telephone wire, and leads from my chamber above to my office in the city. Now for the application of my remarks. From the moment of your entrance I was aware of your movements and instantly explained the situation to the night operator. He, of course, notified the police"——

"And while you keep us engaged in conversation"—cried Graham, advancing threateningly.

"The police were coming on a special train to my assistance," said Mr. Braithwait, taking a second cigar.

"Damn you!" exclaimed Baxter, threateningly.

"Stop!" cried Graham, interposing. "We have no time for that. Let us run!"

"Don't!" Said the host warningly. "The house is surrounded, and you will certainly be shot. Accept the situation, as I did. You gentlemen have been my guests this evening and I have been highly entertained. May I hope that the pleasure has been mutual?"

Before any one could answer the door leading to the woodshed was burst open and four policemen appeared on the threshold. Montgomery sank helplessly into a chair. Baxter made a dash for the door, while Graham remained impassive, but all were alike handcuffed expeditiously.

"Sir," said Graham, taking a cigar from the box, "our misfortune is directly due to the uncontrollable appetite of our companion, but none the less I congratulate you upon your ingenuity."

"Thanks," said Mr. Braithwait. "Did I not tell you that you were stupid?"

Mr. Braithwait waved his hand.

"But there, I am sleepy," he said, with a yawn. "Gentlemen, good night; I will see you again—in court."

A TRIP TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

ACROSS THE MOUNTAINS, PRAIRIES AND RIVERS OF CANADA, VIA THE CANADIAN PACIFIC.

We left Boston June 14, at 8 p. m. for Montreal, arriving there the next morning. This is called the chief city of Canada, and is indeed a most beautiful one. Having some time to remain we began sight seeing. First we visited the beautiful Cathedral Temple, built after the style of St. Peter's church of Rome. It has taken twenty-two years to build it thus far, and we were told it would take two years more to complete it.

After seeing what time would permit we left this city for Toronto, thence to Owen Sound, where we took a most beautiful steamer called the Alberta. It might be of interest to mention the size of the ship, which had all the modern appliances for speed, comfort and safety. Its length was 300 feet, its capacity 2200 tons. Each stateroom has two berths, a sofa which can be converted into an extra berth, and is lighted by electricity. In this beautiful and homelike ship we sailed for two days and nights on Lake Huron and through the straits of Sault St. Marie,—where we were lifted by an enormous lock to the level of Lake Superior,—and across the greatest of fresh water seas to Fort William on Thunder Bay, after traveling 555 miles by steamship. Surely no ship ever had a finer captain or more courteous attendants. We must say, long live the good ship Alberta!

At Fort William we again took the cars which were to carry us to the Pacific, and settled ourselves in the sleeper in which we were to live some days and nights. We hear the locomotive begin its hissing, the signal is soon given to go, and we take one last look at the beautiful Alberta as we say farewell. Here we see great grain elevators, numerous long trains laden with grain and flour. Still moving westward we find ourselves in a strange, wild country. Fire has swept through some parts of the land, and only blackened stumps are there to remind one of what this rough, broken country might have been. Great sawmills with piles of lumber are soon seen. We begin to realize the vastness of this Western country.

Leaving this scenery we enter the valley of the Red River, which brings us into the city of Winnipeg. Nearly all the passengers get off, and here we have our breakfast. We see well tilled farms, vast meadows, countless immigrants,—land seekers,—Scandinavians and various other nationalities. Leaving here we find we are on a real prairie, seeing prairie dogs, cattle too numerous to mention, and one wolf. Indians appear on the station platforms with their squaws and pappooses, trading their trinkets with the passengers for tobacco and money. Some were in brilliant colored blankets, smiling at us as we passed. Soon your eyes rested on their tepees of well-smoked cloth or skins, with ponies feeding on the grasses, the whole scene forming a most novel and striking picture. Next come the ranchmen with their countless herds feeding far out on the plain. Cattle and horses graze at will over the vast country. We saw the cowboy in all his glory, with his lasso in hand; splendid riders, well trained for their work.

We now start for the Rockies amidst the most beautiful scenery we ever beheld. I might mention every place we saw which was full of interest, but time will not permit. I will only speak of those that are most grand and that impressed one with the mighty power and wisdom of the Creator of the grand mountain scenery. By and by the wide valleys change into broken ravines and lo! through an opening in the mist made rosy with early sunlight, we see far away up in the sky the pearly tips clear against the blue, a single snow peak of the grand Rocky Mountains. We call this one Kananskies, 4100 feet high. The mountains now rise in great masses, streaked and capped with snow and ice. We are between, as it were, two immense walls of a dizzy height. This place is called the Gap, 4200 feet high, by which the Rocky Mountains are extended. Through this we see Pigeon Mountain, Wind Mountain and Three Sisters, and pass through Cannon 4230 feet high. An observation car is put on, designed to allow an unbroken view of the wonderful mountain scenery. Here is the Cascade, Mt. Vieno, rising in solid masses; each curve of our train brings our eyes to endless peaks, all snow-capped, glistening as the sun strikes them, such a beautiful sight! At every town huge mountains seem to stand right across our way, and we are led to say "What human hands could make their way through the solid mountains?" The Canadian Pacific has indeed given us a rare treat on these most beautiful mountains.

Next come the Hot Springs at Banff, 4500 feet up, a medicinal watering place and pleasure resort. This place is 26 miles long northeast and southwest, by ten miles wide. Consumptives go there, I am told, in the hope of regaining health, as the climate is mild and the air bracing. Among our party were a mother and two daughters, one of whom was suffering from this disease, who were seeking health at these hot springs.

I hasten by Rogers Pass, also Selkirk Summit to the Glacier House, the height of which is 4122 feet. Here we see the Great Glacier a mile and a half away. Pen cannot describe the grandeur. The hotel is a handsome structure resembling a Swiss chalet, affording a most delightful place for tourists who wish to hunt and explore the mountains. Beautiful fountains may be seen about the grounds. Game, we are told, is very abundant throughout these lofty mountains.

Following around the mountains we come to what is called the Loop, where the line makes several startling turns and twists. One is held with perfect wonder when our train goes down to the base of what is called Ross Peak, then really doubling itself back to the right, then sweeping around to the left. Looking back the railway is seen cutting two long gashes, one above the other, on the mountain slope; there is but a glimpse of this, another wonder, that the tourist may see by the Canadian Pacific.

Now comes Albert Canyon, 2845 feet high. Just east of the station the solid rock walls rise on both sides of you hundreds of feet. The river is seen nearly 300 feet below the railway, scarcely twenty feet wide. Our train stopped here to allow us one good look at this, one of the most wonderful sights. We then look into the boiling stream below. Here our observation car is detached and we are now hastening on to New Whatcom, Washington, thence to Seattle via the Great Northern Railway, and take the steamer State of Washington on Puget Sound for Portland, Oregon. Here we had also some fine views. We found the Sound pretty well disturbed, and the berth the safest place after having such tossing around as we had had for hours. Arriving at Tacoma, we again took the cars for Olympia. Immense trees are now frequent, and their size is indicated by the enormous trees near the railway. Some of them were twelve feet in diameter and nearly 300 feet high. We see a succession of these gigantic trees as we move along.

Soon we are reminded by the increasing nearness of snow-capped mountains that we are near our journey's end,—Portland, Oregon. In the distance can be seen Mt. Hord, Mt. St. Helen, Mt. Adams, and in a clear, bright day, Mt. Ranier in Seattle. Thus we were ushered into the beautiful city of Portland, called the City of Roses. Here we bade farewell to the mountain scenery of the grand Canadian Pacific Railroad. We shall long remember this journey for the untold beauty and grandeur of the scenery.

Round By Round.

We cannot see the way ahead,
But this we know each day,
That Heaven may crown the steep ascent,
And Hope is ours always.

This ladder-round we climb just now,
Is all we see, no more;
But smooth or rough, it lifts the same
Up toward the King's own door.

And do we ask why on each round
A print of blood we see?
A voice breathes low, "I go before
The Christ who died for thee."

So up we toil from round to round;
Some day will toil be o'er;
The last hard round of earth will prove
The step to Heaven's door.

THE TEA TABLE.

One of the recent fashionable innovations is a dainty tea table in the parlor. This is the "china craze" changed to a china common sense, and the transformation is in the interest of social felicity.

The highly polished table is square, and across it is laid diagonally a fine hemstitched damask scarf embroidered in flower sprays of cream-tinted silk. Upon the table is arranged a half-dozen dainty china "after dinner coffees," tiny cups and saucers, of as many different patterns. In each saucer is a souvenir spoon. Upon the table there is also a dainty open china sugar bowl oval in form, filled with loaf sugar, upon which rests delicate sugar tongs. There is a tiny creamer to match the bowl, and a brass tea-kettle hung over a spirit lamp. Light the lamp; in a moment the water boils; throw tea into the pot and the "cup that cheers but not inebriates" is ready for your

The Ladies' Social Union of the Universalist church will give an orange tea a week from next Wednesday evening.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a special meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Democratic caucus will be held at the town house next Thursday evening, and the Republican caucus on Friday evening.

A union temperance meeting is being arranged for two weeks from next Sunday evening, with speakers from out of town.

John Briley of Bondsville was before the district court this morning for drunkenness, and was sent to the house of correction for 30 days.

The annual meeting of Young Men's Library Association will be held in the rooms of the association next Monday evening.

W. A. Weld and F. J. Wassum have finished doing jury duty in Springfield, it having been seven weeks since they commenced.

The Quaboag Literary Circle will meet again next Friday evening, when Mrs. Auger will read a paper on "Witchcraft in New England."

The annual meeting of the Palmer Four Corners Cemetery Association will be held at the house of M. M. Thomas in Thorndike next Monday evening at 7.30.

The pastor of the Congregational church will preach Sunday morning on "The Great Puritan, Fanatic and Enthusiast." In the evening the subject will be "Wild Oats."

It was reported Wednesday evening that there was a case of small-pox in one of the houses on Park street, but investigation by the board of health proved the report to be false.

The Woronoco Whist Club was entertained last Friday evening by Miss Anna Shaw with a candy pull. Tuesday evening the club met with Miss Mabel Smith on Thorndike street.

Yesterday was the first of March, but the day was more like April, the air being warm and balmy. The month will very likely keep up its reputation, however, during the next twenty-nine days.

In the district court last Saturday two civil cases were entered, Ralph Clifford of Monson against E. A. Day of Hampden, and Joseph Desmarais of Three Rivers against Maurice Lawlor of Thorndike.

The selectmen are deserving of credit for their action in revoking certain licenses recently. There are no doubt others which deserve the same fate, the difficulty being to procure proof against the holders.

The social announced for Wednesday evening at the Universalist church was changed to Tuesday evening on account of other events which had been scheduled for Wednesday. A large number was present.

The authorities have been notified that the McKelligot children, which were thrown on this town for support by the town of Warren but were placed in a school in Springfield by the priest of that town, have been taken home again by their mother.

Fred Bressette, employed by the New London Northern road, had two fingers on his left hand broken this morning by getting them caught between the bumpers while coupling cars. He was attended by Dr. Holbrook, who hopes to save the fingers.

Sherman Stebbins has purchased all of Judge Robinson's cows. Mr. Stebbins disposed of some of the choicest of the herd to farmers in this vicinity, and the balance he shipped to Brighton. Mr. Stebbins is one of the largest dealers of cattle in Massachusetts.

The second farmers' institute of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will be held in Grange Hall at Monson next Tuesday, commencing at 10.50 a. m. G. L. Clemence of Southbridge, a member of the State Board of Agriculture, will speak on "Farm Dairying."

All wheelmen and others who are interested in the formation of a bicycle club are requested to meet in the rooms over Eager's store on Main street next Tuesday evening, when the committees appointed at the last meeting will report and the matter be fully discussed.

There was a reunion at the Converse House Monday afternoon of a party of ladies who visited the World's Fair together last summer. They were Mrs. Pierce of the Converse House, Mrs. Margerum and Mrs. Packard of Springfield, and the Misses Kenyon of Providence, R. I.

The Ladies' Society of the Congregational church will give a social in the church parlors next Wednesday afternoon and evening. Supper will be served by Mrs. L. W. Caryl, Mrs. H. W. McGregory, Mrs. F. D. Barton, Mrs. G. A. Rice, Mrs. H. D. Converse and Mrs. C. L. Gardner.

Jerry Connors of Three Rivers was before the court last Saturday charged with allowing minors about his pool room, and was fined $10, which he paid. It is said that enough other complaints could have been brought to have swelled the fine to $100. The selectmen have since revoked his license.

It has been discovered that some one has been making free with the contents of the "birthday box" at the Baptist church, a box in which voluntary contributions are deposited, to be used for any special purpose, as may be voted. On examination the other day it was found to contain only seventeen cents.

Truesdell & Brown are enlarging their market on Commercial street, taking into their main room about eight feet of the room formerly occupied by F. L. Pierce as a harness shop, the balance to be used as a storeroom. The office will be moved to the rear left corner, making the salesroom large and convenient.

The members of the Eastern Star gave a reception Wednesday evening to the members of the Masonic orders and their wives. An orchestra furnished music during the evening, and cake, coffee and ice cream were served, after which dancing was indulged in by some. The affair was a most enjoyable one throughout.

There was a most elegant display of northern lights last Friday night, and those who were so fortunate as to see it witnessed the sight of a lifetime. Shafts and bars of pink, light green and reddish light alternated across the heavens, shifting back and forth in most beautiful combinations. The best display was about 10 o'clock.

Meetings are to be held every Wednesday evening and Sunday afternoon at 1.30 in the Advent chapel. The first was Wednesday evening of this week, and is reported as "very interesting, at which the beautiful well-known hymn, 'Blest be the Tie that Binds,' was sung by all who wanted to be fully consecrated to the Lord."

Rev. H. F. Moulton will preach in St. Paul's church Sunday morning on "The Bread of Life." The pastoral committees of this church will hold their regular monthly meeting next Tuesday evening at 7.30. During Passion Week there will be two services daily in the Universalist church. A large offering was made for this Lenten work last Sunday morning.

The Eaton Club of the Universalist church met Wednesday evening and elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Helen Warren Auger; vice president, Miss Jennie Eastman; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. H. F. Moulton; executive committee, Miss Georgia Packard, Miss Effie Moffatt, George Sumner. The club will give an entertainment Wednesday evening, the 14th inst.

The registrars of voters held their first meeting in preparation for the annual town meeting in the district court room Monday. The subsequent meetings of the board will be at Three Rivers March 6th, from 2 to 4 p. m.; at Bondsville March 8th, from 2 to 4 p. m.; at Thorndike March 12th, from 2 to 4 p. m.; and at the district court room in this village March 14th, from 12 noon to 10 p. m., at which time registration will cease.

At the meeting of the Baptist church last evening several members asked for letters of dismissal. This is understood to be the first step toward the forming of a new Baptist church, the plan being for those who withdraw to hold meetings as regularly as possible, with various pulpit supplies, until the middle of April, when Rev. Mr. Frost's connection with the present church will cease, at which time he will be given a call to the new church.

Joseph C. Tew, 86, father of Mrs. G. B. Kenerson, was found dead in his bed Monday morning at the residence of his daughter, with whom he has been staying for the past year or more, death resulting from old age. He had been under the doctor's care for a few days, and had been confined to his bed more or less, but Sunday seemed somewhat better. He was heard moving about in bed during the night, but in the morning was found to have passed away.

There is no little kicking among the business men and those who have the best interests of the village at heart over the proposed moving of Lynde's block from its present location to the land purchased for it east of the opera house site. They hold that the location is worthy of a better business block than that which will occupy it, and that a wooden block there will be no ornament to the street. One business man has offered to put up a fine three-story brick block there provided he could get the land at a reasonable price.

A local merchant proved one day this week that Palmer prices are fully as low as prevail in Springfield. A customer was inquiring the price of an overcoat, and asserted that he could buy it several dollars less in the city. The proprietor of the store offered to pay the man's railroad fare to Springfield to enable him to find the bargain, with the understanding that if prices were not lower than in Palmer the coat should be purchased here. The man spent half a day looking about the city and returned here to make his purchase.

The PALMER JOURNAL is advocating the adoption of a fire district ordinance which shall require buildings in the principal business streets to be constructed of materials as nearly non-combustible as possible. Such a requirement might stand in the way of some temporary enterprises, but the results in the way of substantial building and lessened fire risks would soon overbalance the possible losses.—Springfield Union.

It is a little surprising, considering the attitude of the voters on various matters in the past, what a large number of them are favoring this move, and it will be strange if something is not done at the annual meeting of the fire district. The time to lock the barn is before the horse is stolen.

Saturday and Sunday will probably stand as banner days for this winter. Saturday morning the mercury was down to 15 below zero, and was hardly above zero all day. Sunday morning it was 20 below, and frozen water pipes were numerous. Monday forenoon it commenced to snow, and as the weather bureau had announced that a big storm, the biggest of the season, was on its way up the coast, everyone prepared for a blizzard, but the storm must have become wearied along the way, for we got only about five inches of snow, enough to make the sleighing, which was getting rather thin, considerably better for a day or two.

Additional reports regarding the crooked work of the Tanquery Portrait Co. of New York continues to come in. A New Hampshire reader of the JOURNAL writes to Judge Robinson of the district court that he was induced to give the company a photograph last summer, from which a crayon portrait was to be made. At last came the notice that on receipt of a certain amount, to cover cost of frame, packing, and other incidental expenses, the portrait would be sent. When it came it came through the mail, and was an 8 by 12 reprint of the photograph, so poorly done that the resemblance was scarcely recognizable. Reports from other direction give the same experience.

The following from the Boston Transcript will be of interest to many Palmer people, Father Sullivan having charge of St. Thomas's parish here previous to his transfer to Uxbridge:—

An unsuccessful attempt was made to rob Rev. T. J. Sullivan, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Uxbridge, Tuesday, just before midnight. At 11.45 a man rang the door bell at the parochial residence and Father Sullivan responded. The visitor told the priest that a man had been injured on the railroad and needed the attendance of a priest. Father Sullivan prepared to accompany the stranger. As he was ready to go out of the door the man thrust a revolver in his face and demanded money. Father Sullivan stepped back into the hall and the would-be robber followed. The men clinched, and in the struggle a lamp on the hall table was knocked to the floor and extinguished. Father Sullivan shouted for help and the maid responded. When the fellow heard her footsteps on the stairs he fled.

The selectmen held their last meeting of the year yesterday, and have found that the cost of maintaining the highways the past year has been $4300, several heavy snows having swelled the expenses; the appropriation was $4500. The contingent account will be overdrawn about $150, the total being something like $3500; bridges cost $518, out of an appropriation of $1000; railings cost $71.50, the appropriation being $300; $1000 was appropriated for the prosecution of illegal liquor selling, and $584 76 was expended; $600 was appropriated for culverts, and $315 paid out. The overseers find that their expenses have been as follows: For poor of this town not at the town farm, $4179.81; at the farm, $1159.74; state poor, $504.97; tramp room, $215 46; poor of other towns, $299 80; repairs at town farm, $164 80; outstanding bills, $450; making a total of $6974.58, or $1674.58 more than the appropriation.

State Primary School Notes.

The present population of the school is 270.

The trustees held their monthly meeting here to-day.

E. G. Buss was called to Clinton this morning by the death of his sister.

Dr. Prentiss, state inspector of institutions, paid us a visit on Wednesday.

The boys have been called to mourn the loss of one of their number, Arthur Dupont, who died Wednesday morning of tuberculosis after an illness of about four months. The funeral services were held in the chapel Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. It was with much difficulty that the choir sang the closing hymn, "There'll be joy by and by," so deeply affected were the children, and many officers were also moved to tears. The remains left Palmer on the 3.14 train for Worcester, where his parents reside, and where the interment will take place.

Tuesday evening the school received an addition of which no previous notice had been given. The new arrival was a horse and sleigh, which was caught just as it was passing the engine room. E. E. Walker took the team to Palmer but could not succeed in finding the owner. He then brought it back to the school, where it was cared for till the next morning, when Warren Shaw of South Monson came and identified the team as his property. Several conjectures were made as to the cause of the strange occurrence. The most plausible to the young men was that it had seen several similar conveyances with happy occupants leaving the school during the recent sleighing, and had come to offer its services in their behalf. Another theory was that, as it seemed perfectly sober, instinct directed the animal from where the ardent is so plentiful, lest it might also be tempted or fall a prey to some person who had imbibed too freely. Mr. Shaw says he lent his team to a friend, and that while procuring some goods in a Palmer store the horse got away.

The Money Argument—On Which Side Is It?

Do you believe it pays a town from a financial point of view to license saloons? Have you ever investigated the facts? The writer has, and gives below a part of the results. Kindly examine them as specimens of what any one will find who investigates the subject. The town of Palmer has six licensed saloons, each saloon pays into the town treasury $1700 a year—making $10,200 yearly from the six. Is it a good bargain for the town? Let us see.

1. The town pays one-quarter of this, or $2550, to the state, as required by the law, leaving $7650 for the town.

2. Statistics show that 80 per cent of all the crime in our state is a result of the saloons, hence 80 per cent of all the costs of looking after crime—courts, officers and all—is caused directly by the saloons.

3. The chairman of our overseers of the poor states that 90 per cent of all our pauperism can be traced directly to the saloon, hence 90 per cent of the cost of sustaining all our paupers is caused by the saloons.

4. When you deduct 80 per cent of the cost of crime and 90 per cent of the cost of paupers from our $7650 you have but a very small remainder.

5. The manager of a firm in this town which does an extensive business says, after careful calculation, that if the work done by his firm in various places could be freed from saloon influences it could well afford to pay all the license money received by Palmer from its six saloons, and would make money by the operation. The buildings of this town have cost the people a vast sum more than they would, had there been no saloon influences decreasing the efficiency of the workmen and interfering with the progress of the work.

6. The recent proprietor and manager of a successful business in this town was asked a few day since, "How much could you have afforded to pay to have the saloon influences removed from your business when you were managing it?" "A good deal," was the reply. "As much as $500 a year?" was asked. "Why, yes! I remember one loss of $500 in a single instance caused by a drunken workman, and such losses were many." Think of this for one business in this town!

7. Thirty cents spent for rum, twenty-five for tobacco, and the spender stepped into one of our grocery stores and asked to be treated for something for his family to eat. That is the way our business firms make money out of the saloon business in Palmer. Those who pay their own debts must pay the debts also of those who drink up their money, that is plain. Does it pay?

8. After deducting all these losses from saloon influences, from the license money, how much is left? Rather how much do the people have to pay for giving the saloons a legal right to do their terrible business?

9. But there is another set of facts. Where does this license money come from? Do the saloon keepers pay it? It passes through their tills, but the people pay it. More than this, the people pay the rents, the bar-keepers, the wholesale bill, (all of which goes out of the town), all running expenses, and an enormous profit to the saloon keepers. Do not forget that THE PEOPLE PAY IT ALL. The license system is simply another way of paying taxes. We pay the state $2550 for the privilege of using the system—25 per cent of all we get. In addition we pay all the expenses of six saloons and all the profits of six saloon keepers for collecting from ourselves, for our own use, $7650. Is it good business?

10. But what do the saloons cost Palmer in an ordinary year of prosperity? I am fully convinced that they cost us not less than $150,000. It is astounding, but I can give my reasons:

(1.) I have facts about one of our saloons for one year. It received in that year 636 thirty-two gallon barrels of intoxicating drinks, or 20,352 gallons. If one-quarter were of the stronger liquors and three-quarters were beer and other lighter liquors, there were 5088 gallons of the former and 15,264 of the latter. Now there are at least 64 drinks in a gallon of the stronger liquors, or 325,632 drinks in all. At ten cents a drink this would amount to $32,563.20. In 15,264 gallons there are 244,224 tumblers, even full, of beer, etc., allowing nothing for foam. At five cents a glass this would amount to $12,211.20, or a total for both kinds of $44,774.40 for that one saloon. It is surely not a wild estimate to place the actual sales, including that sold by the keg and gallon, at $25,000. This is not our largest saloon. Six times $25,000 make $150,000.

(2.) This saloon keeper was heard to say that if he could have three years more, he would be ready to retire from business—and well he might!

(3.) Another of our saloons often receives a half-car load of liquors at a time.

(4.) According to reliable statistics the drink bill of this country amounts to $1,200,000,000, or $18 50 for every man, woman and child in the United States. The population of Palmer is given at 6520. Hence, if Palmer were only an average town (counting in all no license, as well as license towns) its saloon bill would be $120,620. Being above the average in this line an estimate of $150,000 is fully confirmed by national statistics.

11. But where does all this money go to? Why do not our saloon keepers roll in money?

(1). They do. Some of them live high. Others perhaps let the money go easy, as it comes easy. It is not difficult to dispose of large sums when more is coming all the time, and when habits and morals are pitched to the tune of saloon keeping.

(2). It costs a good deal to run six saloons. Let us make some estimates:

License,	$ 1,700
Cost of liquors,	4,500
Salaries, including saloon-keeper's services,	2,000
Rent,	300
Incidentals,	200
Total for each saloon,	$ 8,700
Total for six saloons,	52,200

(3). Then there are the U. S. licenses, the large sums paid by every saloon into general funds for the protection and promotion of saloon interests in the United States, the money that must be paid at each contested campaign, etc. All these things make up thousands of dollars for our six saloons.

(4). After all these deductions we know the profits are enormous, or some of the men in our town who have consciences and who feel the loss of standing which they undergo in selling rum, would not remain in the business a month. They are naturally too good men.

Can Palmer afford to pay the $52,200 probable running expenses of our six saloons, and $2550 to the state for the $7650 in return? Can we afford to pay Palmer's portion of the great funds raised from our Nation's saloons for the defenes and promotion of the liquor traffic? Can we afford to pay the large profits of six saloons? Can we afford to pay 80 per cent of our crime expenses and 90 per cent of all our pauper expenses—all for $7650? Will not the people of this town arise in their might and say, "This thing must stop?" In the name of good business,

FRANK E. JENKINS.

PALMER CENTER.

James Clark has rented his farm to a Mr. Gould of Amherst.

Mrs. Burpee and Mrs. Dimick are improving, after a hard sickness.

Mrs. P. S. Trumble gave a card party to a few friends Wednesday evening.

A small but jolly party spent the evening at Horace Smith's Tuesday evening.

About 50 friends of Loren Trumble called on him Monday evening, it being his 18th birthday, and presented him with a watch chain and charm. The evening was passed pleasantly with music and dancing.

THORNDIKE.

John Heydt has bought the Indian Leap Hotel at Indian Orchard.

William Dutton, of the firm of Hull & Dutton, is visiting in town.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Farro during the week.

George A. Murdock of Baltimore, Md., is visiting with his family for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Keith of Fitchburg are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Adams.

George Moores and wife have returned from Orange, where they have been visiting friends during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Brosnan are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son, which came to them on Sunday.

A sled with four horses attached to it and loaded with ties attracted quite a crowd of spectators on Tuesday afternoon. The horses were unable to pull the load on bare ground across the No. 1 mill bridge; the driver tried his best to start them, but finally gave it up, and went to work and took part of the load off, when the result was accomplished. About the same time one of the Thorndike Company's teams came along, the horse became ill and fell to the ground, breaking the shafts.

A Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Barna Smith celebrated their 50th anniversary of married life with a golden wedding at their High street home on Wednesday. The married couple were the recipients of many gifts in the form of gold money and other useful articles. Among those present from out of town were Mr. Whitney, Mr. Albert Whitney and daughter Emma, Mr. Veech and daughter from Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Deresanix from Rhode Island. Those present from this place were H. E. W. Clark, Mrs. D. B. Bishop, Mrs. Jeremiah Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Kelley, E. W. and J. J. Kelley, John Hutchinson, George Hutchinson and Miss Nellie Hutchinson. The affair was a very pleasant one, and the party broke up late in the evening, wishing the couple many more years of happiness together.

BONDSVILLE.

Fred Getchell has taken a position with the Thorndike Co.

Miss Edith Hobson spent last week with friends in Wilbraham.

The W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. Thomas Bruce Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. F. A. Packard of Indian Orchard was the guest of Mrs. C. E. Getchell Friday.

Misses Viola and Vina Packard of Indian Orchard are visiting friends here this week.

Seth Brown, who formerly lived here, called on some of his old friends this week.

Leon Crouch of Warren visited his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. James Fuller, last week.

Miss Hattie Fairbanks of Ware is stopping with her aunt, Mrs. Henry Morgan, this week.

Mrs. Louis Gaboury and sister, Miss Edwitch Foucha, are visiting friends in Milbury.

The Epworth League have an entertainment this evening, with coffee and cake for refreshments.

Pat Maloney, "the funniest Irishman living," drew a large audience Monday night at Liberty Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Walker and children of West Warren were guests of Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Parent Sunday.

James Gloster, an old resident of this place, died Saturday and was buried Monday. He was over 80 years old. He leaves a wife and one son, Arthur Gloster.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church had a ten-cent supper Wednesday night. The tables were in charge of Mrs. L. P. Carpenter, Mrs. Mary Clark and Mrs. Charles Collis.

The 'bus carrying the Swift River Whist Club to Thorndike Thursday night was overturned at the corner of Spring and Main streets. No one was injured, but one woman was somewhat shaken up.

W. O'Regan spent last week in Boston and vicinity, visiting friends. He made a short call on his son at Tufts, and called on Rev. George Clark of Malden, a former pastor here, and also Russel J. Armington of Somerville, an old schoolmate whom he had not seen but twice in 35 years. They both went to the same district school, and later both attended the same academy together in Bakersfield, Vermont; thirty-five years ago this winter they both taught their first school.

THREE RIVERS.

Miss Adelaide Walker spent Sunday in Belchertown.

Miss Annie Avery is having quite a siege with the mumps.

Mrs. Wilson of Somerville is stopping at Rev. Mr. Butler's.

Several more cases of measles have been reported this week.

Mrs. Haynes visited her son, C. P. Haynes, the middle of the week.

The A. O. U. W. had an initiation and supper Tuesday evening.

Dr. Bliss was confined to the house a day or two the first of the week.

Miss Cora Morse of Belchertown is visiting at Mr. and Mrs. Percy's.

Miss Combs of Pelham is visiting Mrs. L. B. Kendrick for a few weeks.

Miss Jennie Kendrick will spend Sunday in Springfield with her sister.

Raymond, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Edson Walker, is dangerously sick.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Parsons of Duluth, Minn., are visiting at Homer Shaw's.

Quite a number are to be admitted to membership at the Union church next Sunday.

One result of the Wednesday evening lectures is a large increase in the attendence.

Miss Clara Vient of Chicopee Falls has been visiting Miss Exilena Camerlin for a few days.

Mrs. Marsh, formerly a teacher in the high school, was the guest of Mrs. R. C. Newel yesterday.

Mrs. Fred Burlingame of Springfield is stopping with her mother, Mrs. N. K. Story, for a few days.

Miss Mary Twiss of this village and Miss Susan Twiss of Bondsville are visiting in Taunton and Boston.

Horace Paine was in Boston the first of the week, attending the meetings of the Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W.

Sunday was the coldest morning of the season here, the mercury registering from 16° to 19° below at different places.

Mrs. Hart of Centerville, R. I., who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Frank Lavine, the past two weeks, returned to her home Tuesday.

Rev. Mr. Weeks will speak upon "The Lord's Supper and Christian Union," next Sunday morning. In the evening an interesting topic will be presented.

Several members of the order went to Springfield Saturday night to attend a Masonic meeting. Twiss's 'bus met them at the Orchard after the late car from Springfield.

George Dalyrmple, formerly of Three Rivers, but more recently station agent at Ware, is to be transferred to Warren, to take the position formerly occupied by Fred Allen.

Quite a number visited Sodom this afternoon to attend a special church service. All who attend will be given supper, that they may remain for the services this evening. A delegation will go over this evening from this village.

The chicken pie supper at the Baptist church last Friday evening was a decided success. A larger number than was expected on such a night was present. Next Friday night the ladies will give a baked bean supper, and promise a general good time to all who will attend.

Quite a party went to Palmer last Friday night to the Odd Fellows' entertainment, and all report a most enjoyable evening. So far as known only one accident occurred. Philo was driving, and Jim says he couldn't see straight; but it makes no difference who was to blame, because when the sleigh tipped over at the railroad crossing they both went out. Consternation reigned for a few moments, but they soon collected their scattered clothing, as well as senses, and each promised the other eternal silence—hence this story.

Officer Frank Lavine has suspected for a long time that the pool room conducted by Jerry Connor was not all that it should be, but did not have evidence enough to convict until last Saturday. At a special meeting of the selectmen on that day he gave evidence enough to have the board take away Connor's license. Mr. Lavine immediately arrested Connor on the charge of allowing minors to play pool. He was proven guilty on ten counts, but was only fined $10 on one of them; he promised never to cause the officer any more trouble or to break the law in any way.

"Ladies' Night," many times postponed on account of the special services at the Union church, was the attraction at the last meeting of the Monday Evening Club," and it proved an attraction, too, for there was a larger attendance than at any other meeting. The following ladies, dressed in the styles which were in fashion the early part of the century, acted as hostesses: Mrs. Frank Lavine, Mrs. M. Gannon, Mrs. Charles Ruggles, Misses Clara Green, Annie Crane, Adelaide Walker, Cora Clark, Louise White, Eva Forte, Fannie Barnes, Alice Lupren and Grace Holt. After a musical and literary programme supper was served to all present.

The grammar schoolroom was more than full of visitors last Friday afternoon to listen to the following programme, arranged to commemorate the birthday of Washington:

No New Town House.

An article in one of the Springfield papers a few days ago regarding the building of a town house in Palmer depot has caused no end of comment in this village. Prominent members of both parties say they will not countenance such a move. "No, sir; I am not in favor of any such scheme," said one. "Palmer Depot seems to think that all she has to do is to say 'I want this,' or 'I think that,' and then all the villages will say 'yes, we'll help you to get it.'" "What, put a new town house in Palmer Depot! No, sir; the new one will be put up right here in Three Rivers before it will go to that village," said another. "You can say that I am not in favor of any such scheme," said one of our largest real estate owners. "Before we will favor any such plan as that we shall certainly ask for a division of the town." "Three Rivers is about done paying for Palmer Depot's fun," said one. "They have their Memorial Hall, the high school building, and now they want a new town house, do they? Well, let them have one if they want to pay for one of their own, but Three Rivers will not be a party to pay for one for them. We shall have to put up one for ourselves pretty soon, because, if you did but know it, the day is not far distant when Three Rivers people will see that all the Depot people think of Three Rivers is to help pay for their schemes and ask no favors in return, and when that day arrives we will have a separation, and then a town house of our own."

Of eighteen prominent men seen not one will favor any such scheme, and every one of these men has a following whose votes they influence, because they are all men of sound judgment whose opinions are sought because they always know the best interests of the town. L. R. F.

WILLIAM SULLIVAN.
Monson, March 2d, 1894.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT, in and for the County of Hampshire.

Humbly shews George A. Blish of Granby, in said county, that he was lawfully married to Anna J. McKernan, now resident in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at Chicopee, Massachusetts, on March twenty-fourth, A. D. 1875, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in Granby aforesaid, and he has ever conducted towards her as a faithful, chaste, and affectionate husband, yet the said Anna J., regardless of her marriage vows and obligations, on or about the eleventh day of June, A. D. 1884, at Granby aforesaid, utterly deserted him and has continued her up to the date of filing this libel, a period of more than three consecutive years.

Wherefore he prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between him and the said Anna J. Blish may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.
GEORGE A. BLISH.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPSHIRE, ss. Superior Court at Northampton. February 27th, A. D. 1894.

ON THE LIBEL aforesaid, it is Ordered, that the Libellant notify the said Anna J. Blish to appear before our Justices of the Superior Court, at our Clerk's Office at Northampton, within our said County of Hampshire, on the First MONDAY of April next, by publishing an attested copy of said Libel, and this Order, once a week, three weeks successively, in the Ware Standard, a newspaper published in Ware, in said county, the last publication to be fourteen days at least, before said First MONDAY of April next; also, by causing an attested copy of said Libel and Order to be sent by letter, registered if practicable, to the last known residence of the Libellee, fourteen days at least before said First Monday of April next; that he may then and there show cause why the prayer of said Libel should not be granted.
Attest: WM. H. CLAPP, Clerk.
A copy of the Libel, and Order of Notice.

MONSON.

For Monson's Water Works.

The committee chosen to estimate the cost and present plans for the new system of water works has organized and is pushing matters in that direction. There are two locations which perhaps would be advisable to consider. One, near Conant's mill on the Wales road, has been talked of before, and seems to be as good as any that could be found. The brook which would feed the proposed reservoir is of sufficient size to give an abundant supply, and at the same time is good water, as it is fed by springs. In addition to these advantages the brook runs through a natural basin formed by two hills, which would reduce the expense of digging a reservoir to a minimum, neccessitating only the building of a dam to get a body of water of sufficient size to give the town protection from fire, and furnish enough for household purposes. The second location spoken of is in the vicinity of A. M. Guilford's and L. G. Cushman's farms on the Wilbraham road. For a number of days an engineer and a skilled workman from Boston have been exploring the region, boring wells to locate springs with which to feed the reservoir, and to give an estimate as nearly as possible of the cost to dig the same. By the time of town meeting April 21, it is expected that plans will be submitted, the cost estimated, and advice given on which locality to choose, and that everything will be in readiness to begin work as soon as the town gives its authority.

Rev. Ira Priest, formerly of this town, now at Newtonville, will preach at the special meeting to be held in the Universalist church next Wednesday evening.

The postponed farmers' institute will be held in the Grange Hall next Tuesday at 10.50. Mr. Clemence of Southbridge will speak on "Farm Dairying."

G. W. Burdick is visiting his son Asher at Philadelphia. Asher has held an important position with the street railroad company there for the past 12 years.

The Windsor Club is planning to hold a concert and ball in Memorial Hall Monday evening, November 26. An orchestra from Brattleboro will furnish the music.

Ralph Clifford has a carload of horses on the way from the West. Mr. Clifford will have an auction sale of horses at his stable in the rear of the Monson House Thursday, March 22.

The Ladies' Aid society of the Methodist church will give a chicken pie supper in the vestry next Wednesday evening. Supper will be served from 6 to 8 o'clock at 25 cents, followed by an entertainment, admission free.

The lecture on "Chicago, Columbus and the World's Fair," Monday evening did not draw a very large audience. The views were excellent and instructive. Col. French is an interesting talker, and his lecture was well appreciated.

The largest audience of the series was present at the Congregational chapel to hear Rev. W. R. Newhall of Wilbraham last evening. The next discourse will be preached by the Rev. G. C. Baldwin, Jr., pastor of the First Baptist church in Springfield.

The W. N. Flynt Granite Company has purchased this week through Sherman Stebbins a herd of Jersey cows. These, with the herd of Durhams recently purchased, enables them to furnish a goodly amount of cream to the Monson Creamery, of which they are a patron.

The discourse at the Congregational church last Sunday evening was well attended by citizens generally, and several of the leading remedies for industrial discontent were examined. The subject next Sunday evening is the "Acquisition of Property," and the discourse from this point will advance from facts to principles.

Quite a political discussion took place in front of Anderson's barber shop last Saturday. Quite a number of spirited arguments were presented for and against the proposed tariff measure. It was hard to tell which side came off victorious, but if one could judge from the volume of sound he would give the weight of argument to the opponents of the Wilson bill.

Contractor Harvey has been busy the past week getting the post office ready for the new outfit, which was placed in position Tuesday. The outfit was made by the Yale & Towne Lock Company of Stamford at a cost of $600. There are about 150 lock boxes and 600 call boxes arranged in the shape of the letter A, with the point toward the door. The outfit is substantial, and gives good satisfaction.

John M. O'Reilly, employed at L. F. Cushman & Son's home mill, sustained quite a severe accident Monday. He was operating a machine called a wet extractor, and his hand became caught between two large rollers. The machine was stopped as soon as possible, but on examination Mr. O'Reilly's arm was found to be broken. Dr. Jackson was summoned to attend the injured man, who is now doing nicely.

There will be a temperance convention, for the discussion of such questions as law enforcement, no-license, training children for temperance, and changes desired in the law, at the call of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society in the chapel of the Congregational church next Thursday afternoon at 2.15. All parties interested are invited to attend, especially from Brimfield, Hampden, Holland, Palmer, Tolland and Wales.

Warren Shaw took a friend for a drive Tuesday evening, and in the course of their travels they brought up in Palmer. Mr. Shaw left his companion in the sleigh a moment to go into a store, and upon his return found the team and its occupant had disappeared, leaving not a trace behind. The team has not been found up to the date of writing, although Mr. Shaw's friend showed up Wednesday morning not much the worse for wear.

As the time for holding the annual town meeting draws near the Republican and Democratic town committees are busy making out the slates. It is probable that the old board of selectmen will be reelected. Although it has not been the custom to bring national issues into town politics heretofore, yet such a policy is to be feared this year. The voters of Monson should be cautious on this point, and in the town elections vote for the most suitable man regardless of political principles. The report of the committee on the proposed water works will probably be a leading feature, while there are several other things of minor importance. The question of changing the school superintendent plan will probably bring forth some argument, yet it is safe to say nothing will be done on this matter. On the whole it may be said that the town meeting this year will be an unusually quiet affair.

WEST WARREN.

H. H. Herbert, 44, a prominent merchant and a much respected citizen of this town, died last Sunday morning of pneumonia, after a week's illness. He leaves a widow and nine children. The oldest son is in college at Montreal.

BRIMFIELD.

Miss May Wood entertained a few friends Wednesday.

Miss Edith Burnham of Springfield is the guest of Miss Mamie Pierson.

A few patronized the chicken pie supper at Holland Thursday evening.

F. R. Newton was giving a surprise Wednesday, the occasion being his birthday.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

A meeting of Grace Chapel parish is called for to-morrow evening.

Rev. N. Vander Pyl gave a preparatory lecture Thursday evening.

Miss N. Morgan is spending a week among friends in Worcester and vicinity.

The selectmen request that all bills against the town be presented by next Monday.

Leonard Miller, who died on Tuesday, was buried at Ludlow Center Thursday. Funeral services were held at the residence at 12 m.

Judge Bosworth of Springfield has made a report on the death of Charles A. Davis, who was struck by a train on the Boston and Albany road January 6th; also on the death of John M. Anthony, who fell from a train on the 22d of December while in the discharge of his duty as brakeman, and was killed.

BELCHERTOWN.

Miss Evelyn Alley has gone to Lynn for a few weeks' visit.

Miss Grace Haskell is visiting with her mother at Ipswich.

The Epworth League held a social in the Methodist church Wednesday evening.

Everett Howard has bought the printing outfit of the late John L. Montague.

Austin Abbey, 80, of Belchertown, died last Saturday evening at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Edwin R. Blackmer on Federal street. The funeral was held Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Blackmer.

A meeting of the Amherst Local Endeavor Union was held last Friday afternoon and evening in the Congregational church. The afternoon exercises began at 4 o'clock, with a large attendance. The evening's programme was successfully rendered and much enjoyed by all. The banner was given to the Mill Valley society for the next quarter, it having the highest percentage present.

The following are the expenses of the town for the year ending February 15: Town expenses, $3364; roads and bridges, $2663; schools, $4384; paupers in almshouse, $1745; out of almshouse, $670, Balance in treasury, $4347. The income from the town farm for the past year was $1240, which, deducted from the expenses of paupers in the almshouse, leaves the actual expense for the almshouse $505.

At the citizen's caucus held last Friday evening the following were nominated for town officers: Moderator, G. H. B. Greene; town clerk, G. W. Longley; selectmen, A. M. Baggs, M. A. Morse, Asa C. Smith; assessors, F. L. Stebbins, Guy C. Allen, George E. Sanford; treasurer, Arthur Bridgman; auditor, E. R. Bridgman; tax collector, William Burnett; constables, William Burnett, L. W. Dillon, Thomas Mansfield, W. M. Goodell, Patrick Keey; burial ground commissioner, George L. Kent. M. A. Morse, nominated for selectman, has withdrawn his name.

WARREN.

The fifth social assembly will be held in Brigham's Hall this evening.

Selectman William E. Patrick has been appointed by Govenor Greenhalge a justice of the peace.

The debating society held an open debate Monday evening on the pros and cons of college education.

Fred E. Wilcox received word last Saturday of the death of his mother at West, Westminster, Vt.

George E. Dalrymple is now filling the position of ticket agent at the Boston and Albany railroad station.

Charles W. Ward will resign his position as warden at the poor farm, and a new man will be engaged by the overseers of the poor for the coming year.

The Y. P. S. C. E. held a very pleasant social at the Congregational church parlors, Tuesday evening. Light refreshments were served. About one hundred were present.

The small house on Richardson street owned and occupied by Jason Foskit was entirely destroyed by fire last Saturday morning about 1 o'clock. The loss is estimated at about $360, insured for $250. The house was one of the old landmarks of the town, being formerly known as the old hat shop. It was moved to Richardson street from Maple street about two years ago.

Station Agent Fred Allen of the Boston and Albany road has been deposed from his place at the station, and Mr. Dalrymple of Ware is in charge. Just what the trouble is it is hard to learn, and all sorts of rumors are afloat regarding shortages and irregularities. Certain it is that matters at the station have not been going smoothly for some time. Thursday afternoon of last week representatives of the road visited town and had a long consultation with Mr. Allen, after which he went to the woods, where he was afterward found by friends with a revolver in his possession, and it is reported that he contemplated suicide. His friends have used every effort to keep the matter quiet, and but few facts can be learned.

LUDLOW.

Alexander Birnie is home from Amherst college.

The Burns' Club will give a dance in Joy's Hall March 31.

George Greenhalge and family have returned to Providence.

Town meeting comes a week from next Monday, and will be held in Joy's hall instead of at the Center, as has been customary.

The Republican town committee has organized for the coming year with J. B. Knowlton chairman, and F. S. King secretary and treasurer.

Numbers 2 and 4 of the mills started this week on full time with the exception of the webbing room. These departments have been running on two and three days a week for six months, and their starting up is encouraging.

Court Indian Leap, A. O. F., banqueted its members Monday night. The evening was pleasantly spent in listening to singing and a miscellaneous entertainment. One new member was initiated, and three proposals were made.

Last week a mistake crept into an item in regard to the Masons' banquet, giving the credit of the catering to Mr. Hunt. This part of the program was prepared by a committee, but was done in a manner worthy of comparison with the genial landlord's.

A pleasant whist part was held at Leroy Hallord's home in honor of his 16th birthday Wednesday night. Among those present were Miss Nellie Tipping, Miss Lillian Keith, Miss Lillian Sharp, George Sharp, Herbert King and George Booth.

The following is the list of jurors prepared by the selectmen: Austin E. Nash, Albert A. Gove, E. H. Hubbard, C. B. Bennett, M. D. L. Towne, Charles Greenhalge, John F. Smith, Lyman Graves, A. H. Bartlett, C. W. Nash, H. A. Munsing, C. F. Howard, W. F. Miller, D. S. Jones, B. F. Burr, C. O. Moore and C. T. Potter.

A citizen's caucus will be held in Joy's Hall next Tuesday night, when candidates will be nominated for town officers. A selectman to succeed John Hubbard, an assessor to succeed A. E. Fuller, a school committeeman to succeed G. A. Birnie, town clerk and treasurer, library trustee, cemetery commissioners, two auditors, parish committee and constables. It is expected that most of the retiring board will be renominated.

The annual meeting of parishoners of the Union church will be held next Wednesday evening. The reports of the clerk, treasurer and prudential committee will be read and acted upon. The adopting of the following amendment to article 2 of the by-laws will be considered; That the prudential committee shall be elected for a term of three years, one member each year. The manner of raising funds and renting the pews will also be discussed.

WARE.

Horses sold low at the auction last Saturday.

Edwin H. Baker has returned from an extensive trip through the South.

William F. Coney has opened a wood and lumber business on Church street.

S. A. Curtis of New York has taken T. D. Lyon's photograph rooms in Trench's block.

D. S. Kennedy has Sturtevant's steam saw mill on his farm, sawing some pine lumber for him.

The daily predictions of the weather are to be posted in the post office at 9 10 a. m. in the future.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the chapel next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Carter farm, formerly known as Pepper's Mills, has been sold to Mrs. Mills and son of New York.

About 40 Odd Fellows visited Palmer last Friday evening. The Palmer lodge gave them a fine collation.

Hathaway Brothers have the contract to rebuild the house of James Irwin, which was burned last week.

James Irwin's house, which was burned last Friday, was insured for $2500 with the Lincoln agency of Warren.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is holding a social at the East Congregational chapel this evening.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at East Congregational Chapel on Tuesday next at 3 o'clock p. m.

Frank A. Hannum and Miss Margaret Cravan were married on Monday, Rev. A. M. Osgood performing the ceremony.

Cornelius Welch died on Thursday of consumption, aged 32. He has been a clerk at J. Keefe & Co's. grocery store for 12 years.

F. A. Fogweil, the undertaker, had a slight shock of paralysis on Wednesday morning. It is expected that he will be out in a few days.

J. H. Donnelly and W. C. Carrick have been appointed by the board of health as assistant examiners of any who wish to go into the plumbing business in Ware.

At the meeting of registrars Wednesday evening nine names were taken from the list of voters, eight of them having died since last October, and five new names were added.

C. F. Nichols, Henry Lasco and Joseph Maple were each sentenced to 60 days in Worcester jail for robbing the hen house of Charles R. Shaw on the West Warren road.

Mrs. H. M. Coney's Sunday school class is giving a missionary tea this evening, from eight to ten, at the residence of Miss Hall, 46 Church street, for the benefit of the Ceylon mission.

Silas Spooner is canvasing the town for the "Standard Dictionary," much less bulky than the Century, but containing nearly 75,000 more words. The price is low, and if any wish they may have it on the installment plan.

The plumbers have had lively times this week, as it was the coldest Sunday morning Ware has seen for years, and the water pipes, unless well protected, had to suffer. The mercury went as low as 20 degrees below zero in some localities.

Rev. J. T. Sheehan of Ware, who has had charge of the Catholic church at Gilbertville the past 12 or 14 years, in connection with the Ware church, has been superceded by Rev. William Grace of Worcester, there having been a new parish created there.

James B. Mackie, in "Grimes' Cellar Door," will appear at the town hall Monday next. At 12.30 of that day Janitor Fitzgerald will take a novel method of advertising, sending up sky-rockets with tickets attached, the finders to have free admission.

C. Hitchcock & Co. have taken the stock of groceries, fancy goods, etc., from the Henry Cleveland store to that recently occupied by H. A. Smith & Co., and are offering bargains in staple goods, sale to commence Monday, March 12, afternoons only.

There was a large audience to hear the lecture by Dr. Henry Boynton Wednesday evening. This was the third in the course. The fourth and last is to be a concert by the Homestead Male Quartette, March 21st. This promises to be a grand finale to a very interesting course of lectures.

The assessors have refused to give a rebate of taxes to Rev. John T. Sheehan, president, secretary and treasurer of the Mount Carmel educational institution. Mr. Sheehan's residence is assessed for $8200. It is the opinion of lawyers that Mr. Sheehan has as much right to a rebate in taxes as the presidents of the colleges in the state.

There was a very small audience at the mass meeting at the Unitarian church Monday evening. Rev. G. W. Kent of Worcester spoke of "The Liberal Church as a Means of Worship," Rev. J. C. Duncan of Clinton spoke of the "Liberal Church as a Means of Education," Rev. W. F. Greenman of Fitchburg on the "Liberal Church as a Means of Embodying the Ideal."

It is wonderful how the interest has kept up in the illustrated lectures given by Rev. A. M. Osgood at the town hall. Sunday evening the janitor reported that the hall had never held a larger audience. The subject was "Temperance." On Tuesday evening there was a small admission fee and a large audience, Mr. Osgood repeating his lecture on "Christ in Art."

Rev. Geo. W. Moore, formerly pastor of the Lincoln Memorial church, Washington, D. C., will speak in the First church next Sunday afternoon. In the evening he will give a lecture, illustrated with stereopticon pictures, on the work of the A. M. A. among the Negroes and Highlanders of the South, the Indians and Chinese. These services are free. A collection for the A. M. A. will be taken at the evening service, which will be at 6.30.

The high school pupils took possession of the new building last Friday afternoon. Monday morning H. C. Davis, chairman of the school committee, addressed the pupils, and a committee from J. W. Lawton G. A. R. post presented the school with an elegant flag, 11 by 24 feet. The presentation speech was made by H. M. Coney, and was responded to by Mr. Rushmore, principal of the school. As the flag was unfurled from the flag staff on the building the pupils cheered it heartily. There is a reception this evening, that the friends of the pupils may see the new building.

There will be a no-license rally at the town hall next Wednesday evening, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Five-minute addresses will be given by two or three of our prominent citizens, but most of the evening will be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, the famous Nebraska vocalists, who have been singing to crowded houses all over Massachusetts this winter. They did valiant service for the cause of temperance in the Nebraska campaign of 1890, and any who have heard them will need no second invitation to come to the town hall next Wednesday. Admission free. A collection will be taken to cover expenses.

A temperance convention under the auspices of the Massachusetts Total Abstainance Society of Boston was held in the chapel on Church street Tuesday afternoon. Rev. A. B. Bassett was chairman and Rev. V. E. Southworth secretary. There were several delegates from other towns present. Messrs. Alfred Noon and J. C. Savory of Boston addressed the convention. Mr. Noon, secretary of the society in Boston, spoke of the present situation of the license question and the enforcement of the law. He stated that as yet there was a small majority in the whole state in favor of license, but this was gradually being overcome, and he believed in the near future the good old state of Massachusetts would go for no license. A committee was appointed to call a meeting to organize some work among the temperance organizations and the churches, to work at the coming election.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 28, 1894.

The effort in behalf of greater stability and permanence for the profession of school teaching has won a point this year which it has not been able to carry before. By a unamious vote the education committee has reported a bill to provide that examination of public school teachers may be made under authority of the state board of education, when and where they think best. Applicants who pass the examination are to be given a certificate, either probationary or permanent, and such certificate shall be a legal substitute for the examination of school teachers which is now required by law. This will save a great deal of work to school committees and superintendents, will insure more competent and thorough examination of teachers, and will be more favorable to teachers who are able to teach successfully.

The committee on constitutional amendments, which includes nine Republicans and two Democrats, has reported against biennial elections. Senators Swallow and Burnham of Suffolk and Representatives Prevaux of Amesbury and Cook of Barre dissent. The strength of the opposition to biennials is greater in the committee than usual, for the report has usually been in favor, while the adverse action has been taken by the House.

Two facts are already settled (barring the action of insane people) regarding the situation and the future of the unemployed. One is that the public peace will not be disturbed by unlawful violence, and another is that the state authorities will pay a humane attention to the real sufferings of the unemployed. The first hearing by the special committee on the petition of the unemployed, which was presented on the occasion of their demonstration at the State House, occurred on Wednesday forenoon. Swift, Casson and other leaders in the movement were there, and they gave ample assurance that the only revolution they propose is peaceful. That means that their plans must stand sober, serious discussion, and that they cannot be adopted until they are approved by a majority of the people of the state. Reason, and not enthusiasm, will prevail, and all the conflicting interests will make their power felt.

But on Wednesday afternoon the same committee held a conference with the metropolitan sewerage commission for the purpose of seeing if the main works do not afford opportunity for employing hundreds more of men. If they do, then cities and towns can go to work and make connections, thus affording employment to hundreds more. The State House construction commission and the highway commission are particularly to be inquired of to see whether the unemployed have any chances with them, and the inquiry will ultimately include every commission which draws money from the state treasury. Legislative authority will be needed for an enlargement of the work, but the Legislature will doubtless give its consent where a good case is made out.

Yet there is need of caution for fear of imposition. I have heard of a case which occurred last week. A man in Dedham who was out of work was pitied by a Boston firm, which gave him employment on something not essential to them, and paid him $1.75 a day. On the day of the State House demonstration last week he was absent from his work. When he showed up the next morning he was asked where he was the day before. He said that he was walking in the procession of the unemployed at the State House. His employer told him he might continue to walk with the unemployed if he was that sort of man, they had no further work for him.

No report on the petitions for a new state normal school can be expected till next week. The education committee is very busy, and will have no time for an executive session. The Harvard Annex controversy will be settled out of court. A crowded hearing was given on Wednesday, with many remonstrants present, but the petitioners made their case so strong that the remonstrants agreed to stop their opposition if it were agreed that no degrees should be issued by Radcliffe College which were not approved by Harvard University. No one objected to this, and so the whole affair will be smoothly settled.

The committees are rushing business at a rapid rate, and the State House is crowded with people. Afternoon hearings have reached as high a number as ten, but it looks as if the proposed reform was not a reform, because the branches adjourn at half-past three and lose the rest of the day for debate. But the arrangement ends this week.

The Senate is for biennials, 25 to 12. Six Republicans were among the 12, and one Democrat among the 25.

Boston's rapid transit scheme is fairly launched before the Legislature, with the cordial support of Mayor Matthews and the city hall forces. Last year's subway plan of $2,000,000 cost is already outgrown, and one of $5,000,000 is pending. It contemplates nearly 10,000 feet of subway, instead of nearly 4000, as last year's bill did. It extends the line north to the new union station on Causeway street, intead of stopping at Scollay Square, and it carries the south end to Pleasant street, instead of stopping just below the Common. It also takes in a Boylston street wing, with all the Cambridge, western and southwestern travel. With it goes a plan for an elevated road to join it at the ends, so as to extend to Franklin Park on the south and to Charlestown on the north. Opposition will of course come from many quarters, but the demand for rapid transit is pressing. Some people think Boston ought to spread out, instead of trying to center all its business in a few acres. LANDON.

CARD.—To the members of the Ladies' Social Union of St. Paul's church I would return sincere thanks for their recent handsome gift.

EMINENT MEN, THESE.

Some of the Most Notable Authors of the Country Writing for the Boston Journal.

When such notable men as Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Cardinal Gibbons, Maj. Gen. Howard, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, George Kennon, Chauncy M. Depew and Hon. Theodore Roosevelt contribute to a newspaper it shows that the publishers regard the best as none too good for the readers of that paper. All these men, with other noted authors, are now writing articles of value and interest for the Boston Sunday Journal. The Journal, by the way, has made great bounds of late on account of its live news and entertaining special articles.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., March, 1894.

It may as well be understood we are after the book trade far and near, and our title to it is that we do it well.

Portfolio of World's Fair Views in ten parts, 48 cents; first part 3 cents a copy, succeeding parts 5 cents a copy.

no papers to buy
no coupons to clip
no obligations at all

You simply call at our book counter, pay your money, and take away the portfolios one at a time. The first part is ready now; sixteen full-page photographic views, with description; 3 cents a copy, 5 cents by mail.

Do you think we don't do other business as well as books?

A high-grade bicycle for $69; as good a wheel as there is probably; made at Colt's amory in Hartford; "Tourist"—that's the name.

Everybody knows what the "Tourist" is; sold for $150 last year. There has been some sort of a smash-up, and the Syndicate Trading Co., of which we are a member, has bought the entire stock.

Our share of the lot is now ready. Wish it was large enough to last a month. What a noise we could make!

Sale of Oriental Rugs and Carpets for two weeks (and maybe three) beginning March 1st.

The Syndicate Trading Co's. collection for 1894 will be here at that time. It comprises most unique and rare pieces. People who are no amateurs in Eastern luxuriance are going to be astonished at our prices for these rugs; they are indeed.

The sale will be private. Send for booklet about it.

Thoroughly Sooted.

The woman who has once tried Pearline is suited. It suits millions of women who are using it; and millions more are following suit. It washes easily, to save your clothes and your strength; it cleans thoroughly, to save your time and your temper. Do you know that with Pearline there is little or no rubbing? It is the rub, rub, rubbing that wears out your clothes and wears off your paint. You will like Pearline, because it is sure; there is nothing like it, because it is safe.

Beware of imitations. 239 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Doctors Discouraged, Relief Found.

Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "I am as certain as I now live, that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease." If you are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetics, or any urinary trouble, you should use this only cure.

"I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors, but got no relief. Upon advice I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; a few bottles entirely cured me." 48

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

Don't Blame the World.

Don't blame the world because the thorns are found among the roses;
The day that breaks in storm may be all sunshine
when it closes.
We cannot hope to always meet with fortune's fond caressing,
And that which seems most hard to bear will bring with all its blessing.

The buried seed must rot in earth ere it produce the flower,
And the weak plant to fructify must have both
sun and shower.
So man, to gain development, must struggle with life's crosses,
And view with calm philosophy his trials and his losses.

A deadly, pois'nous weed may yield a salve of purest healing;
The sweetest bloom may pois'nous be, although its bane concealing.
Things are not always what they seem, but still
'twas heaven designed them,
And we should class them all as good, and take them as we find them.

Little we know of this brief life, and nothing of its sequel;
Then let us take in humble trust all that may seem unequal.
God's ways are not our ways, and He certainly should be trusted.
All that is wrong in His good time will surely be adjusted.

CHECKMATED.

Dudley Smith, of Mangrove House, Sydney, was a young and handsome fellow with plenty of money. One day he sat in his library and pondered as he had often pondered before—and on the same subject—viz, how to get a wife. There were enough young ladies who would bless their lucky stars for the privilege of becoming mistress of his luxurious establishment; but he also felt assured that the home was all they cared for. For the fortune they would wed its owner.

"Hang the money!" he exclaimed, "I wish I'd never had a penny, and then—but, bother it, then I should have been too poor to marry at all. Why couldn't I have just money enough to satisfy my wants, and nothin' more? By Jove! a fine idea! I'll foil them—the mean adventuresses!"

A furious peal at the bell-rope brought the housekeeper to the door in a hurry.

"Pack up your traps, Mrs. Bull," he exclaimed abrubtly, "for I am going to close the house for the present. Meanwhile, your wages can still go on, and those of such domestics as you consider indispensable.

A week later saw Mr. Smith safely domiciled in a quiet, second-rate lodging in Surrey hills, and shortly afterwards he began to sell his diamond rings, pins, seals and other paraphernalia of fashionable life. His grand clothes soon began to appear seedy and threadbare, and those he replaced by cloth of a rougher cut and plainer hue.

A rumor soon got afloat that his property and money had been lost through unlucky speculations, and, as a natural consequence, he lost friends rapidly. By twos and threes they ceased to know him as he often met them in the street. Fashionable dandies, who hitherto were delighted to stop and shake hands with him, turned aside now as he often met them "doing the block," or saw them riding by. Our hero only laughed and snapped his fingers at them behind their backs, though had his adversity been real he would not have felt inclined to laugh. Then came the time when all of his former friends, who had smoked his cigars, drank his wine, and borrowed his cash, only two still clung to him in his adversity. It is no wonder that he grew misanthropic.

One day he met a carriage containing some of his former friends who had been absent from town since he closed his house. He thought they would not notice him, but each inmate of the carriage bowed politely as of old.

"They have not heard the news," he muttered cynically. He was mistaken. That night the owner of the carriage called to see him.

"Rather close quarters, my friend," he said, as he took a calm survey of Dudley's not very pretentious surroundings.

"Pretty close, indeed," answered Dudley, with an icy smile; "but since I lost my property, of which I suppose you have heard, I have become quite economical."

"But I have heard, my dear fellow," cried his auditor, "and that is why I came. I knew you needed friends now, if ever; and the fact is—my daughter, Rose—that is, sir, I mean I came to offer you the position of head clerk in my business establishment. Will you accept it, Mr. Smith?"

"Ahem! well, I will think of it. But it is a long way from my boarding-house.

"Hang your lodging-house! You can live in my family as a—well, as a short of guest, you, know."

Dudley Smith looked keenly at his visitor.

"Sir, you are one man out of ten thousand," said he slowly.

"Tut, Mr. Smith; sympathy is a strong feeling, and I feel deeply for your unfortunate case, believe me,"

Again Dudley looked at him.

Mr. Baitman was a wealthy man—very wealthy he was called—and of course Mr. Smith thanked him, and accepted the offer. Once cosily settled in the Baitman mansion, it was not long before he began to wonder why he had not noticed Rosa Baitman before. She did not seem to feel above him, notwithstanding the wide difference in their positions; and she treated him as cordially—more cordially, he thought—than heretofore, before the change in his fortune. He would not have been human had not he learned to love her.

The climax came when she gave a grand party. Then before the clite of the whole city she did not hesitate to receive attentions from him on which but one construction could be placed. One cannot wonder he thought her a heroine, and asked no further proof that she could love him. Next day they met in her father's library, where he waited to see her.

"Rosa," he said, as soon as the usual courtesies had been exchanged. "I come to you this morning to learn my fate. I know the difference in our positions and would not urge you—only let your heart decide. My heart I lay before you."

She blushed prettily, but seemed quite composed; then she gave him her hand.

"I have loved you so long," she said, "and I feared you would never love me. You were so suspicious before you lost your wealth that all women were adventuresses; I was heartily glad when papa said you had lost it, and I—"

"You sent him to negotiate with me!" cried Dudley finishing the sentence intuitively, and giving it labial emphasis.

"I loved you so," she murmured deprecatingly.

"I do not doubt it, dearest," and Mr. Dudley Smith believed himself the happiest of men.

They were married. The wedding was very unpretentious, as became a bridegroom in straightened circumstances; and he was in constant ecstasy as he thought of her surprise when he should tell her that his fortune still remained.

He sent for Mrs. Bull to return and reopen the house, and put it in full condition to receive its mistress. Meantime they still remained at her father's residence.

"Dudley," said his wife, one day. "I have a favor to ask of you—will you grant it?"

"I will, if it be in my power so to do, darling," he exclaimed.

"Well, poor papa is rather short of money—won't you lend him a few thousand?"

"Me! why you know—"

"Oh! I know what you have been pretending," was the quick reply, "but then, you see, dear, it wasn't so—you never lost your money."

Dudley Smith leaped from his chair as though he had been shot.

"How did you find that out?" he gasped.

"I knew it all the time. When I heard that you were penniless, papa went directly to your brother, and learned the contrary. I think we managed the game very shrewdly, my dear husband."

"I think you did, rather," answered the dear husband, glaring upon his better half; "you have checkmated me with a vengeance; but do not flatter yourself, madam, that I'll endure it."

"How can you help yourself, dearest. Will you take a trip to Fiji Islands? or to England, or will you apply for a divorce?"

"No, I will do nothing of the kind.'

"Then what will you do?"

"Answer me one question, Rosa? Do you really love me?"

"Yes, I really do, Dudley.'

"Well, if you love me, we will drop the subject."

"I think we had better," said she quietly. We think so too.

Physician—"John just loosen up those scales a bit; I expect that patient whom I promised an increase in weight of 50 pounds."

John—"Yes, sir."

Physician—"And, John, after he has gone tighthen them up again. That fat man who wants to lose some of his flesh may be in some time during the afternoon."—Boston Transcript.

STARTED THE BEAR FIGHT.

"I started an ugly fight between two grizzly bears once, much to my surprise," said Amos Culver of Blackfoot, Wy. "I was out after elk and discovered the two bears a long way off, digging in rotten timber for grubs. I dismounted from my pony, and, making a wide detour, came up behind the bears and got within easy range without being winded or discovered by them. I took good aim at one of the grizzlies and fired. The bullet tumbled him, but he was on his feet again in an instant. The other bear had stopped its grubbing when this one fell, and looked at him in surprise. The wounded bear glared at the other for a moment, and then apparently made up its mind that his companion had knocked him down, for he pitched into that bear with a fierceness that was terrible to see. Instantly a furious battle was on. The bears clinched and bit and raked one another with their claws, and their savage cries could easily have been heard a quarter of a mile away. In a very short time their tough hides were hanging in strips on their huge bodies, and the bears were drenched with blood. I never saw, nor expect to see, such a fearful sight. The grizzlies fought for at least ten minutes, and then the one I had wounded failed to get up after being hurled to the ground by his antagonist, and the latter stood over its prostrate foe and tore him with its claws until it had disemboweled the conquered bear.

"Then the victor, growling and gnashing its teeth, moved away a few steps, staggered like a drunken man, and fell to the ground. It tried to get up but could not. I crept cautiously to the spot, fearing that the bear might still have enough vitality to make it lively for me when it discovered me, but my caution was not called for. The grizzly was as dead as its late antagonist. The two bears were the most prodigious specimens of their kind I had ever seen, but they were both literally torn to pieces. There was not a whole piece of skin or flesh on either of them as big as my hat. That they were able to inflict such terrible punishment on each other was not so amazing to me after I had examined the weapons they used. Their claws were five inches long and as sharp as pitchfork tines, and their teeth were nearly four inches long. I believe that I estimated their combined weight at an outside figure, and that was 3000 pounds."—New York Sun.

FOR HER SAKE.—"Clarice," he said in a voice that was full of emotion, "I lay my fortune at your feet. And," he muttered as an afterthought, "it is no slouch of a fortune either."

"The fortune is all right, but you are very young. It will be many years before I am a widow."

"Clarice," and his emotion almost choked him," that shall be no obstacle. For your sake I will do anything"

"How can you overcome the difficulty?"

"I will (more emotion) I will smoke cigarettes."—Washington Star.

Naming a horse is sometimes fully as difficult as naming a baby, although the groom of a well-known New-Yorker did not find it so the other day. Mr. Johnson had a valuable horse which he had called Ajax, and only recently was able to buy an excellent mate for it. What to call it was the problem, and in his anxiety to discover just the right name several days went by. At last he went to the stable one day and discovered that his groom had solved the difficulty for him. The word "Ajax" was painted over the stall of the older horse, and over that of the new-comer appeared, in large chalk letters, "Bjax."—Harper's Magazine.

The Food that Feeds Most is Wheat Germ.

You have perhaps noticed that you can do more work on a Wheat Germ breakfast than on any other. That's because Wheat Germ is mainly gluten and gluten is one of the most sustaining and satisfying articles of food.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR FOULDS' WHEAT GERM MEAL, THE PEERLESS BREAKFAST FOOD.

Offering you a preparation containing the highest order of ingredients, free from all opiates, harmless even to a baby, and a request to return the empty bottles and get the amount paid for the full ones if no cure is effected, is our way of gaining your confidence. If there were any better ingredients we would use them. We cure our patients or get no pay.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Gems of Verse.

However strong and skilled art thou, my foe,
However fierce is thy relentless hate;
Though firm thy hand, and sure thy aim, and straight
Thy poisoned arrows leave the bended bow
To pierce the target of my heart,—ah! know
I am the master yet of my own fate.
Thou canst not rob me of my chief estate,
Though fortune, fame, and friends, yea, love shall go.
Not to the dust shall my true self be hurled,
Nor shall I meet thy worst assaults dismayed.
When all things in the balance are well weighed
There is but one great danger in the world.
Thou canst not force my soul to wish thee ill—
There only lies the evil that can kill.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in Harper's Weekly.

ONE STITCH.

One stitch dropped as the weaver drove
His nimble shuttle to and fro,
In and out, beneath, above,
Till the pattern seems to bud and grow
As if the fairies had helping been.
And the one stitch dropping pulled the next stitch out,
And a weak place in the fabric stout,
And the perfect pattern was marred for aye
By the one small stitch that was dropped that day.
—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

WHO KNOWS?

When earthly life goes out with flickering breath,
We note the vital change and call it Death—
Death to the world, from which at once it goes
To Death or Life? Which is it—and who knows?
—Clark W. Bryan in Godey's.

HIS START IN LIFE.

I was talking the other day with a well-known New York manufacturer about boys and their characteristics, when he told me a story which I think well worth repeating. First, let me say that he employes about five hundred hands, among whom there are many boys and young men, and that most of his office-employes, his travelers and salesmen, are promoted from his workshops. The way in which he discovers their talents is curious and significant. Napoleon used to put great faith in any man with a long nose; but this man judges men very differently. He suddenly calls out a boy, for instance, and gives him a verbal message to deliver. If he delivers it correctly, he takes note of that boy, and employs him again in a similar manner. If the boy makes no mistake in the second and third message, he becomes convinced that he is capable of better things than mechanical work, and advances him accordingly.

"There is no better test of a boy's capacity," he says, "than the manner in which he carries a verbal message. Few boys can do this satisfactorily; most of them blunder in some way. Just try one of them, and you will be convinced of this truth. Generally, they get some word wrong, which ruins the whole business; or they deliver the whole message rudely or insultingly, and thus cause trouble. Yesterday I despatched a boy for a book which I had left on the desk of one of my foremen, and he went up to him and blurted out:—

"'Mr. Worthy wants his book; have you got it in your desk?'

"Sometimes, before sending a boy with a message, I make him repeat it, to see whether he has it straight or not; but this takes too much time, and a boy with whom this must be done is not to be trusted. Of course I never do this when I send one on a test-message."

This gentleman, whom I shall call Mr. Worthy, tells me that the first thing he does, in observing a boy's character, is to see that he does do what is given him to do; then to observe the manner in which he does it; then to see if he keeps on doing it in the same manner; and if his work is correctly done or done in a superior manner, he concluded the boy has more than common talent, and marks him out for promotion.

Charley McGregor was a boy of this character, and he determined to promote him. At first he put him into the office to take note of the incoming and outgoing goods, to carry messages and to answer the inquiries of strangers. Here he acted so discreetly that he speedily rose in the esteem of his employer, and was soon employed on more important business. The boy was at this time about fourteen years old; he had had but little or no schooling, having lost his father when quite young, and was obliged to work from his earliest years. He seemed anxious, however, to get on, and this was one of the traits that pleased his employer. Whatever was given him to do he endeavored to do well, and Mr. Worthy came to place great confidence in him.

One day Mr. Worthy saw that one of his travelers, Mr. Cigaretto, who was about to take passage for Cuba on a Spanish steamer, had left an important package behind which he had forgotten in the excitement of leave-taking, and which Mr. Worthy considered absolutely necessary to insure the successful issue of his voyage. Picking up the package, he called up the boy, McGregor, and said to him:—

"Charley, do you know where Hanover square in New York is?"

"Yes, sir—I think I do. It is just west of Pearl street, near the Battery."

"Good! You saw Mr. Cigaretto here yesterday? You know him, don't you?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Well, he is going to Cuba on very important business, and he has forgotten this package, which he must have with him. The vessel starts from Pier 10, East River, which is near Old Slip, at Hanover square. Now the elevated train stops at Hanover square, from which it is but a few steps to Pier 10."

"Yes, I know it. I carried a message to Captain Barras, of the Spanish steamer Hidalgo, once."

"Good! It is now twenty minutes to eleven. Could you get there by 12 o'clock?"

"I think so. I will try."

"Oh, but you must—you must be sure! If you succeed in delivering this package to Mr. Cigaretto, who sails on this steamer at twelve o'clock, it will be the making of you. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir. I will do my best."

"Then be off with you! Here's money Take a cab or any conveyance you think most speedy; but get there somehow. Do you hear?"

"I shall try, sir," said Charley, putting on his hat and coat, picking up the package and making for the door.

This was on Jersey City Heights, three miles away from Hoboken Ferry. Seeing a car half a block off, Charley caught up to it, got on, and soon reached the station from which the elevated train runs down to the ferry. Rushing past the ferry-master at the ferry-house he got into the waiting room just as the door on the Barclay street side was closing. He shouted to the man to let him through; he promised that he would make it worth his while; but all in vain. The man never turned to look at him.

The Christopher street boat was in, and about to start. But this boat, going rather upward than downward, would carry him away from the Spanish pier. A moment's reflection, however, showed him that he would be safer to take that boat and get on the Ninth avenue elevated road than to wait for the next Barclay street boat, which would be ten minutes later. That road would take him down to the Battery, from which point he could easily get around to the Spanish pier. So he stepped on board of the Christopher street boat.

When the ferryboat touched land in New York, he clapped a small coin in the hand of the gate-keeper, who allowed him to pass and jump on shore a minute or so before the other passengers. Now he flew up to Ninth avenue, where he ran up the stairs at the elevated station and got his ticket. The train was not in sight. He would have to wait two minutes. How terribly long those two minutes seemed! He thought the train would never come. At last she hove in sight, and soon came booming along. He got on the train, and in a twinkling she was moving forward again.

Now he felt safe. He was sure he would arrive in time. But, as ill-luck would have it, a fire had broken out on the way, near Houston street, and the train was stopped, along with two or three others ahead of it. What was to be done? Should he get out and hire a cab, or wait a little to see if the train would move on? He did neither. He knew well enough a cab would never take him there as soon as an elevated train; so he determined to make for the train in Third avenue.

But the fi in he was in was not at a station. How was he to get off? Never was anything more unfortunate. He was simply caged up in the air, with keepers and barred gates at each end of his cage. In a few moments, however, the train began to move backward, and never stopped till it came to a station, where the passengers were allowed to get off. Up Houston street flew Charley McGregor; he caught up to a street car, which he boarded, and on which he soon reached the Third Avenue road. When he got into an elevated train in this avenue he looked at his watch. Twenty minutes to twelve!

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed, "I am done for! I shall hardly be able to reach the vessel in time!"

Along rattles the train at good speed. Station after station is reached and passed; no interruptions this time; and at last the conductor calls out:

"Hanover square!"

Out flies Charlie; down the steps and into the street. Unhappily a great, fat fellow, with a companion of almost equal size, stands right in its way. Charley, not having time for ceremony, pushes rudely past them, and flies onward like one possessed. The fat man is provoked. He thinks, or pretends to think, that the rude stranger is a runaway, and he shouts at the top of his voice:

"Stop thief!"

Charley heard the cry, but he pressed on without heeding it. Fortunately, there were not many others to hear it, or it might have put a stop to his precipitate career. So he strode on as if he were the leader in a walking-match, and never stopped till he reached the East River. He dared not look behind, but kept right on, and in a few seconds more he was at the Spanish pier, over which was a long, closed shed with the words painted over the entrance:—

Campania Transatlantica Espanola.

Here everything seemed quiet; there was no uncommon bustle; the hurry was apparently over, and there appeared to reign that quiet which usually precedes an important event. One solitary cab came swiftly along and passed in at the gate, near which stood a police officer. Charley was now sorry he had not hired a cab, for he thought he would then have passed in unquestioned.

He rushed on, but was stopped by the officer.

"Where are you going?"

"Let me pass! I am from Mr. Worthy with a package for Mr. Cigaretto. It is very important. Let me pass!"

"Where is your pass? I do not know you."

Charley had no pass, but cleverly eluded the officer and got through the gates.

The next minute, Charley saw the occupant of the cab—a young gentleman with a traveling-bag—spring from the cab and get on the gangway. That was the last passenger that got on board. The vessel, it seems, was waiting only for him in order to set sail, or, rather, to put on steam. In a moment more the gangway was swung off, and the ship was on the very point of moving. Charley thought all was over.

Lifting the package high in the air, and addressing the officer at the gangway just closed, he shouted:

"Hold on! This is life or death! Here is a package that must be delivered!"

"Too late—too late, my man!" cried a police officer on the wharf. "The Spaniard will not wait for the president!"

"But I must deliver this package! Here, sir officer—you, there!" he cried to the officer at the gangway. "This is for Mr. Cigaretto—he is on board—try and catch it for him, will you!"

"Cigaretto? There he is looking at you. Just fling it to himself!"

Sure enough, there was Mr. Cigaretto, among a number of other passengers, near the gangway, looking at the crowd on shore; and as soon as he saw Charley with his package, he became suddenly aware of his loss, or of his forgotten treasure, and understood at once what the whole thing meant. Getting up on some boxes on the deck, he stood out above the others; and shouted to Charley while the ship was fast moving out of reach:

"That's all right! Throw it to me, my man! I can catch it!"

Charley flung the package right into his arms.

"Thank you, my brave fellow, thank you! I shall not forget you! Good-bye!"

The great vessel was now under way, and Charley stood looking at her until she was quite out of sight. He began thinking it a fine thing to be able to go off to sea in such a vessel, to see foreign countries, and to learn something of this wonderful world of ours. He stood musing here in this way for some time, until he suddenly became conscious that he was forgetting his employer, who was anxiously awaiting his return.

He was glad, however, at having accomplished his mission; he was relieved; he felt somewhat proud of what he had done; and so he leisurely wended his way homeward, thinking of the incidents, or accidents, of the day, and of how luckly he was to overcome them.

When he reached the office, Mr. Worthy rushed up to him.

"Did you arrive in time? Did you see him and did you give him the package?"

"Yes, I arrived in time; I saw him; and I gave him the package; but I never got on board the vessel."

"You didn't? Where was he? Was he not on board?"

"Yes, but I wasn't. Just give me a moment, Mr. Worthy, and I'll tell you all about it."

So he told him; and when he got through Mr. Worthy walked up to him, shook him by the hand, and said in the kindliest manner:

"You are a clever fellow, Charley. You did well—you have done this thing admirably, and I shall show you how to do better still."

Next morning Mr. Worthy called Charley into his private office, and said to him, in a quiet way:

"Would you care to study, Charley? Would you like to learn all about mercantile affairs? If you could keep books and write letters, I think I could make good use of you."

"Why, Mr. Worthy," said Charley, "that is the dream of my life! But I can't afford the time or the money to learn these things."

"Well, I shall attend to that. You shall leave here every day at 4 o'clock, and go to Professor Blank, in Hudson street, who will teach you all you require."

Six months after this conversation Charley became shipping clerk in the New York office; the next year he became corresponding clerk; then bookkeeper and cashier; then, in another year, he was promoted to the Chicago branch of the business; and here, after a few months, his employer thought he would try him as a salesman in the place of one who was absent. Never was any man more agreeably surprised than Mr. Worthy. He found his protege succeeded admirably as a salesman; he seemed born to please people, to win their good graces, and to sell them goods; and in this employment he has now been permanently engaged for some years. He sometimes sells ten or fifteen thousand dollars' worth on a single trip.

To end my story, which is literally true, let me say that Charley McGregor, the illiterate factory-boy, has now at least ten thousand dollars a year, an elegant little house and home of his own, and the nicest little wife and baby boy that ever you saw.—Robert Waters, in New York Ledger.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

EASTER GIFTS.

Christmas and St. Valentine's Day are gone, but there are still a few friends whom we have not remembered, and the Easter season presents another opportunity of which we may avail ourselves to show by some simple gift that we bear sweet thoughts of them in our hearts. And there are the children, whom it is a happiness to make happy; and how little it takes to give them pleasure!

EASTER EGGS.—For sugar eggs you may use maple sugar, granulated sugar, or molasses and sugar, and you may be sure if you present one to a little friend it will be received with delight. For a mold, blow an egg and use the shell. To blow an egg, break a tiny hole at the large end with a sharp fork-tine or knife point, cutting through the inner skin; make a larger hole at the small end and blow out the meat of the egg by pressing the lips against the small hole and blowing gently. This breaks the yolk but does not injure an egg that is to be beaten, so you may provide yourself with as many egg shells as you like for Easter at no expense, if you begin early enough to save them.

To make a maple sugar egg, cut the sugar fine, add a little hot water, then boil till the liquid will break when dropped upon snow or into cold water. Care should be taken not to burn the sugar. When the hot syrup responds to the test the water you have put in has evaporated, and when cold will become sugar again; let the syrup cool a little, then pour it into the egg-shell mold. You should first paste cloth over the smaller opening and wrap up the shell and have it firmly fixed where it will not fall over. If you have any difficulty about pouring the liquid through the opening use a small tin funnel or a funnel made by a roll of white writing paper. Set the shell away for the sugar to harden. It will take a number of hours to become cold. Then break off the shell and you have a sugar egg. If you like, you can put a loop of ribbon into the hot syrup through the opening of the egg-shell. For a white translucent egg, use three parts granulated sugar and one part water, boil about half an hour; test by dropping a spoonful into cold water; when it has boiled enough it will become brittle as soon as it is thoroughly cold. The syrup must boil gently but not be stirred. If it is stirred it will become grainy and crumble. Mold according to the directions for a maple sugar egg.

Here are recipes for butter-scotch that make a clear solid egg.

No. 1. One cupful of sugar, one cupful cooking molasses, half a cupful cold butter. Boil over a slow fire until the mixture hardens when dropped into cold water.

No. 2. Three cupfuls of granulated sugar, half a cupful of water, half a cupful of vinegar, one tablespoonful of butter and eight drops of extract of lemon. Boil without stirring till the syrup will snap and break when dropped into cold water. These recipes will make several eggs each.

The eggs may be decorated with baby ribbon or lettered in gilt, or be painted with water color paints, or, better still, with confectioner's coloring, which will not harm a child if eaten. Cranberry juice may also be used as a paint to decorate a white sugar egg.

COLORED EGGS.—Some people boil eggs in prepared Diamond Dyes to color them. These are, of course, more expensive than Easter eggs made of emptied shells, but they are much more simply made; great care needs to be taken not to crack the shell, otherwise, they are very easily prepared. Very handsome Easter eggs may be made by filling the shell of a blown egg with Indian meal or sawdust; before putting in the meal glue a bit of paper over one hole; when filled cover the other hole in the same manner. You may draw baby ribbon through the egg, if you like. I usually thread a very long darning needle with strong thread and draw that through the egg, piercing the paper ends but not the shell and attach the ribbon to the thread close to the shell. The ribbon appears to be drawn through the egg, and this method is simpler than to draw ribbon itself through. Having the ends well sealed, you may gild the egg or paint it and decorate it with an Easter text or motto; or you may paint flowers or other figures or letters on the natural shell without previously painting. Egg shells are very beautiful creations, and you cannot improve upon the beautiful natural ivory and coffee tints. I myself think the natural shell lettered with gilt or painted with violets or willow catkins, or some other small spring flower, is more beautiful than a colored shell. The paper that is glued on the ends must of course be concealed, but if you glue neatly and attach the ribbon the paper will not show. Or, if it does you may gild the two ends of the shell around evenly. The gilt contrasts with the natural color of the shell and brings out its beauty.

You may make your Easter eggs of the shells without filling, and draw ribbons through them, some to hang from the large end, some to hang up sidewise from both ends. These will not last long, but it is less work than to fill them, and they give pleasure for a time. Egg shells either filled or empty may be covered with tissue paper in a great many styles, or an egg may form the center of a tissue paper hydrangea or chrisanthemum, but I think I described last year how such eggs are trimmed.

EASTER CARDS.—You may paint and letter cards of cardboard, water color paper, or celluloid; photographers have many pretty cards that are lovely for Easter cards. I have seen no especial novelty this year, except a card representing a watch face. This is very unique. There is the dial like that of a real watch; with an Easter text upon the face and outside the dial the legend "A Watch for Every Day in the Week." But the interesting part is the second-hand dial. This circle has been cut out, and through the opening you see the word "Monday," and a text; turn now the cardboard back of the watch and here is "Tuesday," and a text, till you have turned to every day of the week and found "Easter Sunday." The watches of this description which I have seen were printed, but much prettier ones may be made by hand. This is how it can be done. Have a watch face stamped, as for embroidery, upon celluloid. Paint the circles and figures with gilt; when the gilding is dry cut out the face of the watch, with a stem like a watch stem over XII. Cut out the circle of the second-hand dial. Make hands of celluloid gilded or paint hands on the face. Make a small hole in the center of the watch dial; use a punch to cut this if you have one. Cut a circular piece of white cardboard or water color paper rather larger than the dial, and pink it around the edge. If you have a pinking die use that; if not, you may cut the paper roughly with a knife, but it is rather difficult to cut in that way around a circle. You might mark with a scolloped plate and then cut, that would look well. Now have some nail-heads like those used to fasten the cheap celluloid frames you see for sale everywhere. These may be bought at a book store. Touch the edge of the pink cardboard around with gilt. Draw small circles on it to correspond with the second-hand dial you have cut from your celluloid watch face. You can do this easily by fastening the cardboard circle and the dial together with the nail-head, and marking around the edge of the second-hand dial. Then turn the card and mark another circle and so on till you have circles all around. Now take the celluloid watch face and the cardboard circle apart and paint a motto or text, or anything you fancy, in each tiny circle. A chicken in one, a pansy face in another, a butterfly in another, etc., etc., would be rather nice. You may make the card serious or funny. As a rule, however, it is in better taste to have your fun out on St. Valentine's Day and to be serious at Easter; serious, but bright and happy as becomes the season. If you cannot get a watch face stamped in your town, you may have the watch face of water color paper and may draw a face upon it and gild over the drawing, or you may send to Foss Brothers, 120 Tremont street, Boston, and get the stamping pattern of a small clock face. It will cost fifteen cents, but you can stamp any number of dials from it. Perhaps the people who do stamping will order a pattern. Instead of a watch face, a pretty design would be a clock face painted on an oblong of celluloid or paper and set up as an easel.

It has seemed to be the liking this year to make for Christmas cards and valentines, not merely fancy cards, but articles that will be useful. For instance, many valentines were celluloid hearts serving as covers to chamois leaves for pen wipers or to leaves of blotting paper for blotters, or to leaves of flannel for needle books. It is a pretty idea and no doubt originated from the feeling this year, that nothing must be wasted. This idea may also be carried out in Easter gifts. All the tissue paper trifles, photo frames and other articles that were made for Christmas may be duplicated for Easter with mottoes and other ornamentations appropriate to the season, "Easter offering," "Easter Greetings," "Easter Wishes" are seen, and Scripture texts, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," "Lo! I am with you alway," "He is Risen," etc.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 9, 1894.

PALMER NEWS.

Miss Clara Plumley of Marlboro is visiting her cousin, Mrs. J. A. Rogers.

Miss Bertha Campbell of Ware is visiting A. S. Campbell on South Main street.

Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Gamwell are spending a few days with friends in Stonington, Ct.

A. E. Park of Brattleboro, formerly of Palmer, was in town the first of the week.

The lecture by Col. Russell H. Conwell, announced for next Tuesday, has been postponed.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club will meet next Monday afternoon with Mrs. J. C. Wing.

T. J. Chalk has started a milk route, and proposes to furnish the best of milk from grain-fed cows.

The Eaton Club will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Universalist church next Monday evening.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is preparing to celebrate the birthday of Neal Dow the 20th.

Horace Bosque of Three Rivers is employed as teamster for C. D. Holbrook, succeeding J. Stever Knox.

Pussy-willows have been picked this week which were as far advanced as they are usually a month later.

Mrs. George Wright of Worcester, formerly of Palmer, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. Lawrence Wednesday.

B. P. Morse left Tuesday night for Denver, Col., where he has brothers, and where he expects to go into business.

N. W. Chandler is to leave the Palmer National Bank and study law in the office of District Attorney Gardner.

The weather bulletins from the weather bureau are now posted in the post office about 9 o'clock every morning.

Mrs. L. M. Burleigh and Mrs. L. M. Shaw expect to leave for Washington, D. C., next week, to be gone a month or more.

Miss Ola Northrop entertained the members of the high school class of '96 at her home on Central street last evening.

The annual meeting of the Palmer Cemetery Association will be held next Monday evening with Mrs. L. M. Burleigh at 7.30.

A. T. Wing has a pair of young carrier pigeons, and proposes to raise a number of the birds for pleasure and business purposes.

Joseph Kerigan, Jr., and A. G. Newton have been drawn as jurors for the March civil term of the superior court at Springfield.

Dr. H. H. Eayrs, who has been with Dr. C. W. Cross at his dental rooms for the past year, has left, and is succeeded by Dr. O. P. Roller of Philadelphia.

Andrew Holt has at his farm an 18-months-old chestnut filly belonging to a Springfield horseman which he says is the finest piece of horseflesh in the county.

Dr. W. H. Stowe received this morning a half dozen American hares, which he will set free on his land on Oak Knoll, hoping that they will breed there.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Taylor started yesterday for a visit of two or three weeks with friends in Tennessee. They will go from Boston to Norfolk, Va., by steamer.

The People's Party—what is it and who belongs to it? There are rumors that it will hold a caucus to-morrow evening, but no definite information regarding it can be had.

The meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle, which was to have been held this evening, was postponed until to-morrow evening on account of other matters which came on the same date.

Miss M. J. McMichael, of the Viavi Association, will give an illustrated free lecture to ladies only in the vestry of the Baptist church next Thursday afternoon at 2.30; subject, "Physical Life of Women."

The last chance to register for the election March 19th will be next Wednesday, when the registrars will be in session at the district court room in this village from 12 m. until 10 p. m., at which time registration will cease.

F. A. Royce has in his possession papers which are probably valuable or interesting to the heirs of Roland Stebbins. They were found in the corridor at the post office, and can be had at Mr. Royce's residence on Central street.

George L. Hall, a new man in the employ of the New London Northern railroad, fell from the top of a freight car in the Ware River road yard Tuesday morning and sustained a severe sprain of one ankle. Some the ligaments were torn, and it will be some time before he will be able to use the ankle.

The Young Men's Library Association held its annual meeting Monday evening and elected these officers: President, Dr. W. H. Stowe; vice president, L. H. Gager; secretary, W. W. Leach; treasurer, L. E. Chandler; librarian, O. P. Allen; directors, O. P. Allen, L. H. Gager, G. M. Atkins, C. B. Fiske.

Josiah Gates will sell his farm near Palmer Center, on the road to Ware, at auction Thursday. The farm consistsof 145 acres of good land, with house of ten rooms, and other buildings, a fine trout brook and water privilege. Stock, hay, tools, etc., will be sold to the purchaser of the farm on reasonable terms if desired.

The Ladies' Social Union of St. Paul's church will give an orange tea in the church parlors next Wednesday evening, Mrs. H. A. Northrop and Mrs. C. H. Keith entertaining. After the supper there will be an entertainment, consisting of a fan drill, which was given acceptably a few weeks ago, singing, and "The Family Album," which will be shown by Miss Newell of Springfield.

A locomotive was derailed in the New London Northern yard Tuesday morning, the accident being caused by the engineer looking to the rear of his train as he came in and not paying attention to where he was going. The locomotive struck a freight car, which was somewhat damaged, while the engine was thrown from the rails, but fortunately in a location which did not affect the running of trains.

Seldom is such fine weather as has been experienced during the past week found in the first ten days of March. The air has been warm and balmy, overcoats have been a burden, and bluebirds have made their appearance in many places and in large numbers. There is no likelihood that it will last, however, and the month may be expected to keep up its reputation for cold winds and blustering weather before the next twenty days are past.

At the district court last Saturday the following civil entries were made: A. A. Babbitt of Monson against Warren R. King and trustee of Monson; James Pendergast of Monson against Warren R. King and trustee of Monson; W. F. Fillmore, et al, of Palmer against W. G. Norton and trustee of Albany; Thomas Blanchard of Palmer against Elias Holmes of Palmer; William G. McCollough of Huntington, P. Q., against Charles Carr and trustee of Palmer.

The wheelmen met in Eager's block Tuesday evening and organized a bicycle club, with these officers: President, W. F. Waite; vice president, Fred Adams; secretary, F. D. Barton; treasurer, F. U. Wetmore. A committee consisting of B. Woodhead, Walter Tricket and F. D. Barton was appointed to draft a set of by-laws and report to the club at the next meeting. The rooms in the second story of Eager's block have been engaged as quarters for the club.

It is understood that an effort will be made this year to have all the business of the annual town meeting done on the first day. It is argued that other towns, larger than this, get through with the work in one day, and that there is no necessity for the voters of this town making two trips to the town house. This plan is not likely to prove acceptable to the voters, however, who like to discuss appropriations without the attendant confusion of the voting, and two days will probably be devoted to the business, as usual.

The pastor of the Congregational church will preach Sunday morning on "A Despised Virtue Exalted." In the evening he will give an illustrated lecture on "Saloon Work in Palmer." Several stereopticon slides illustrating local matters have been manufactured here, some have been secured from Revere, Mass., contrasting license and no-license there, and several fine sets on the influence of the saloon on the home will be shown. It will bring to eye and ear the facts of this important question. Everybody invited.

The work of clearing up the ruins of the opera house fire was begun Monday, and has been carried on throughout the week, the part which remained standing having been torn down and much of the debris carted away. Many of the old timbers have been burned in the cellar, where a fire has been kept going all the time. A young lady who passed the ruins late Tuesday evening saw the remains of the day's fire, and honestly remarked that no one would suppose the fire would keep so long, but that it was still smouldering away, as she had seen it.

A Demorest gold medal contest will be held in Palmer next Friday evening, with this programme: "Heroic Minorities," William Walsh, East Longmeadow; "A Glorious Monument," Persis Maude Bemis, North Wilbraham; "Our Homes and Country in Jeopardy," Charles M. Thayer, Hardwick; "The Enormity of the Liquor Traffic," Cora B. Spencer, Springfield; "A Vision of Prohibition," Edith L. Alden, Ludlow Center; "Pictures from Life," Maud M. Baker, North Wilbraham; remarks, Eugene N. Hill, president Hampden Demorest Society. The place will be announced later.

At St. Paul's Universalist church next Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Moulton will preach the third of the series of Lenten sermons, from the text, "The Light of the World." In the evening there will be a praise service. The subject will be "Whittier;" do not His Poems Prove Him a Universalist?" A short sketch of his early life, and the history and doctrine of the Quakers will be given, illustrated by his poems. Quotations from his poems will be read showing how he denounced the early creeds, and to show his belief in the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and the final triumph of good. The hymns sung will be taken from his poems. A cordial invitation is extended to the public.

At the meeting of the probate court Wednesday in Springfield administration was granted in the estates of—Laban Phetteplace, late of Wales, Willie A. Lyon administrator; James Lawton, late of Palmer, William Lawton administrator. Wills approved of—Maggie A. Moriarty, late of Palmer, Catherine E. Fay executrix; Marie Louise Griffith, late of Palmer, Mary Jane Fuller executrix; John Molloy, late of Palmer, Eliza Molloy executrix; Leonard Miller, late of Ludlow, Benjamin F. Burr administrator. Accounts rendered in the estates of—John C. Markham, late of Wilbraham; Philura A. Page, late of Palmer; Roswell W. Fosket, late of Brimfield. Lizzie A. Bates was appointed guardian of Eunice M. and Ruth I. Bates, minors, of Wilbraham.

The condition of Main street is not calculated to inspire visitors to the town with an exalted opinion of the place. It is made a dumping ground by the merchants and others for almost all kinds of refuse from the stores, and while during cold weather the snow has kindly covered many an unsightly accumulation of rubbish, the warm weather has brought them to light in all their ugliness. The business men along the street ought to take more pride in the looks of the thoroughfare, and each see that the part of it in front of his place of business is kept in good condition as far as cleanliness is concerned. There are a few which do this now, and it does not require much time or labor. The vacant lot belonging to the Boston and Albany road has never been cleared up since the fire of a few years ago, and unsightly heaps of ashes do not add beauty to its appearance.

The Democrats held their caucus at the town house last evening, and finished up the business in short order with very little excitement. T. W. Kenefick was chairman and Daniel Sullivan secretary. A committee was appointed to bring in a list of candidates, which was adopted. The list is: For selectmen, J. F. Twiss, H. P. Holden, G. W. Lyman; assessors, M. J. Dillon, John O. Hamilton, H. T. Bishop; tax collector, G. W. Lyman; town clerk and treasurer, F. D. Barton; school committee for three years, F. A. Ruggles, Dr. H. M. Auger; overseer of poor, Michael Griffin; constables, G. W. Studley, Michael Collins, James J. Griffin; Samuel Brown, H. A. Northrop; board of health, Dr. H. A. Smith, Dr. W. H. Stowe, Dr. W. H. Bliss; auditors, C. K. Gamwell, F. A. Royce; fence viewers, Samuel Brown, Dennis Mahoney, Dennis Fenton.

A reader asks us to print the following, from the Springfield Republican, under the head of Springfield news:

Rev. F. H. Knight, pastor of Grace Methodist church, gave last evening what he said would be his last talk on the subject of temperance, of which he has been a zealous advocate during his stay here. He said that he was beginning to lose faith in organized efforts, such as local option, prohibition, and temperance societies, and to believe that the salvation of the world when it comes, will be found to come from individual efforts in the line of regular church work. So long as you only touch the surface habit, reform will not be permanent. Intemperence, like stealing and adultery, has its root in the sinfulness of the human heart, and unless you can reform the whole heart the cure is only skin deep. Often when a temperance agitation is called for, what is really needed is an old-fashioned revival. There are to-day more Christians in Springfield than drinkers, and if each one would make it his duty to secure the whole conversion of some one soul, the millennium would not be long in coming.

The Republicans will caucus at the town house this evening, but what the result will be is uncertain, as very little is heard regarding possible nominations. It is quite probable, however, that the old board of selectmen will be renominated. They have worked harmoniously together, and given the town good service. There is talk of putting up a board which shall be composed of strictly no-license men, and for this Mr. Getchell of the present board, H. E. W. Clark of Thorndike and M. J. Dillon of Palmer are mentioned. Mr. Hamilton's term as overseer of the poor expires this year, and as there is one member of the board in Thorndike it is likely that R. L. Bond of Bondsville will be nominated as most accessible to the largest number requiring attention from the board. C. F. Smith declines to be a candidate for assessor again, but who will be put on in his place remains a conundrum. There should be one member of the board in the Depot village, and no better man can be found than W. H. Brainerd. The terms of Mr. Ruggles of Three Rivers and Dr. Auger of Bondsville as school committee expire this year, and the former will no doubt be renominated, though as no one knows when the latter will return to Bondsville it may be thought best to put up another man. The present collector of taxes, W. A. Weld, has served acceptably, and his name will probably be found on the ticket again this year.

Harmony, in the fullest extent of the word, does not exist in matters relating to the choir at the Congregational church. A chorus choir has furnished music for the past year, but it was determined to have a change with the end of the music year, the last Sunday in March, and other arrangements were made. The new order of things was discovered by a JOURNAL reporter, and announced, but as it turned out before the committee was fully satisfied that the matter had been definitely arranged. As the new order of things contemplated the retention of none of the present choir, and as they had had no notice of a change, they naturally felt that they should have been notified if their services were not wanted. Friends of both the old and the to be new regime took up the matter, and reports of sayings from both sides have been going the rounds. A few days ago Mrs. Huntley, the leader of the chorus choir, received word from A. L. Hills of the parish committee that the committee would take charge of the musical part of the programme for Sunday, March 26th. As this was Easter Sunday, and as the choir had already commenced rehearsing music for that day, she naturally asked for an explanation, and received in reply a letter which stated that the Old Homestead Quartet has been engaged for that day, with an allusion at the end of the letter to the "efforts of an amateur choir." This the choir naturally resented, and it was decided by them, after consultation with others, that they would not give way to the outsiders, and the engagement of the quartet has been canceled. It has been reported that Mrs. Huntley has been requested to resign, but this has no foundation in fact, and she will remain in charge of the music until the expiration of the term for which she was engaged.

To the Editor of the Journal:—In every community and in most churches there is an element "spoiling for a row," and while it is better to have such an element in the choir rather than the pulpit, it is not particularly desirable or necessary in any department of church work. The daily papers have made somewhat free use of matters relating to the music department of the Second Congregational church, and as correspondents are paid by the line they are excusable for making as much out of nothing as possible. The committee of the society are not overburdened with funds, and have done the best they could with the money at their command, and at no time has it been thought necessary to put up a sign, as was done at a concert in the mining regions, "Don't shoot, they are doing the best they can." It was thought best to make changes in the musical department, and while it was not thought really necessary to notify the parties having the direction of musical affairs before the committee themselves knew just what changes would be made, for the relief of those taking great interest in the matter we would state that the publication of the proposed changes in a local paper was not authorized by the committee, but the parties directly interested have been notified in a proper and "official" manner. The committee, with or without the aid of the daily papers, feel abundantly able to do that for which they were chosen, have no intention of resigning, and will be glad of financial aid. Yours truly,

A. L. HILLS, Secretary.

State Primary School Notes.

A concert of more than usual merit was given in the chapel last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Prentiss went to Hanover Saturday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Prentiss's mother.

A decided improvement has been made in the appearance of the office by the addition of a new coat of paint. The ceiling has changed its color to a cerulean, while the walls are of a light gray. The superintendent's and clerk's desks have changed places, and the telephone has been placed in the back part of the room.

Arthur Dupont, who for more than a year has been suffering from pulmonary phthisis, died at the hospital Sunday morning. Rev. F. E. Jenkins conducted the funeral services, which were held at 9 a. m. Tuesday. During the last few days of his illness he realized that the end would soon come, but his faith in God was sufficient for that trying hour, and several times he expressed his willingness of submission to the Divine summons. As long as his strength was sufficient, and only a short time before he expired, he would say "Thanks," and "Please," in recognition of a kindness, and it was always a pleasure to him to use these words. The floral offerings were very pretty. A handsome wreath from his associates at the hospital and several clusters of pinks and roses from the officers, were only slight evidences of the high esteem in which he was held.

THORNDIKE.

Miss Nellie Lynch is visiting friends in Ware.

T. Leary of Worcester is the guest of Michael O'Connor.

St. Mary's Temperance society will hold a special meeting next Sunday.

George Wilson, formerly a resident of this place, was in town on Saturday.

John W. Loftus has received this week his line of caskets and coffins, and is now ready for business.

Mr. and Mrs. James Flynn and Miss Kelly of Hartford were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Holden this week.

The registrars of voters will be at the Thorndike Company's office next Monday to register all who care to vote at the spring election.

James Clark wishes to contradict the statement which appeared in the last issue of the JOURNAL, and says that he has not rented his farm to anyone.

Master Maurice Breene rescued a dog belonging to Moses Lafaras from drowning on Sunday. The dog was crossing the No. 1 mill pond and broke through the ice, and was unable to get out.

The members of the New Secret Endowment order, which went under some time ago, have received notice recently that they would receive about 80 cents on the dollar of their claims, which is more than was at first thought would be paid.

The following persons will appear in the cast of the drama, "Between Two Fires:" Maurice Kelliher, Thomas Ronan, James Kerr, Maurice Roach, I. J. Gay, Patrick Fleury, Cornelius McAuliff, Jeremiah Sugrue, Lizzie O'Connor, Kate Murphy, Mary Fleming.

Election is drawing near, but in no recent year has there been so little interest shown by the voters of this place. Perhaps during the few remaining days there may be some hustling done. The no-license people are predicting a victory, while on the other hand the license people are sure of carrying the day.

The mills here will run only 30 hours per week until further notice, commencing Monday next. The merchants and business men in the village are not very jubilant over the news that the mills are to run again on short time, as they have done a credit business during the fall which they have never received pay for. What the present outcome will be they are not able to say.

BONDSVILLE.

Miss Maggie Nash has gone to Wilbraham to stay till after Easter.

Mrs. Ida Pasco leaves to-morrow for her home in Blanchville, Ct.

Albert Southwick of Boston has been visiting old friends here this week.

Miss Nellie Donovan was the guest of her sister in Ware a few days last week.

Miss Katie Thomas and Miss Nellie Keyes spent Sunday with friends in Worcester.

John O'Connor has been visiting his brother the last few weeks in New Haven, Ct.

Miss Hannah Connor of Three Rivers was the guest of her brother, Charles Connor, last week.

Miss Jessie Ryther and her cousin, Miss Newell of Springfield, are the guests of E. E. Ryther.

Miss Susan Twiss returned Friday night from Taunton, where she has been visiting friends.

The Junior Epworth League will have a conundrum supper next Wednesday night at the M. E. church.

The choir of St. Bartholomew's church is rehearsing a new mass, under the direction of Miss Delia E. Clifford.

George H. Smith and wife, who formerly lived here, now of Holyoke, are the guests of H. D. Shaw this week.

Last Sunday was communion at the M. E. church; two were received into full membership and two on probation.

Rev. Father Fitzgerald of Haydenville preached the Lenten sermon last Sunday at St. Bartholomew's church.

R. L. Bond, John Green and Albert Southwick went fishing Tuesday and caught 21 pickerel; one weighed two pounds and a half.

Misses Nellie and Josie O'Connell of Holyoke, and their cousin, James O'Connell of Berlin, Wis., were the guests of Miss Hattie Kennedy last week.

The many friends of Michael Shea will be pleased to learn that he is improving, so that he will be able to come home from the hospital before long.

W. O'Regan got quite a tumble Monday morning as he was going down the steps to work, receiving a shaking up, but sustaining no very serious injuries.

The funeral of Catherine, wife of Henry Bolton, was attended Sunday afternoon at her late home, a large number of friends and relatives being present. Besides a husband, who is sick, she leaves two sons, Edward and Elliott, who live in Holyoke, and one daughter, Mrs. Mary Joslyn, who lives at home.

The W. C. T. U. had a sociable Wednesday night in the church parlors. The stage was prettily draped with bunting, flags, potted plants and vines, and the entertainment was opened by four little girls, who sang a welcome song. This was followed by readings by Mrs. Knowlton and Mrs. Getchell, instrumental music by Mrs. Armstrong, singing by Mrs. J. B. Paige of Amherst and Miss Newell of Springfield. Cake, coffee and ice cream were served.

THREE RIVERS.

Fred Hillman has moved his family into Mrs. Powell's house.

Miss Nellie Cressie of Mansfield, Ct., is visiting at Emory Paine's.

Beginning next Monday morning the mill will run on half time, five hours per day.

Miss Louise White and Mr. Fred White are visiting in Worcester for a few days.

A. Brown and wife of North Amherst have been spending a few days with J. B. Brown.

F. L. Tarbox of Ware, who has been visiting J. W. Cheney, returned to his home today.

Mrs. Roche of Chicopee is at present doing missionary work among the French residents.

Mr. Squiers of Belchertown has been visiting his sister, Mrs. F. H. Hillman, the past week.

Miss Hutchins, from Great Falls, N. H., is at present stopping in the family of Rev. G. S. Butler.

A party of about twenty came over from North Wilbraham last Sunday to attend service here.

Miss Annie Crane was called to her home in Hanover Saturday by the death of her grandmother.

Rev. Mr. Weeks has just moved his family into Mr. Powers's new house opposite the Baptist church.

Horace Bosquet has moved his family to Palmer, where he has taken a position with C. D. Holbrook.

Leonard Aldrich, who has been at the Spencer poor farm the past year, has returned to take charge of the Jones place.

This evening at the Baptist church there will be one of their famous baked-bean suppers. A large party is assured and a good time is sure to be had.

The social at the Baptist vestry last evening was a very successful and enjoyable affair. Readings and recitations were given, games indulged in, and refreshments served.

Rev. G. S. Butler and wife have been spending a few days at Mr. Butler's home in New Hampshire. Mrs. Butler returned yesterday, but Mr. Butler will remain another week.

The first anniversary of the Y. P. S. C. E. at the Baptist church last evening was the occasion of a very pleasant entertainment. After the members and invited friends had listened to a musical and literary programme, they were served with ice cream and cake.

Quite a number of the neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Percy went to their house Wednesday evening and gave them a surprise party. The company spent a very pleasant evening with games, and after partaking of refreshments which they had carried, dispersed.

Rev. Edward Blemett, a life-long friend of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, will deliver his lecture on this great man of God, in the Baptist church next Monday evening. Everyone is invited, and there will be no charge for admission. Rev. Mr. Weeks has a very interesting subject for next Sunday evening.

Frank Camerlin and James Vient got badly poisoned last Sunday while out walking in the woods. They mistook the bark of a dogwood tree for another bark, and chewed some of it. They have both been confined to the house in consequence, the poison affecting them so that they could not use their limbs.

"Resolved—That Women have More Influence than Men," proved an interesting subject for the debate at the last regular meeting of the Monday Evening Club. A. T. McWhorter and G. A. Adams took the affirmative against Miss Clara Green and Frank Lavene on the negative. The subject was then given to the house, and after several had spoken pro and con the judge brought in an opinion that the affirmative side had won.

Chas. H. Clark, overseer in the spooling room, had quite an experience last Saturday. Returning to his room after an absence of a few moments he found two Polish women in quite a heated argument. They had used their fists, also spools, as weapons to good advantage, and blood was flowing freely. Mr. Clark separated the combatants and dispensed with their services.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 7, 1894.

The event of Thursday was the answer of the supreme court to the questions of the House, framed by Mr. Wellman of Malden, which were put when it was proposed to submit the scheme of municipal woman suffrage to a popular vote, including the women. The prospect of bills for a popular referendum on other matters was also in mind. So the questions were very important. Three separate points were inquired about: (1) the constitutionality of a general referendum to the male voters; (2) of local referendum and (3) of referendum at which the women could vote upon the pending measure. This last bore particularly upon the bill in hand. Chief Justice Field and Judges Allen, Morton and Lathrop hold that any one of the plans is unconstitutional. Judges Holmes and Barker hold that each one of the three is constitutional, and each gave his views in a separate paper. Judge Knowlton holds that the first and third plans are unconstitutional. In that way he saves the local option law and the principle of local referendum which is frequently practiced in Massachusetts.

It will be seen at once that these decisions are very far-reaching, and that they will have an important effect upon present legislation, as well as upon the future. The House ordered 3000 copies to be printed.

The plans for saving the old state house have taken on a more practicable shape than they have had before, but the question is whether they are not too late for success. One part of them is to stop the southward progress of the annex at its present point, and not permit it to cross the old line of Mount Vernon street. There is great merit in this, for the extension down the hill to the north, with one end three stories higher than the other, can never produce a good architectural effect when joined to the main part. The extension is bad enough when standing alone, but it is extremely bad when joined to the old fronts which was never built for such an addition. Whether the front is rebuilt or not, the building would look far better if the annex were kept by itself with no architectural union between the two parts. It is agreed by the friends of the old front that, if it is kept, it must be thoroughly remodeled. This is also a sound conclusion, for the present unhealthfulness and weariness caused by the poorly ventilated, stifling committee rooms destroys all appreciation of the historic memories of the building as long as the rank odors offend one's nostrils. Whatever the outcome, there will surely be a reform.

The committee on education held the most important meeting of the session Wednesday forenoon, when they acted upon the normal school question. They voted in favor of North Adams, Fitchburg and Lawrence. The places which will probably be the most disappointed will be Pittsfield, Greenfield and Lowell. Some of the smaller places made excellent pleas for the school. Athol did particularly well, but so many of them came in—Hinsdale, Belchertown, Warren, Templeton, Orange, Pelham, Barre, Cape Cod, and others,—that they killed off each other, even if nothing else would have killed them. They were so extravagant in their claims that, though they were doubtless honestly presented, they became little short of ridiculous. When town after town came in, and said that, it had the most beautiful location in the state and the purest water, the healthfullest air, the brightest children and a population just yearning for education, the matter became not only notorious, but too improbable to have the desired effect upon the committee. If only one or two towns had been heard from it would have done very well, but 15 were a full dozen too many.

Yet there is no doubt that the sincere earnestness of the small towns had a great effect upon the committee, and it is to the general uprising for a new school, I have no doubt, that the reporting of three schools is due. One was proposed at first, some thought there was room for two, but no one seriously mentioned three. Yet it was clearly shewn by the small towns at the hearings that their young people cannot go far from home to the normal schools. Facilities must be provided near at home, or they are of little use. It was also further shown that the towns are at a tremendous disadvantage compared with the cities. The latter have so much more money and can pay so much higher salaries that no sooner does a country teacher show exceptional ability and get a little reputation than some watchful superintendent engages her and the town is thrown back once more upon the usual second grade sort of teachers. With three more schools the young people of the adjoining towns can come in and have the benefit of practice in the large schools, and a greater number can be accommodated. Now it is to be seen if the bill will pass.

One of the most important matters of the session has made as little stir as any. It marks a further step in the unification of the country, not by outside force of law, but by internal growth. The Massachusetts commission on uniform laws for this and other states, acting upon the instructions of the meeting of all the like commissioners at Milwaukee last summer, asked the judiciary committee to report three acts which that meeting recommended. One is a uniform law for the acknowledgment and execution of deeds, one relative to the sealing and attestation of deeds, and one for a uniform standard of weights and measures. Already 19 states have voluntarily come into the movement, and it will be seen that here is the beginning of a growth of uniform laws in the different states upon matters which are wholly within the province of state legislation, not at all a concern for the national government. The commissioners have a draft of a uniform marriage and divorce law for all the states, but they do not press it at this time. Messrs. F. J. Stimson and Samuel W. Dike presented the case to the committee.

The vote of the Senate Wednesday afternoon by 20 to 10 for the abolition of Fast Day settles the passage of the bill. The House has already voted for it overwhelmingly, and this large majority in the Senate will not, in all human probability, be reversed upon the remaining stages. It is not likely that any further opposition will be made, and the people may as well get their patriotic speeches ready for the new public holiday of April 19, to celebrate the arrest of Edward Andros in 1689, the battle of Lexington in 1775, and the march through Baltimore in 1861, and anything else that happened on that day.

The House has passed by a unanimous vote, after debate, the bill to limit the hours of railroad employes to 10 in a consecutive 11, and it remains to be seen whether the railroads will be able to defeat it in the Senate, as has been done in previous years. The argument this year has taken the new ground that the bill is for the safety of the public rather than for the relief of the railroad employes. LANDON.

MEN WANTED.—To take Orders. No delivering or collecting. Experience not necessary. Steady employment. Best terms. Write at once and secure choice of territory. ALLEN NURSERY CO., Rochester, N. Y. 16-19

MRS. L. E. CARPENTER.

We are now ready to show our new line of muslin underwear. We have a good line of pretty patterns, and guarantee prices. You have found by this time that it does not pay you to make your own underwear. Large manufacturing houses can make it at a less price than you can, and you get the benefit of their experience in cutting. A perfect fitting undergarment is a necessary part of every lady's dress, and this is just what we promise to give you.

MRS. L. E. CARPENTER, PALMER, MASS.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT, in and for the County of Hampshire.

Humbly shews George A. Blish of Granby, in said county, that he was lawfully married to Anna J. McKernan, now resident in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at Chicopee, Massachusetts, on March twenty-fourth, A. D. 1875, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in Granby aforesaid, and he has ever conducted towards her as a faithful, chaste, and affectionate husband, yet the said Anna J., regardless of her marriage vows and obligations, on or about the eleventh day of June, A. D. 1884, at Granby aforesaid, utterly deserted him and has continued her up to the date of filing this libel, a period of more than three consecutive years.

Wherefore he prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between him and the said Anna J. Blish may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

GEORGE A. BLISH.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPSHIRE, ss. Superior Court at Northampton. February 27th, A. D. 1894.

ON THE LIBEL aforesaid, it is Ordered, that the Libellant notify the said Anna J. Blish to appear before our Justices of the Superior Court, at our Clerk's Office at Northampton, within our said County of Hampshire, on the First MONDAY of April next, by publishing an attested copy of said Libel, and this Order, once a week, three weeks successively, in the Ware Standard, a newspaper published in Ware, in said county, the last publication to be fourteen days at least, before said First MONDAY of April next; also, by causing an attested copy of said Libel and Order to be sent by letter, registered if practicable, to the last known residence of the Libellee, fourteen days at least before said First Monday of April next; that he may then and there show cause why the prayer of said Libel should not be granted.

Attest: WM. H. CLAPP, Clerk.

A copy of the Libel, and Order of Notice.

The Temperance Convention.

A fair sized audience was present at the temperance convention of delegates from Brimfield, Holland, Monson, Palmer, Wales and Wilbraham, held in the Congregational church chapel yesterday afternoon. The topics of the evening were thoroughly discussed by Rev. S. T. Frost, pastor of the Baptist church at Palmer, who was elected president of the meeting, Rev. F. E. Jenkins and Hubbard Lawrence of Palmer, Rev. Alfred Noon of Boston, secretary of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, Rev. James Tufts and Rev. F. S. Hatch of Monson. The meeting was called at the instigation of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society. The subjects discussed were "Local Enforcement of the Liquor Law;" "The Coming Vote on License;" "Training of Children for Temperance;" "Temperance Work in Churches;" "Should the Liquor Law be Changed?" The subject of temperance work in the churches was spoken of as a failure compared with other church work, and it was earnestly urged that more enthusiasm be shown in this respect in the future. It was also argued that the church should be the greatest power for temperance work, as it has more power and influence than individuals. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was spoken of as the best way to reach the younger portion of the community. For local reasons the topic, "Should the Liquor Law be Changed as Regards Cider, and in respect to the Transportation of Intoxicants," proved doubly interesting. It is thought that there will be a temperance rally in Memorial Hall before election, but definite arrangements regarding this have not been settled yet.

Meeting of the Library Corporation.

The annual meeting of the library corporation was held in the library rooms Monday evening. Many facts of interest were given showing the increase of the number of books taken out during the year as compared with former years. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Geo. E. Fuller, vice president, Alvin A. Gage; treasurer, S. F. Cushman; secretary, Frank E. Morris; auditor, Edward F. Morris; director for five years, W. N. Flynt. The subject of lighting the interior of the clock tower, thus enabling the time to be seen in the night, was laid on the table till the adjourned meeting the 19th. This would supply a long felt want, and as the clock tower was originally built for this purpose, the only additional expense would be the cost of lighting. The librarian, Wesley A. Squier, submitted his report, as follows: Number of volumes in the library, 5228; accessions during the year, 214, from these sources—state of Massachusetts 8, Hon. H. C. Lodge, M. C., 5, E. F. Morris 1, Rev. F. S. Hatch 1, Perley E. Davis of Amherst Agricultural College 1, purchase 175; the library was open during the year 306 days; number of books drawn for home use, 11,283; number of persons drawing books, 635; books of reference and books read in the room are not included in the above. The reading room has been unusually well patronized in the past year. The librarian advises that a few more good papers and magazines could be profitably used. The library has received during the past year the endowment of Mrs. Sophia Holmes of $10,000, thus making a total endowment of $30,000.

George L. Clemence of Southbridge speaks on "Farm Dairying."

The second farmers' institute of the season was held at Grange Hall Tuesday, and George L. Clemence of Southbridge addressed the meeting in the morning on the subject of "Farm Dairying," in which he has had 18 years of practical experience. He held that in order to derive satisfactory results milch cows should be fed high; he also gave statements showing the proper proportions of food to use, such as gluten, ensilage fodder, cotton seed meal, corn meal, and hay. Clemence is the proprietor of a large farm on which he has had constructed what he calls a model barn, and he showed diagrams and photographs illustrating its construction. The company adjourned to the Cushman House for dinner, after which they assembled for the afternoon meeting. The subject was the same as in the morning, and was ably discussed by the local farmers, among the number being Wilson Tucker, Lyman Miller, Mr. Tufts, Mr. Rindge and Mr. McCray. A vote was then called for on the proposed reduction of the standard of milk now before the Legislature, and a unanimous vote was taken against having the standard lowered. The next institute will be held in Palmer the 27th of this month, and will be addressed by Prof. Maynard of Amherst.

"As You Like It."

Thousands understand the the theory of buying when they need goods.

BUT JUST NOW

We are selling a great many pairs of shoes a great deal cheaper than we bought them, and if you have to pinch your pocket book to make it go as far as possible

YOU CANNOT AFFORD

to let this opportunity pass without seeing if FULLER is not selling just the pair of shoes you want for one-half their real value.

Every pair of ladies' shoes left on the table Saturday will be marked down to $1.50. The goods range in price from $2 to $4, but I put them there to be sold and I am bound not to put a pair back on my shelves if a low price will sell them.

DO YOU WANT A PAIR?

Festus Cooley has received a check for $20 from a western publication for correctly answering a puzzle.

Mrs. Inez Farrell entertained a party of friends at her residence on Washington street Wednesday evening.

Albert Murphy, who has been stopping in town this winter, has returned to Boston, where he has secured a position.

It is reported that E. J. Hughes, proprietor of the Monson tea store, has purchased some valuable property in Brimfield.

W. P. Stone is organizing a banjo class in town, and has made arrangements for same. See advertisement in another column.

Dr. R. V. Sawin of Brimfield has presented W. N. Flynt, for his museum, with an old and valuable edition of the apocrypha.

Rev. W. H. Marble will preach next Sunday morning the fourth of his series of sermons, from the text, "Patient Noah."

The vaccination craze has reached Monson, one physician using the ivory points on no less than twenty-five in one day this week.

The many friends of William King will be pained to learn that he is quite sick with rheumatism at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Clark Pease.

Miss Maude Stacy entertained a whist party Tuesday evening. Henry F. Miller scored the highest number of points, and W. C. Young the lowest.

At the Universalist church next Sunday evening Rev. Harry Blackford will address the meeting on the subject, "The Universalist Idea of Salvation."

Contractor J. N. Graves is at work repairing the front of S. F. Cushman's Jr's residence, which was so badly damaged by the burning of Central Block.

Henry Darling has added to his case in the museum at Flynt Park the sword of a sword-fish, the weapon being five feet long. When alive the fish measured 30 feet.

Presiding Elder Thorndike held the fourth quarterly conference at the Methodist church last Friday evening. A large number of the officers of the church were present.

Readers of the JOURNAL who wish the Magic Citys will find them hereafter at G. L. Keeney's drug store, which will save the necessity of their being ordered and sent by mail.

Preparations are being made at the Flynt granite quarry to resume work as soon as the weather permits. The prospects are that there will be quite a force of men at work there this season.

The chicken-pie supper given by the Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Methodist church proved an interesting affair. A good supper was given and the entertainment was well received.

There has been a large advance sale of tickets for the concert by the Amherst College Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Clubs, which promises to be one of the most enjoyable entertainments of the season.

For the first time in twelve years George W. Burdick, the Mechanic street blacksmith, will have his entire family together Sunday. Eight children, four of them married, and their families, will be present.

John Hall has rented a tenement in Mrs. Mixture's house on Mechanic street, and expects to move soon. A. H. Bennett, formerly with W. N. Flynt and Sons, will occupy the tenement vacated by Mr. Hall.

Asher Burdick of Philadelphia, Pa., is visiting his father, George Burdick, on Mechanic street. He has not been in Monson for twelve years, and is surprised at the progress of the town since that time.

A number of young men in town have by a little labor and time perfected a line of telegraph which they now have in successful operation. They are now at work on a line of telephone, and hope to have it completed soon.

The following scholars in district No. 9, Moulton Hill, have been neither absent nor tardy during the winter term: Lottie Squier, Holmes Squier, Raymond Jewett and Paul Jewett. In district No. 11, George Sorell and Leon Sorell.

The men who have been at work trying to locate a supply of water for the proposed water works in the vicinity of L. G. Cushman's farm have abandoned the task in that locality, and are now at work in the vicinity of the Wales road near Edgar Squier's.

Rev. W. H. Marble of the Methodist church is making preparations to attend the annual New England conference in Waltham the 11th of April. The church has extended a unanimous call to remain, and it is hoped that the conference will grant the request.

It is rumored that H. C. Norcross is to go into business in the stand now occupied by Bogan & Foley. It is not thought that the last named firm will go out of business, although it is difficult to find out just what will be done. It is safe to say, however, that in a short time there will be some change in some of the business firms about town.

The Windsor Club has made arrangements for a concert and ball on the evening of the 26th, and propose to make this event the best of the many they have offered the people of Monson. They have secured Carter's Commandery Band of Boston for music, which has the reputation in all parts of the country for its excellent playing. The committee in charge of the arrangements is Ralph Clifford, H. M. Bacon, S. H. Newton, I. L. Jefts and F. L. Shaw. L. C. Flynt will have charge of the floor, with F. L. Shaw as as assistant and A. A. F. Johnson, T. H. Spurr, Fisk Bacon, J. C. Parsons, Fred Flynt, George Aldrich, Charles Thayer, Fred Thayer, W. L. Ricketts, C. W. King, F. E. Severy and W. H. Burnett as aids. The reception committee is Julius Heimann, W. H. Gifford, G. C. Flynt, S. F. Cushman, Jr., William Young and Henry Wentworth.

Real estate transfers and sales and business changes are very plenty of late. Mrs. Sylvanus Darling has sold her residence on South Main street and has purchased a house of William H. Underwood on Lincoln street. James Duncan has sold his farm in the west part of the town to Hartford parties, and has bought the place of Wesley A. Squier situated on the Hampden road near E. P. Keep's farm. It is also reported that Jerry Foley of the firm Bogan & Foley has purchased a house of George E. Grout, situated near the depot. Hiemann & Lichten have decided to build a small business block on the side of the burned ell of the old boarding house, of sufficient size to accomodate two stores. S. Simmons, the clothier, will occupy one and the other occupant remains a dark horse. In the space vacated by Simmons in Green's block Grey & Lambert will put in a stock of boots and shoes. A jewelry store is to be located in Day's block, where the primary school was formerly.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Miss A. Howard of Turners Falls has taken a position with the Collins Mfg. Co.

A stereopticon lecture on life among the colored people and the poor whites of the South was given in Grace church Thursday evening, and proved very entertaining.

Grace Union church parish held a meeting last Saturday evening and elected the following officers: Clerk, C. E. Fletcher; collector and treasurer, H. W. Cutler; parish committee, H. Cutler, M. H. Cooley, Reuben Sikes; ushers, M. H. Cooley, B. R. Chase.

BRIMFIELD.

Mr. Benson of Worcester is visiting relatives in town.

Miss M. Anna Tarbell has arrived home from Springfield, where she has been stopping the past two months.

Mr. and Mrs. Newton S. Hubbard came to town last Saturday from Chicago, Ill. They expect to remain in town for the present.

WEST WARREN.

There are rumors of no work soon at the mills.

The schools close this week for a short vacation.

Overseer Verrill of the weave room at No. 4 is talking of taking a house nearer his work.

E. G. Whitehouse, formerly of this place, has been visiting friends in town, and addressed the Whitehouse Epworth League Sunday evening.

Miss Minnie Orcutt and Mr. Anderson of Worcester were married at the home of the bride Tuesday. Rev. Mr. Webber performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will visit Montreal during their wedding trip.

Presiding Elder Thorndike will preach and hold the fourth quarterly conference in the M. E. church next Sunday afternoon. Rev. Putnam Webber will close a most successful five years' pastorate with this conference year. The church and community are sorry to part with him and his family.

WALES.

Geo. S. Rogers is now able to be out, and is at the post office part of the time.

W. A. Lyon is appointed administrator of the estate of Laban Pheteplace, deceased.

Isaiah Hiscock has a second attack of grippe, and has been confined again to his home.

The Baker Bros. are cleaning the machinery out of the Valley mill, which has been sold to N. F. Bradley, who will at once commence to remodel it for a saw mill.

The ladies at the Methodist church held a social at the parsonage Wednesday afternoon, and sat down to an old-fashioned brown bread and baked bean supper.

Several parties attended the auction at the old Darius Shaw place and purchased various articles to lie around and be sold when their estates are settled. Strange how people will buy at auction when they have lots of such stuff lying around at home unused.

Special meetings are being held in the Baptist vestry this week, and will be continued through next week under the auspices of the Young People's Union. Mr. Crawford, from the School for Christian Workers at Springfield, will conduct the meetings Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and Rev. Mr. Bluett of Boston will preach Thursday and Friday evenings of each week.

HAMPDEN.

Morton Day has sold his farm, on which he lived, to his son-in-law, Isadore Ricard.

Sidney Chapin has bought the farm of Mrs. Arianna Chapin, and is now cutting off the wood.

Mrs. William Leach and daughter are spending the week in Springfield, and Ellington, Ct.

On Tuesday Mrs. William Johnson raised the evergreen covering of her pansy bed and found several blossoms.

On Monday Mrs. Lincoln McCray gathered on the farm of D. B. McCray dandelions for their dinner, some of the leaves measuring over four inches, and containing large buds. Who beats this?

There is considerable excitement over the proposed electric railway from Springfield, and a large proportion of the voters gathered at Academy Hall Monday night to discuss the matter, and a committee of twenty was chosen to go to Springfield Tuesday night to attend the meeting at the Hotel Vendome, where it was expected some definite action would be taken as to running the line. East Longmeadow and Hampden people are anxious to have it extend to their town. There are excellent water privileges that could be bought very cheaply for a plant. One man is so sanguine of its coming that he proposes to build a summer hotel on the top of the mountain, but think he has not contracted for it; neither has anyone sold off his horses yet. But more anon.

WARREN.

Frank E. Gleason is sick with rheumatic fever.

The Tuesday Club met with Mrs. W. E. Lincoln Tuesday afternoon.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. F. W. Kimball Wednesday afternoon.

The Warren mill company has received another cargo of looms for its mill at the lower village.

Frank A. Humphrey has taken a position in the pattern department of the Slater Engine Company's works.

John R. Todd & Company of Natick have bought the stove and tin ship of W. A. Putnam in Quaboag block.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Fairbanks have issued "at home" cards for the Wednesday evenings of March, and April 4.

Arthur S. Jones has moved his family to Narragansett Pier, R. I. Mr. Jones will have charge of a large stock farm.

Next Monday evening there will be prize speaking in the town hall, under the auspices of the Woman's Suffrage League.

Rev. E. C. Winslow, from the Baldwin Place Home in Boston will preach in the Congregational church Sunday morning. A choir of singers from the Home will be with him.

A pleasant wedding took place last Friday, when Frank Jenkins and Miss Lucy Pierce were married at the home of the bride. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. W. Gleason.

The Farmers' Club met with Haschel Underwood on the West Brookfield road one day last week. There were 90 present, and John W. Lawrence of West Brimfield spoke on the subject, "Was the World's Fair a Benefit to the Farmers?"

A large party of young people made a surprise visit on Miss Alice Demond last Friday evening. About seventy-five were present and an outfit of cups, saucers and spoons were left as a reminder of the visit. A handsome oak 5-o'clock tea-table and a beautiful solitaire diamond, gifts of relatives, will all serve to make the date of her 21st birthday a memorable one.

A Bold Theft.

The house of Edward R. Fowler, a farmer living on the Brimfield road, was robbed last Sunday by a man who had been employed by Mr. Fowler. He had been working there about three weeks, and last Sunday afternoon, while Mr. and Mrs. Fowler were out, the stranger left, taking with him about $20 worth of old coins, a silver watch, and other valuables. He gave his name as Harry Damend, and said his home was in Leominster. Mr. Fowler offers $50 reward for his capture and the return of the stolen property.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., March, 1894.

The Syndicate Trading Company's collection of Oriental Rugs and carpets will surprise you into admiration at every turn.

And the prices! the prices!

Wait till you see the prices. Actually as low as at our auction sales in the past.

The sale will last but a short while.

Expect just what we say; a high-grade bicycle for $69; and be quick to think "Do I want one." The number is limited.
Basement.

More of that whipcord 75-cent serge at 50 cents; thirty-six colors and black. 50 cents is ridiculous for such a stuff; somebody loses money on every yard sold; somebody gains. Women buy one, two and three dresses of it.
Left aisle.

A fancy 75-cent amure just come we shall sell for 55 cents, seventeen colors and black. Don't know which'll sell first, this or the serge mentioned above. Samples of both will be sent, if requested.
Left aisle.

Why we should sell a dollar grade of Henrietta for 69 cents a yard is a puzzler. We never did it before, or heard of its being done before; never expect to do it again. Fourteen colors at this writing—street and tea gown shades.
Left aisle.

Two hundred and seventeen photographs of the most attractive sights, scenes and people of the World's Fair, all in a book of 300 pages, 19 cents; by mail 21.

Great Men.

The greatest men are those who have done the most for the good and advancement of the human race. The man who stands most prominently before the public to-day in the cure of disease, is Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the discoverer of that wonderful remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. He is the founder of that great system of giving consultation and advice by means of letter correspondence, free of charge.

Write him a description of your complaint, of send for his symptom blank, and he will send you an exact description of your disease. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, answering all questions and thoroughly explaining each symptom so that you will know exactly what your complaint is; and for all this he makes no charges. Dr. Greene is the most successful specialist in the cure of all nervous and chronic diseases, and he gives you the benefit of his valuable advice with no expense to yourself, and by thus writing him about your case, you will undoubtly regain your health.

CHANCE OF A LIFETIME.

For G. A. R. Men—For Sons and Daughters of Veterans—For Boys and Girls and Everybody Else.

BOSTON, March 7—The Century War Book, which was issued in four volumes at $4 to $6 per volume a few years ago, is the only complete and graphic history of the late civil war. All of the leading generals in the union and confederate armies described the great battles which they fought, and the work was illustrated by the leading artists of the country.

To meet a great popular demand the Century company has issued a people's edition, to be sold in parts at 10 cents, thus placing this great work within the reach of everybody. It will contain 340,000 words of text and over 300 magnificent illustrations.

It can be had in New England only thor Sunday Boston Globe. Get the Boston Daily Globe at once for full particulars.

EMINENT MEN, THESE.

Some of the Most Notable Authors of the Country Writing for the Boston Journal.

When such notable men as Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Cardinal Gibbons, Maj. Gen. Howard, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, George Kennon, Chauncy M. Depew and Hon. Theodore Roosevelt contribute to a newspaper it shows that the publishers regard the best as none too good for the readers of that paper. All these men, with other noted authors, are now writing articles of value and interest for the Boston Sunday Journal. The Journal, by the way, has made great bounds of late on account of its live news and entertaining special articles.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

To Herbert A. Northrop, Constable of the Town of Palmer.

GREETING:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House, in said Palmer, on Monday, the nineteenth day of March current, at 9 o'clock a. m., to act on the following articles, viz.:

ARTICLE 1. To choose a Moderator to preside at said meeting.
ART. 2. To elect all necessary town officers for the ensuing year.
ART. 3. To vote by ballot, which shall be Yes or No, in answer to the question, "Shall licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town?"
ART. 4. To act on the reports of the town officers.
ART. 5. To raise money and make appropriations to defray the expenses of the town for the ensuing year.
ART. 6. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money in anticipation of the taxes for the ensuing year, the same to be paid from said taxes.
ART. 7. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money not to be paid from the taxes of the ensuing year.
ART. 8. To hear and act on reports of committees.
ART. 9. To choose committees and give them instructions.
ART. 10. To see if the town will allow a discount and determine what interest shall be paid on the taxes to be assessed for the ensuing year.
ART. 11. To determine the manner and state the terms and conditions of collecting the taxes for the ensuing year, and fix the compensation of the collector of taxes.
ART. 12. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges for the ensuing year.
ART. 13. To see if the town will raise and appropriate money to suppress the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors.
ART. 14. To act on the list of jurors as prepared by the selectmen.
ART. 15. To see if the town will raise money for the Young Men's Library Association.
ART. 16. To see if the town will raise money to convey pupils to and from the public schools, and instruct the school committee as to the manner of letting the contract for such conveyance.
ART. 17. To see if the town will raise money for the celebration of Memorial Day.
ART. 18. To see what action the town will take in relation to sewers.
ART. 19. To see what action the town will take in regard to lighting its streets, and whether it will authorize the selectmen to make contract therefor.
ART. 20. To see what action the town will take in reference to the preservation of shade trees.
ART. 21. To see if the town will raise and appropriate the sum of three hundred dollars for necessary aid to soldiers and sailors and their families, and the families of the slain, and entrust the same to L. L. Merrick Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, under the provisions of Chap. 189, Acts of the year 1885.
ART. 22. To see what action the town will take regarding any suit now pending against the town.

—The clothes that are washed without Pearline. If you get them clean by the necessary rubbing with soap, they will soon get ruined by the wear of it. Pearline saves the wear, by saving the work—there is little or no rubbing. It does no harm to anything that it washes, and it washes everything. Use Pearline, and use less labor. Labor is useless, if you use Pearline, for it is unnecessary.

Doctors Discouraged, Relief Found.

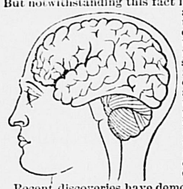
Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "I am as certain as I now live, that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease." If you are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetics, or any urinary trouble, you should use this only cure.

"I had been troubled since 1879," writes S. N. Arnold of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors, but got no relief. Upon advice I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; a few bottles entirely cured me." 48

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

Dr. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus' dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

Dr. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

That Little Kid.

When I see a little youngster
Wrapped in long and swaddling clothes,
Strapped inside his wicker carriage,
Out of sight except his nose;
When he's left with dazzling sunlight
Torturing each blinking lid;
Then with all my heart I'm thankful
That I'm not that little kid.

When I see him in the nursery
By the fire warm and bright;
Playing with his toys and trinkets,
Laughing, gay, from morn till night;
Keeping mother, aunts and sisters
Running hither at his bid,
Lest his life should know a trouble—
Would I were that little kid.

When I watch his helpless actions
As he tries alone to walk;
When I hear his wordless prattle
As he does his best to talk,—
When I think what tiresome studies
He must have as we once did;
Really I am very thankful
I am not that little kid.

But!—when decked with bows and ribbons
On his "ma's" reception day,
Held by scores of budding maidens,
Loved and hugged, he hears them say
"Let me hold him!" "Kiss me, darling!"
Pressed to scores of lips and hid
In their arms by clouds of kisses—
Jove!—I wish I were that kid!

A CLEVER BIT OF REPARTEE.—Our spiritual leaders are as often men of great wit as of deep piety. In the olden days the clergy and the medical profession used to furnish the public with a goodly part of their fund of humorous anecdote. Among the stories of an almost forgotten period we find this:

The Rev. Dr. B—— once, when on an exchange, was annoyed to find the room so dark that his eyes could hardly penetrate its gloom, and beckoning to a person near the pulpit, he asked him to open the blinds and let in more light.

"We expect light from you," said the gentleman.

"But I must get it from heaven first," was the quick rejoinder.—Harper's Bazar.

HON. EX-SPEAKER NOYES.

OUR STATESMAN CURED BY DR. GREENE'S NERVURA.

The Great Senator and Representative Recommends Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy to the Weak, Nervous and Ailing. It is the Best Spring Medicine to Take.

PROBABLY more depends upon the character of the recommendation than on anything else. If a person you personally know tells you that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will cure you because it cured him, you take his word. Here is Massachusetts' greatest and foremost statesman whom all our readers know, Hon. ex-Speaker Noyes, of the house of Representatives, who tells you what this wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, has done for him, and advises you to take it and get well, if you are sick, weary, nervous, sleepless, debilitated or run down in health. He assures you that it cured him and he is positive it will cure you.

"It seems to me nothing could have contributed so much to invigorate and recreate as it were, my severely taxed nerves and debilitated vitality as did this excellent remedy. And to all needing some invigorating and permanent restorative to mind and body over-burdened in business and other cases, I desire to offer my testimony in behalf of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy as the very best medicine within my knowleege or observation. I am willing that the best possible use should be made of this note to bring the matter to the attention of other sufferers as I was.

CHARLES J. NOYES,
Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

HON. EX-SPEAKER CHARLES J. NOYES.

The newspapers say of Hon. Mr. Noyes: "No citizen of Boston stands higher in public estimation than he. A lawyer of the greatest eminence and highest ability, he is a born leader of men. In public life for nearly half a century, he is a representative citizen, one of the most popular and best known men in the United States

"He was elected a senator and was eight times returned to the House of Representatives. It shows in what estimation he is held by the people that he was five different years elected speaker of the House of Representatives. Gov. Long made him a Justice, knowing that he is of unquestioned integrity, superior ability and great conscientiousness. A man of majestic brain, he is a great statesman and has few equals as an orator. He was at one time a candidate for Lieut. Governor and he nominated Alger for president, in the National Convention."

Such is the eminence and standing of the gentleman who writes the following for the public welfare:

"Having used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy during my convalescence from a severe rheumatism, and experiencing its very beneficial results in accelerating my recovery, by imparting a healthy tone to my whole over-wrought nervous system, I write that others needing a like restorative may have a like advantage.

Hon. ex-Speaker Noyes is and always will be a boon to his fellow men, and in thus giving his advice to the suffering, and the weight of his high standing and eminent reputation to his indorsement of the wonderful curative virtues of the great medical discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, he is proving himself a benefactor to those who are sick, weak, nervous and ailing. It is a fact that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy cures. The sick need it to make them well. Those who do not call themselves exactly sick, but who are ailing, out of order and do not feel just right, should take it, for it will put them in perfect health and strength. Everybody needs it now when a spring medicine is necessary to maintain health. It is the best spring medicine possible to take.

Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., its discoverer, is our most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

"FEEL LIKE A NEW MAN!"

So says everyone who has tried Paskola, the great flesh-forming food.

Nothing equals it for building up sound, healthy flesh, enriching the blood and imparting new strength.

It is just the thing for thin, weak people, who get no benefit from the food they eat.

Delicate stomachs cannot stand sickening oils and other fatty mixtures. Paskola has replaced them.

It is easily taken and pleasant to the taste. Being pre-digested, it is instantly absorbed into the system.

Ask your druggist for a bottle, and try it!

A pamphlet giving full particulars respecting Paskola will be sent on application to

THE WORK OF THE MOUND BUILDERS.

To such an extent has the mystery of the ancient mound-builders been cleared away by the recent investigations of the bureau of ethnology that it is actually known what tribes of Indians constructed many of those works, which are scattered to the number of hundreds of thousands over the greater part of the United States. "We know that the mounds of Eastern Tennessee and Western North Carolina were mostly built by the Cherokees of centuries ago," said Major J. W. Powell yesterday. "Indians of the same tribe were probably the authors also of most of the ancient works of this sort in Kanawha valley, West Virginia. The tumuli in Northern Mississippi were constructed by Chickasaws chiefly, and those in the Gulf states were created by the Muskokee tribes. The Shawnees made the box-shaped stone graves and the mounds containing them in Kentucky and Northern Georgia, while similar graves in the valley of the Delaware and in Ohio may be safely attributed to the Delawares.

"As might be expected, in digging into the mounds some very extraordinary things were discovered. In a mound in Iowa was found a skeleton of a giant who, judging from actual measurement, must have stood seven feet six inches tall when alive. The bones crumbled to dust when exposed to the air. Around the neck was a collar of bears' teeth, and across the thighs were dozens of small copper beads, which may have once adorned a hunting-shirt. The latter were formed by rolling slender wire-like strips of metal into little rings. One skull obtained from a mound in Alabama was completely filled with snail-shells, though for what purpose cannot be imagined.

"In another mound in Iowa was found a central chamber containing 11 skeletons, which were arranged in a circle with their backs against the walls. In their midst was a great sea shell which had been converted into a drinking-cup. Smaller cavities in the same tumulus were filled with a fine copper-colored dust which, when first uncovered, gave out such a sickening odor that operations had to be suspended for a while. This dust was supposed to be ashes from burned flesh—perhaps that of the individuals in the central chamber. A bottle full of it was carried away for subsequent examination. In other mounds hollows were found lined with a peculiar black felt-like substance, believed to be the remains of human flesh. Many tribes of Indians in ancient times made a practice of removing the flesh from the bones of the dead—commonly by exposing the bodies on elevated platforms, where they were permitted to undergo the processes of decay. Very likely the practice had its origin in an obvious precaution against the digging up of corpses by hungry wild beasts.

"Some of the most interesting material for investigation was found in caves. Facing the Mississippi river, six miles south of New Albin, is a great cavity in the vertical face of the sandstone bluff, 50 feet long and 12 feet high. The walls and ceiling are literally covered with rude etchings representing quadrupeds, birds, bird-tracks and symbolic or fanciful objects. The floor is spead to a depth of two feet with the bones of fishes and beasts, fragments of pottery, charcoal and ashes. Obviously this place was used for residence purposes during a long period of time. Yet more remarkable is a cave near Guntersville, Ala. Evidently it was utilized for many generations as a cemetery, and the number of dead deposited in it must have been very great. Though much of its contents has been hauled away in sacks for fertilizing land, the floor is yet covered to a depth of four feet with material composed chiefly of fragments of human bones. In Tennessee and Kentucky the flesh of bodies stored in caves centuries ago is sometimes remarkably preserved.

"On a farm in Bollinger county, Missouri, belonging to a man named Peter Bess, is an area of considerable extent surrounded by an ancient wall of earth about three feet high in places. Inside of it formerly were many remarkable mounds used for burial purposes by the Indians of prehistoric times, but 40 years of continued cultivation of the soil have nearly leveled them. However, the mass of material composing them was so great that even now the land within the inclosure is two feet higher than that outside, and so rich is it that it yields 75 bushels of corn per acre in good years, the owner says, while that outside yields only 50 bushels. Plowing over one of the mounds a few years ago, Mr. Bess struck something, and on digging discovered two stone coffins, each containing a skeleton. In one of the coffins he found a gourd-shaped vessel filled with lead ore so pure that he afterward turned it into bullets.

"In 1879 people in the neighborhood of a town in Mississippi discovered that the pottery in which the mounds of that region were unusually rich had considerable commercial value. A regular mining fever at once broke out and spread so rapidly that as many as 25 or 30 men, women and children could be seen digging for aborigina bric-a-brac in a single field at the same time. The specimens obtained were sold to merchants, who in turn furnished them to museums, scientific institutions and relic hunters. The trade brought several thousand dollars to the town.

"Agents of the bureau of ethnology have explored and made excavations in more than 2000 of these mounds. Among the objects found in them were pearls in great numbers and some of very large size, engraved shells, bracelets of drawn wire, silver brooches, pins, needles, a silver plate with the coat of arms of Spain, a gun-barrel, a Roman Catholic medal, a copper kettle, and a fur-covered brass-nailed trunk. Of course, many of these articles were obtained from the whites. They demonstrate beyond a question that mound-building and burial in mounds went on for some time after the whites landed on the shores of America. In fact, I myself have seen such mounds in process of construction by Indians. There has never been an atom of evidence to prove that any other race than the Indians themselves was concerned in the creation of these works."
—Washington Correspondent of the Boston Transcript.

FORGIVENESS.

A street boy was run over several weeks ago by a heavy wagon in New York City. He was in the gutter, in the act of stooping, and did not see the approaching team. Another gamin who has been taunting him, ran away when the accident happened. The injured boy was taken to the nearest hospital, where he was found to be fatally hurt.

After he had been in the hospital a few days, a small boy as ragged and friendless as himself called to ask about him and to leave an orange for the injured lad. The visitor was shy and embarrassed, and would answer no questions.

He soon came again with an apple to be used for the same purpose. After that almost every day he appeared at the hospital, bringing some small gift.

One day the nurse told the little visitor that his friend could not get well. The boy lingered in the receiving-room, and then with great hesitation asked if he could see John. He had been invited before, but had refused.

The little patient was lying on his cot, very pale and weak. His eyes opened in dull surprise when he was told that he had a visitor. Before he knew it two little arms were about his neck, and a familiar, grimy face bent over his and sobbed:

"I say, Johnny, can yer forgive a feller? We was always fightin', and I know I hurt yer, an' I'm sorry. Won't ye tell me, Johnny, that ye haint got no grudge agin me?"

The boy reached up his thin arms and locked them around his little mate's neck, and said: "Don't cry, Bobby. Don't feel bad. I was firin' a rock at yer when the wagon hit me. You forgive me? Yes, you forgive me—an' I'll forgive you, an' then we'll be square. How does it go, nurse?"

"Forgive us our trespasses," said the white-robed nurse, softly.

The next morning Bob was a little late. The kind nurse met him with a grave face. Johnny, she said, had just died. She led the boy to the place where his little friend lay shrouded from sight. He looked at the dead face a moment, and turned away with streaming eyes.

"Didn't he say—nothin'—about me?"

"He spoke about you before he died, and asked if you were here," replied the nurse.

"Are you sure he forgiv' me?" pleaded the trembling voice.

"I am quite sure."

"Then—may I—may I go to ther funeral?"

"Indeed you may," said the nurse tenderly. "Poor Johnny hasn't any friends."

He was the only mourner, his little heart the only one that ached, and his the only tears shed over the pauper sod. But Bob had exchanged forgiveness with his friend before he died, and felt his conscience clear with his small world.—Youth's Companion.

CLEVERLY MANAGED.

It is often difficult for a portrait-painter to obtain a man's best, or at least his most natural, expression. On one occasion, when an artist was painting Paganini's portrait, he found the musician strangely destitute on animation, and realized that he must find some method of rousing him. He began humming the tune of a little motivo in one of Paganini's concertos. The musician looked up, alert.

"You have been in Strasburg?" asked he.

"Never."

"Then how did you hear that air?"

"I heard you play it."

"No, if you have not been in Strasburg?"

"Yes, in London."

"That concerto I composed for my first appearance in Strasburg, and I never played it in London."

"It was the night you played an obligato accompaniment to Pasta."

"Ah, Pasta!" he exclaimed, and his beautiful eyes brightened at the remembrance of the night. He seemed to glow at the recollection of the memorable occasion when two such artists stood together, and were mutually inspired by each other's excellence.

"Pasta!" he repeated. "How she sang that night."

"Yes, and how you played!"

"Ah," he exclaimed, with a shrug of satisfaction, "but that motivo! Yes, I did play it then, but only that once in London."

The painter's object was attained. Paganini's animation had been aroused, and was easily maintained to the end of the sitting.—Youth's Companion.

It was the class in mental arithmetic. The teacher asked Willy Smith,—"Which would you rather have, Willy, half an apple or eight-sixteenths of an apple?" "Wouldn't make any difference," said Willy. "Why not?" "Eight-sixteenths and one-half are all the same." At this reply Tommy Jones, who was several steps farther down the class, sniffed scornfully. The teacher heard him. "Well, Tommy," said she, "don't you agree with Willy?" "No'm," said Tommy. "I'd a good deal rather have one-half an apple." "And why, please?" "More juice. Cut up half an apple into eight-sixteenths, and you'd lose half the juice doing it!"

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A NEW DISEASE.

PEOPLE WHO ARE WEARING AWAY BECAUSE THEY CANNOT DIGEST THEIR FOOD.

They Eat Heartily But Their Food Does Them No Good.

If you speak to your acquaintances you will too often find someone who says to you: "My food does me no good. I have a good, even a voracious appetite. I eat plenty and enjoy what I eat, but I'm as thin as a rail. My stomach pains me after meals. I get no flesh or strength from what I eat."

This is not exactly a new disease. It is new because doctors are beginning to give it attention. They are recognizing that at the door of this disease may be laid the blame for most of the dangerous sicknesses which decimate the human race.

Consumption, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Scrofula; all these, and many other diseases, could be prevented or cured if a food could be found that would "do good."

Doctors have recognized that in Paskola they have such a food. Made according to scientific principals, of the purest starch foods (the strengthening, fattening foods) pre-digested, it is perhaps the only food which will "do good" to the most delicate stomach and to the sickest dyspeptic.

Paskola is not a medicine. It is an aid to medicine. It often does away with the need for medicine.

For free pamphlet, describing its various uses, address
The Pre-Digested Food Co., 39 Reade St., New York.

The Advent of the Bluebird.

O, Bluebird, in the wintry weather
Where in all the world were you?
Down South no doubt they saw your feather,
And blessed the little bird in blue.

But we up here were more delighted
To see thee, herald of the spring;
O how I smiled when first I sighted
The azure on your outspread wing.

Around the farm I rode on Dobbin,
The April skies above were blue;
Like a flash of fire I saw the robin,
And heard him pipe his song anew.

I also saw the sparrow splashing,
Washing in a wayside pool;
And then I saw a blue wing flashing,
Turquoise bright and beautiful.

And I said this spring may bring a new bird
In the north to make her nest,
But none so fair as the bonnie bluebird,
The little songster I love best.

MOSES TEGGART.

THE LAWYER AND THE MONEY LENDER.

For the clever young fellow he undoubtedly was, Jack Trumper had behaved very foolishly. Not content with living far beyond his income, which was small, he had seen fit to take to gambling. By that means he soon contrived to lose all his spare cash, and a great deal more. He did not mind this much as long as his credit remained and he could borrow freely. One fine morning however he discovered, much to his amazement, that that was gone too. He had come to Moses Morcashi, who had hitherto financed him, to apply for a further loan. The money lender decisively refused it.

"No, no, Mr. Trumper," he said, "not one shilling more; you ain't worth it. If I sold you hup to-morrow, Mr. Trumper, you wouldn't cover the principal and interest advances on your notes of 'and for me. Of course, Mr. Trumper, if you git somebody else to back 'em, that will be different."

The discovery that he could borrow no more came at a particularly awkward moment for Jack. The night before he had been playing pretty high, and losing pretty heavily. He had no money in hand to pay his losses, which by the rules of the club, had to be paid within three days. He had never doubted, however, but Morcashi would advance him the necessary funds. His honor and bewilderment when he discovered his mistake may be imagined. For nothing short of absolute ruin stared him in the face. His own means were all gone; every security he owned was pledged for its full value. All he now possessed were his allowance and his expectations from his wealthy old uncle, Gen. Trumper. Now Gen. Trumper, though kindly and generous in his way, was a man of furious temper and fierce antipathies. Unfortunately for Jack, one of the fiercest of his antipathies was against gambling and gamblers. Jack knew his uncle well, and he felt no doubt that if he were posted at his club as a defaulter, from that moment his uncle would repudiate him absolutely and forever.

At any cost and in any way, then, he must find £800 within three days. He applied to friend after friend. Those who could lend him that sum would not, and those who would could not. The situation was desperate.

Almost hopeless, he as a last resource applied to Tom Wilde. Wilde was a kindly, dissipated fellow, whom Jack had once saved from a terrible disgrace, and Wilde had not forgotten that service.

"Jack," Wilde said, when Jack had stated to him his business, "I can't lend you the money because I haven't it, and my name's not worth twopence. But my father remembers what you once did for me, and perhaps I could induce him to back a bill for you."

"If you can, Tom," cried Jack, "I swear he'll never be called on for a penny."

A note for £1000 payable at 12 months was drawn by Jack. Wilde took it with him, and the next morning handed it to Jack. It was duly backed by Tom's father.

Mr. Wilde's name was good for £10,000. Morcashi discounted the note—taking 20 per cent for the service—without hesitation. Jack was saved. A fortnight later his savior, poor kindly, hopeless, reckless Tom Wilde, fell dead.

From that moment Jack was an altered man. His friend's sudden end, his own narrow escape from ruin, had sobered him. He resolved to free himself from his present entanglement, to pay his debts, and to live for something worthier than pleasure.

He set earnestly to work at his profession and at the same time set about arranging his affairs. In both occupations he succeeded fairly well. A little practice came to him, and by a judicious use of the money it brought and of his uncle's allowance, and by the sale of what remained of his property, he contrived to meet his notes and bills as they became due. At last, at the end of 12 months nothing remained to pay except the note backed by Mr. Wilde, and he had money in hand to pay that.

With a light heart he went to Morcashi's office.

"I have called to take up that note, Morcashi," he said.

"Oh, have you?" answered Morcashi in a tone so sinister that it made Jack start.

"'Ow much is it? £10,000, I think?"

"One thousand pounds," replied Jack, nervously.

"Oh, no, it's £10,000," said Morchashi, as he took the note out of the safe and looked at it. "Though," he added, with a leer, "I see you 'ave forgot one of the noughts."

"What do you mean?" demanded Jack, angrily, while a feeling of impending evil made his heart tremble within him.

"Mean, Mr. Trumper?" repeated the money lender. "Mean? I mean you'll have to pay what I like or go to goal! This indorsement's forged!"

For a moment Jack stood in silence, confused and amazed. Then the truth dawned upon him. Tom Wilde had failed to get his father's indorsement on the note. Anxious to help his friend, he had forged Mr. Wilde's name!

As soon as the facts flashed on Jack's mind he saw the full horror of his situation. He had uttered this forged note. To all appearance, too, he had forged it. If he were charged with the forgery, not the slightest evidence could he recall to rebut the presumption against him. Even if Tom Wilde would have been willing to save him, he was dead!

Morcashi had him in his grasp. It was useless to try to explain to him or to appeal to his pity. Whatever terms that scoundrel proposed he must accept.

"Now, Mr. Trumper," the money lender went on, you see 'ow it is? Well, I don't want to be 'arsh—not me. What do you say to £1000 in hand and your note for £4000 payable in 12 months? That's better than penal servitude, eh?"

Jack reflected for a moment.

"I never forged the note," he said, "but give me a pen."

Ten minutes later Morcahi gave a receipt for £1000 and took a promissory note for £4000, payable at 12 months. He handed Jack in return the forged document. Jack stepped over to the fireplace and burnt it. Then he turned to the money lender—the flame of the burning paper seemed somehow to have got into his eyes.

"You miserable ruffian!" he cried. "I'll be even with you yet!"

Before the 12 months of the note had elapsed, old Gen. Trumper had died, and under his will Jack came in for a fortune of nearly £80,000. He duly met the bill, and sobered effectually by the lesson it had taught him, formed after his first disaster, and worked hard at his profession.

Aided by his large fortune, his progress was rapid. He rose steadily, until at length his position at the bar was recognized by his party. He was made solicitor-general. As he read the patent of his appointment, one fact gave him a shock. He noticed that it was dated on the 30th anniversary of the day on which he had uttered a forged note!

He thought of Morcashi. He had lost sight of that man for years. Where was he now, and would he ever have a chance of being even with him?

It so happened that, at this very moment, this same Morcashi was nearer Sir John Trumper than he imagined. While the solicitor-general was receiving the congratulations of his friends, Morcashi was drawing a fresh victim into his net, and that fresh victim was none other than the new solicitor general's eldest son.

Young Charlie Trumper was just 23. He was extremely like his father in person, manners and mind. Unfortunately, he displayed similar tastes to those which so nearly ruined his father when he was about the same age; he was recklessly extravagant in his ways, and was, moreover, addicted to gambling. Though his allowance was much larger than the income his father had possessed as a youth, yet his expenses and losses were proportionally heavier, and he, like his father, soon found himself forced to resort to the money lender. The money lender he happened upon was none other than the evil genius of his father's youth, Moses Morcashi.

Morcashi treated him as he had treated his father, advanced money to him freely, and encouraged him in his extavagant ways, until the young fellow was over head and ears in debt. Then he suddenly stopped supplies and demanded repayment.

Charlie Trumper was dumfounded.

"Why, man," he exclaimed, "I can't pay you!"

"Well, then, go to your father," answered the money lender, "and ask him to pay your legal debts."

"I can't," said Charlie.

"You must," replied Morcashi. "If you don't, I'll make you bankrupt, and disgrace both you and him."

The young man reflected in silence for some minutes.

"You have given me a lot of bad advice in your time, Morcashi," he said, at last, "but you have given me a little good advice at last. I will go to my father and confess everything. Please God, I'll never be in any such a mess as this again." And without another word the young man rose to his feet and left the money-lender's office.

Two days later Mr. Morcraft, Sir John Trumper's solicitor, called on Morcashi to make inquiries as to the amount of Charlie Trumper's debts. When he found that these came to nearly £10,000, he expressed doubts whether Sir John would pay them.

Sir John, however, proved more yielding than Mr. Morcraft expected. As Charlie had promised reformation, he wished to give him a fair chance. He was willing to repay Morcashi all the money he had actually advanced to the young man, with 5 per cent interest. If Morcashi did not choose to accept those terms, he could take what steps he chose.

Morcashi was furious. He raged and threatened, but it was all no use. Sir John Trumper and his solicitor treated his ravings with contempt. They knew he must accept the offer. If he refused it and made Charlie a bankrupt, he would only lose his money, and expose himself. And accept it he did. "But great man as Sir John is now," he said, as he pocketed the check, "I'll make him repeat this dirty trick."

"Mr. Morcashi," replied the solicitor, quietly, "Sir John directed me to warn you that, on no account whatever, will he again repay you a shilling lent to his son."

"Oh, I thought his son had reformed?" answered Mr. Morcashi, with a sneer. "Sir John can't have much faith in his reformation when he thinks it necessary to send such cautions as that."

Perhaps the money lender was not so far wrong. Within three months after this interview who should come into Mr. Morcashi's office but Charlie Trumper.

"What, back again?" cried the money lender.

"Yes," answered the lad, a bit shamefaced, "I want some money."

"How much?"

"Ten thousand pounds."

"The money lender gasped!

"Ten thousand pounds!" he exclaimed. "That's your idea of reformation, is it? Ho, ho. And you think I'm such a blamed fool as to lend it to you after the way I was chiselled last time?"

"I must have the money at once," was all Charlie Trumper replied.

"Oh, you're in a hole, are you? Well, look 'ere. I wouldn't lend you a sixpence." The money lender paused for a moment. Then he continued speaking very deliberately and watching the youth's face keenly. "But if you got somebody to back it of course that would be different."

Charlie started slightly and reflected for a moment.

"I must have the money," he said.

"Well, get somebody to back your bill."

"I'll try," answered Charlie, as he rose and left the office.

"By great Scott!" cried the money lender when the door had closed. "That boy is his father's son! If he doesn't do it I'm a greenhorn. Then I'll squeeze Sir John in earnest."

The very next morning young Charlie Trumper arrived at Morcashi's office. He handed the money lender a note. It was for £12,000, payable at three months. It purported to be backed by Sir John Trumper. Without a moment's hesitation Morcashi drew a check for £10,000 and handed it to Charlie, who pocketed it hurriedly and left the office.

"Now I have him!" muttered the money lender exultingly.

A month later—he was too impatient for his revenge to wait longer—Morcashi called at the solicitor-general's chambers and demanded an interview with Sir John. He was shown in. Sir John looked anything but amiable.

"Well, what do you want?" he asked in stern tones.

"I want to speak to you about a note of your son's," replied Mr. Morcashi.

"Oh, he has been with you again, has he?" said Sir John, looking blacker than ever.

"Yes, a month ago he borrowed £10,000 from me on a note for £12,000, which purported to be endorsed by you."

"By me! Oh, indeed. Well?" Sir John's face was furious, though his voice was calm.

"Well—well—"continued themoney lender feeling strangely nervous. "Well, from inquiries I have made, I believe your indorsement is a forgery."

"In that case the note's not worth much, eh?" answered Sir John in an ominous tone.

"I—I don't understand you," stammered Morcashi.

"Well, I mean if my indorsement is a forgery, you'll have some difficulty in getting your money. It's a pity you did not make your inquiries before you took the note."

"But surely you'll pay it, for the credit of your son?" said Morcashi in amazement.

"Look here, Mr. Morcashi! let us understand one another. You took this note believing my indorsement to be a forgery; you took it after I had expressly told you I should pay no more of his debts. Under these circumstances I feel no obligation to meet the note nor pity for you, if you lose your money. You can do as you like."

"Good heavens! sir, surely you'll pay something to save your eldest son from a conviction for forgery?" cried Morcashi in agonized tones. The prospect of having to compensate himself for the loss of £10,000 by prosecuting his debtor for forgery was the reverse of attractive.

The solicitor-general reflected for a moment.

"Well," he then said, "perhaps I would, though I can't say I feel bound to do so. He promised me never to gamble or to get into debt again; and so if he has broken his pledge he has no right to complain if I refuse to help him. Still, it would be disagreeable to see him in the dock. Let me see, now. Well, I'll give you £2000 for the note."

"Two thousand!" exclaimed Morcashi. "Only £2000 for a note I advanced £10,000 upon!"

"Yes; it's not good business, I admit," cried Sir John, quietly, "but it's better than nothing at all."

"I won't take it!" cried Morcashi.

"Oh, very well! But, perhaps, you had better consider it. I'll give you two days to decide. You'll excuse me now—I'm very busy. Good morning—that's the way out."

And this was his revenge! How Morgashi gnashed his teeth and swore vengeance against all the Trumpers, past, present, and to come! What a miserable two days those were! Over and over again he resolved to reject the £2000 and prosecute, and over and over again he reconsidered his resolution. Prosecution would be sweet; but was it worth £2000? He had lost £8000 already; the prospect of losing £2000 more was more than he could bear.

On the second day after his interview with Sir John he again sought the solicitor general's chambers. Ah, what a change had come over him since then! Then he was confident and elated at the prospect of wringing money from his adversary. Now he had come to capitulate and ask easier terms.

"Well?" demanded Sir John. "Will you accept my offer?"

"Couldn't you say £1000, Sir John?" asked Morcashi, in humble terms.

"Not a shilling more will I give. Now, what's your answer? I have no time to lose.

"Well, I suppose I must accept it, but it's a gross fraud."

"Don't talk to me of fraud, you blood sucker," replied Sir John, contemptuously, as he took out his check book and drew a check for £2000.

A minute later the note was handed to Sir John, who gave Morcashi the check Morcashi then rose to go.

"By the way, Morcashi," said Sir John, "you remember how you defrauded me out of £4000 over an affair like this?"

"Oh, yes, you, like your son, were a forger in your time," replied the money lender, angrily.

"Now, it strikes me that the £8000 you have lost over this affair just about covers that £4000, with 4 per cent interest since you extorted it."

"Eh?" said the money lender with a curious look on his face.

"Ay, isn't it funny?" the solicitor-general went on. "I told you at the time that I'd be even with you. And so I am. I haven't lost in the end over that transaction."

"What do you mean?" I don't understand you?" cried Morcashi, excitedly. He felt he had been tricked in some way or other.

"Oh, merely this—that my son borrowed the £10,000 for me!"

"Do you mean to say that your indorsement was not forged?" screamed the money lender.

"Most certainly not," replied the solicitor-general, genially. "Your 'inquiries' must have misled you. Good morning."—From London Truth.

SOMETHING FOR OUR BOYS.

Boys, read this over two or three times, then cut it out and fasten it up in your room, or where you will be sure to see it every morning and every night. You will soon find it so fixed in your mind that it will always remain there. It might be the means of making just such a man as the twentieth century calls for. It may help you in time of temptation to say "No." A MOTHER.

BOY'S PLEDGE.

I pledge my brain God's thoughts to think;
My lips no fire or foam to drink
From alcoholic cup; nor link
With my pure breath tobacco's taint.

For have I not a right to be
As wholesome and as pure as she
Who, through the years so glad and free,
Moves gently onward to meet me?—
A knight of the New Chivalry
Of Christ and temperance I would be,
In nineteen hundred, come and see.

DID THEIR OWN REACHING.—The servant question, though a decidedly vexatious one, has still its humorous side that brightens up the gloom of the more sombre incidentals. A friend of the writer, desiring a waitress, advertised for the same, and many and varied were the applicants for the place. Out of the lot a pretty, neat-looking girl was selected, and the employer, to be sure, resolved to question her:—

"And so you want to be a waitress?"

"Yis, ma'am."

"Do you understand the duties of such a position?"

"I do, ma'am."

"Have you ever waited on the table?"

"No, ma'm. The last family where I wurked did their own 'rachin',' but I think I could learn."

It is unnecessary to add that the young person from the place where they did their own "reaching" was not employed.—Philadelphia Times.

A SHREWD BUT SLEEPY DOG.—A dog who usually accompanied his master on evening visits to the house of a friend fell asleep there one night and was forgotten. Long after his owner had gone the sleepy fellow awoke to find himself alone and in the dark. The door was shut and locked, and the family asleep in other rooms, so his whining was not noticed. Though the windows were closed, one blind was open and the dog, determining to go home, leaped through the window, breaking the glass and sash as he went.

Some time after he was spending the evening with his master in the same house and, as before, he went to sleep, but not in the usual place. When his owner prepared to leave, his hat and cane were missing. A search showed not only the missing articles, but something else. The cane and hat had been taken from the rack and lay on the floor, while by their side rested the sleeping dog. But one paw was in the hat and the other across the cane. He did not mean to be left again, and he wasn't.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins attended at Springfield Wednesday the ordination and installation of Harry Meserve as pastor of Faith Chapel, being a member of the council.

Miss Mary Mason has been taking a vacation from duty at the Western Union telegraph office for a week, and the wires have been in charge of J. W. Gay of Winchendon.

The Eaton Club will hold a business meeting, for the reception of new members and for the selection of a baptismal font, in the ladies parlor of the Universalist church next Monday evening after the Lenten service.

District Deputy Smith of Warren was to have paid an official visit to Quaboag council of the Royal Arcanum next Tuesday evening, but has had the misfortune to break his leg, and the visitation will be made by Judge George Robinson of Palmer.

The registrars of voters finished their work for the town election Wednesday night, adding 28 names to the list. Several new names had been added before, but enough had been crossed off to keep the number of voters about the same as at the election last fall.

The closing meeting of the no-license campaign will be held in the Congregational church Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. It will be a union meeting. The committee has been fortunate in securing Volney B. Cushing of Maine to give the address. Everybody is invited.

G. W. Lyman has withdrawn as the Democratic candidate for tax collector, and Democrats who are interested in the outcome of the election offered the nomination to G. M. Atkins, but he declined, as he is not voting the ticket of the party which wished to nominate him.

The annual meeting of the Palmer Cemetery Association was postponed from Monday evening of this week to Tuesday evening of next week, when it will be held in the district court room, and all persons who are interested in the cemeteries of the town, and the one in this village in particular, are requested to be present.

About 250 men gathered at the court room Tuesday evening to hear John H. Watson, ex-president of he Essex County Catholic Total Abstinence Union, speak on "License or No License." The speaker handled his subject in a masterly manner, and greatly interested his hearers. Wednesday evening he spoke to a large audience at Thorndike.

A manufacturer of Palmer who has had some trouble with his men patronizing the saloons too freely, thinks that if all manufacturers would do as he does the question of the saloon would soon be settled, as far as that community is concerned. He simply lets the men who wish to patronize the saloon go, and gets others who do not.

In the district court last Saturday these civil cases were entered: Wyman Holmes of Palmer against O. W. Studley of Palmer, action of tort; Vaccari Giovanni of Palmer against George E. Leadbetter of Ludlow, action of contract. In the criminal court Monday Robert Conners paid $5 for drunkenness, while John Griffin and Patrick Rourke paid $10 each.

The fourth recital by the pupils of Mrs. Auger at the residence of E. G. Hastings will be given next Friday at 3.30. They will be assisted in vocal selections by Miss Moffatt, and Master Albert Shaw will play a piccolo solo; beside juvenile work there will be several selections of old Scotch ballads arranged for the piano. All interested in music are cordially invited.

The birthday of Neal Dow, the temperance advocate, will be celebrated next Tuesday evening in the social rooms of the Congregational church under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Beginning at 7.30 there will be several short addresses by interesting speakers. Vocal music will be rendered by Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Campbell, and a social will follow. Everyone is invited.

The Ladies' Social Union of the Universalist church held an "Orange Tea" Wednesday evening, which was followed by an entertainment by the Eaton Club, consisting of vocal and instrumental solos, a fan drill, and "The Family Album" by Miss Newell of Springfield. The supper and entertainment was largely attended, and the societies cleared $37.

Next Sunday being Palm Sunday, the pastor of the Congregational church will give a sermon in the morning appropriate to the day. The subject will be "A Royal Welcome and a Royal Work." Instead of the usual prayer-meeting next Thursday evening the pastor will give a sermon on "The Greatest Week in the History of the World." This will be the only Passion Week service in this church this year.

Miss Tillie Lacouline, telegraph operator for the New London Northern road, was badly frightened Monday evening as she was on her way home from the station about 8 o'clock. At the corner of Main and Church streets she was seized by an unknown man, but broke away and ran into the bakery. Mr. Bard, the proprietor, started in pursuit of the fellow, but was unable to find him.

Charles Upham, who formerly lived on the farm now owned by L. E. Moore, died at his home on the Ware road Monday, of heart failure. Mr. Upham was a Past Commander of L. L. Merrick post of the Grand Army, Past Grand of Palmer lodge of Odd Fellows, and a member of Thomas lodge of Masons. The funeral was held at the house yesterday, the burial being at Warren, which was attended by a delegation from the Odd Fellows.

A man who has been in town a couple of weeks under the name of Guttierrz, attempting to sell horses, was arrested Wednesday night for lewd cohabitation. The woman in the case had left town in the morning. It seems that she is a state charge, and Boston officers were looking for her. Guttierrz claimed to have found her in Taunton, in a house of ill-fame, and said she had been with him since last October. She claims a home in Danbury, Ct., and goes by the name of Bessie Barlow.

Rev. H. W. Pope of Somersworth, N. H., a former pastor of the Congregational church here, resigned his pastorate at that place on the 4th of this month, having accepted a position as assistant secretary of the International Christian Workers' Association, with headquarters at New Haven. His resignation takes effect the first of April. The Somersworth Free Press says that the resignation was a great surprise to the people of the church, among whom he has made hosts of warm friends during his stay in the city, as well as many outside of church circles, all of whom will deeply regret his departure from that place.

Palm Sunday will be observed at St. Paul's church Sunday, Rev. H. F. Moulton will preach on "The Triumphal Entry," and the church will be decorated appropriately. There will be special Lenten services evenings next week, as follows: Monday at 7, praise service and preaching by Rev. Marion Crosley of Springfield; Tuesday at 7, prayer service and preaching by Rev. Harry Holden of Amherst; Wednesday at 7, experience service and preaching by Rev. Harry Blackford of Monson; Thursday at 7, consecration service and preaching by Rev. W. W. Gleason; Friday at 7.30, preaching by the pastor, and communion; Saturday at 8, home hour for private meditations and prayer.

Thomas Blanchard and D. F. Holden have returned from a trip to northern New York, having purchased the stallion "Success," with a two-years record of 2.45, being a full brother of "Caddie Stout," winner of 2-years-old stakes in Rutland, Vt., Chatham and Hudson, N. Y., and Pittsfield, Mass.; also obtaining second place at the New England Breeders meeting, all in 1893. Both were sired by Alcone, son of Aleyone, two of whose get obtained 4-years-old records better than 2.23 in 1893, they being his oldest colts. The dam of Success and Caddie Stout is D. F. Holden's beautiful black mare "Tempa Stout."

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. McGregory entertained a small party of friends at their home on Squier street Tuesday evening. Whist was in order, there being seven tables, and light refreshments were served. There were present Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Wilkins, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Stone, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Small, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Flynt, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Converse, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Hellyar, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Chandler, Miss Abbie Wallace, Miss Anna Shaw, Miss Hattie Blanchard, Miss Julia Cook, C. G. Gardner, N. W. Chandler and G. A. Adams of Palmer, Miss Emily Tucker of Springfield, Miss T. P. Powers of Cummington, Miss Mabel Tillson and Mr. Fred Tillson of Chicago, Ill.

A special train carried the Republicans to the caucus at the town house last Friday evening, where they found a goodly number from the other villages. Dr. William Holbrook was chosen chairman and F. A. Ruggles secretary. A motion was made to nominate the old board of selectmen by acclamation, but this was voted down, and a committee of 10 appointed by the chair to bring in a list of candidates, which they did as follows: For selectmen, C. E. Getchell, H. P. Holden, J. F. Twiss; assessors, John O. Hamilton, O. W. Studley, C. P. Haynes; school committee for three years, Lewis R. Holden, F. A. Ruggles; town clerk and treasurer, J. B. Shaw; board of health, Dr. W. H. Bliss, Dr. William Holbrook, Dr. H. A. Smith; tax collector, W. A. Weld; auditors, S. H. Hellyar, F. A. Upham; constables, Michael Collins, F. W. Lavine, Horace Stimson, O. W. Studley, Martin Thomas; fence viewers, A. E. Fitch, C. S. Smith, Horace Stimson. A motion was at once made that the selectmen be balloted for separately, and carried. Mr. Getchell received not a dissenting voice, Mr. Holden had a few against him, but the most opposition was against Mr. Twiss, though it represented only a small portion of the caucus. Combined, there were enough opponents of Messes. Holden and Twiss to prevent the nomination of the old board by acclamation, but neither faction was individually strong enough to carry its point.

P. M. Wellman and Mrs. Annie M. Howland were arrested about three o'clock Tuesday morning for adultery, and at the hearing pleaded not guilty, being bound over in the sum of $800 each, which was furnished. By this raid a most disreputable place has been broken up. The woman had rooms on the first floor of the old Converse house on the corner of Thorndike and Pleasant streets, her husband being an express messenger on the New London Northern road, and his runs being so arranged that he was rarely at home. For months the rooms have been the resort of a number of young fellows about town, and from other towns. Drunken carousals were frequent, often being carried on a large part of the night, greatly to the annoyance of the respectable occupants of the house, which is divided into several tenements. These were carried on so openly that the authorities were complained too, and Deputy Sheriff Studley went to work on the case. He spent a couple of nights in the house, and easily found enough to carry conviction against the arrested parties. Wellman was an almost nightly attendant, and when the door was broken in Tuesday morning the couple were occupying the same bed. Wellman managed to slip past the officer and get out of doors clad only in an undershirt. The officer caught him in front of G. F. Sedgwick's house, and in the struggle the undershirt was left with the sheriff, Wellman making good time for his home on Fox avenue clad in nature's robes. He was arrested there later, and spent the rest of the night in the lock-up.

Mr. Editor:—In regard to the license question which has been so much discussed in your columns, allow me to say that mere statements are not facts, no matter how good the intention or earnest the purposes of the gentleman who makes them. The citizens of Palmer need no outside arguments. They have tried both license and no-license, and hold license the better method, aside from the great financial help the town receives in license years. The neighboring town of Westfield has tried no-licenee one year, and votes license this year by a large majority—Easthampton has tried no-license three years, and now adopts the licenese plan. It was not suprising to see in your columns last week that so fair-minded a temperance worker as the Rev. F. N. Knight of Springfield has found the usual methods of fighting the liquor evil a failure. The past year under license in Palmer has resulted in low taxes and good order, no-license would mean high taxes and confusion. Theory and speculation do well enough for a time, in religious matters, but in town business we should profit by the lessons of practical experience. Most of the intoxicants sold in Palmer are consumed by those who do not live in town. No-license does not stop drinking; it is a good plan to control that which cannot be stopped. CITIZEN.

A Brief Summing Up.

To the Citizens of Palmer:—For the past few weeks the question of license or no license has been under discussion in our town, and next Monday the decision will be made. The no-license campaign has been carried on under the direction of committees of business men in our town in an honest, straightforward manner, leaving nothing to be ashamed of, whatever may be the vote.

Of course every true citizen will vote for what he conscientiously believes to be for the best interests of the town, financial and moral. In coming to the final decision on the license question, let every citizen take into account the following facts:

1. Our saloons cost the town a great sum of money, as has been abundantly shown in the JOURNAL and in public meetings. (1) The money to sustain them and to give the saloon keepers their large profits comes from the people, and from those generally the least able to pay it. Indirectly the women and children pay it by going without proper food and clothing, because the one who should provide there things spends his money in the saloons. (2) From 80 to 90 per cent of all expenses for crime and pauperism is caused by the saloons, as all town and state records overwhelmingly prove. According to an abstract of town reports published in the JOURNAL of March 2, the cost of the poor in this town for the past year has been $6674.58. Of this, according to the chairman of the overseers of the poor, $8277 was the direct result of the saloons. If you add to this the cost of crime produced by the saloons, you have much more than wiped out the $7650 received from them. (3) In scores of other ways the saloons are a drain upon the town and upon every business enterprise in it.

2. The saloons prevent the growth of Palmer. This, too, has been clearly proved. (1) We are known as a rum town far and near, and this gives us a bad name generally. The stranger who comes here sees rum at work, and can come to no other conclusion than that rum reigns here unchecked. (2) At least one firm has withdrawn from Palmer because of its saloons. (3) Several business men here testify that they know personally of manufacturing firms that have considered Palmer as a place for the location of their business who have gone elsewhere, giving as their reason that they could not afford to locate in a town so full of rum. (4) The general rum reputation has prevented others from even investigating Palmer's advantages. (5) The trend is against the saloons. In all the towns and cities of this state, only 70 are now license towns.

These are facts, and every true friend of Palmer will face them and help to redeem Palmer's reputation and to give her the chance for growth which her natural advantages would warrant.

3. The saloons make every home in Palmer unsafe. What would any father in Palmer sell his boy into slavery for? But the saloon is here to lead him to a slavery of body, mind and soul. On an average one boy out of every five is made a drunkard by the saloons. No boy in Palmer is safe as long as the saloons stand open. Who dares to vote against the boys? And to vote against the girls too, for no one knows that his daughter may not find herself the wife of a drunkard. Every vote for the licensed saloon is a vote against every child and every home in Palmer.

4. Every argument that we cannot enforce no-license is an argument against democratic government. It is saying that we are so under the dominion of rum that we are not a free people; that rum is our absolute master. It will pay us a little for its rule and ruin, if we say so, but rule and ruin it will, whether or no. Fellow citizens of Palmer, shall we stand such nonsense any longer? Will we admit that we are absolutely and forever paralyzed by rum? That is the assertion of every argument in this line. Please consider also the following facts: (1). The sentiment in Palmer is changing, and an aroused sentiment will refuse to be ruled by rum in helpless and hopeless weakness. (2). The temperance men of this town, regardless of party affiliations, are united on the policy of no-license and in the determination to enforce the law when secured. (3). The town at its coming meeting can make arrangements to enforce the law which will be effective. It has been done in other towns, and it can be here. (4). The laws are being studied in this town, and by May 1 there will not be a law on this subject which will not be known for immediate use. There are methods of catching foxes in flower gardens, and other beasts of like nature, that have not been used here. These are on Palmer, and which have been overlooked. (5) As soon as the vote is decided organization will begin for the purpose of making the vote effective. This is an important point to remember. This movement will not spend itself on a no-license vote alone. It is a comprehensive movement for the redemption of Palmer, and for making it the most attractive place in all this region for a home. Friends and voters of Palmer, vote for your homes and for your town; vote with your intellect, conscience and heart; let April 30, 1894, be the last day of licensed saloons in Palmer forever! In the name of all that is good.

FRANK E. JENKINS.

State Primary School Notes.

Dr. Woodbury of Boston visited the school yesterday.

C. F. Leonard of North Easton visited his sister, Miss Jennie Leonard, on Tuesday.

Miss Florence Richardson of Gilbertville is spending a few days with her sister, Miss Fannie L. Richardson.

Miss Crowdis received a telegram Wednesday morning containing the sad news of the death of her mother.

E. G. Buss is soon to vacate the tenement he has occupied for some time, and W. G. Cameron, engineer, will be the future occupant.

PALMER CENTER.

Mrs. F. L. Snow has been quite sick this week, but is gaining.

Mrs. P. S. Trumble entertained a large party of friends at an apron and necktie party Tuesday evening.

Richard Wright is to build an addition on his house of 12 feet toward the road, and raise the main roof, making the house two stories high.

BONDSVILLE.

Dannie Sullivan of Amherst College spent Sunday with his parents.

Michael Austin of Troy, N. Y., is visiting his parents for a few weeks.

The W. C. T. U. met with Mrs. George Aldrich Thursday afternoon.

Lewis Holden has moved from the Landers Block into R. L. Bond's house.

Mrs. Alphonse Recisco and daughter are visiting friands in Northampton for a few weeks.

The Book Club will have an entertainment at Mrs. C. E. Getchell's next Wednesday night.

Misses Mamie Sullivan, Maggie Thomas and Bridget Kerz spent Sunday with friends in Wilbraham.

Mrs. Macomber and daughter of Northampton spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse Recisco.

The many friends of Miss Mary Donovan will be pleased to learn that she is slowly regaining her health.

P. Moriarty and Michael Bowler went to Boston Tuesday. Mr. Bowler has gone to the hospital to be treated.

The Lenten sermon last Thursday evening at St. Bartholomew's church was preached by Father Griffin of Southbridge.

Miss Mary Flaherty died at her home last Thursday, and was buried Saturday morning from St. Bartholomew's church.

The Tuesday Afternoon Ladies' Whist Club was entertained by Mrs. M. N. Ives at the residence of John Gegenheimer.

The Junior Epworth League had a conundrum supper, with an entertainment Wednesday night, and netted about $5.

The mill commenced to run on short time Monday, the help going in at 8 o'clock and out at half past four p. m., four days a week.

Miss Margaret Landers will have her millinery opening next Tuesday. The latest creations of fashion, direct from New York, will be offered for approval.

Mrs. J. B. Belcher, who has been visiting her brother, W. O'Regan, and sister, Mrs. F. H. Carroll, the last four weeks, returned to her home in Chicopee Thursday.

THORNDIKE.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hughes of Monson paid a short visit to friends in town on Monday.

Rev. F. J. Hale of Bondsville will speak in the Congregational church next Sabbath morning.

It is said that the Thorndike Co., is to build a new storehouse at the upper end of the village.

Misses Katie and Nellie Evans have gone to Exeter, N. H., to resume their work in the millinery business.

Mrs. P. Brothers of Westfield returned to her home on Tuesday, after spending a vacation with friends in this place.

Miss Katie McCarty is attending the millinery openings at New York city, and upon her return will resume duties at Woonsocket, R. I.

The St. Mary's Temperance Society has decided not to give the entertainment and dance announced for after Lent, and has postponed it indefinitely.

The mills started Monday on the new schedule of 7½ hours per day for only five days in the week. A few French families have left for Canada on account of the change.

A young son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bonville, about 8 years of age, fell while descending the steps which lead to the schoolroom at the upper end of the village, and struck his side on the sharp corner of the step, causing internal injures from which he is not likely to recover.

The Ladies' Society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. E. B. Blanchard on Tuesday afternoon and evening, and the house was well filled. Refreshments were served early in the evening, after which A. B. C. Deming, in behalf of the friends of the pastor, presented to him a box containing a very generous sum of money. In response the pastor expressed his hearty thanks for their kindness, and wished them all a pleasant evening.

Mr. John H. Watson of Boston spoke on temperance at Union Hall Wednesday evening before one of the largest audiences of the season. The speaker gave one of the most forcible and interesting talks on the subject that has been given in this town. His audience was most attentive, and his talk has had great effect, and if the citizens of the village could decide it, there would be no licenses in this town the coming year. Capt H. E. W. Clark presided, and upon the stage were C. H. Hobbs, C. E. Getchell, and others. The meeting was a success, and much good will be the result.

THREE RIVERS.

A. W. Edson, agent of the State Board of Education, visited the schools in this village Wednesday.

John Harrington, an old and respected citizen, who has been in failing health for quite a while, was buried Saturday.

Prof. Lee of Jewett City visited Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Holt the first of the week.

Miss Cora Morse of Belchertown, who has been stopping at Mr. Percy's for several weeks, returned to her home yesterday.

Rev. G. S. Butler is not expected home until next week Thursday. The pulpit at the Union church will be filled next Sunday by Rev. Hollis Jordan.

Mrs. St. Martin of Boston is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lavene. Her sister Rose of Lowell will join her here next week, when she will go to her home in Canada.

Messrs. F. A. and C. S. Ruggles speared 61 fish in a little while the other evening in the river. At this season, with the water so high and muddy, this is an excellent catch.

Miss Annie Crane goes to-morrow to her home in Hanover to spend her vacation. Miss Walker will go to Belchertown, and Mr. Adams the first of the week to Winchendon.

At the last meeting of the Monday Evening Club the following officers were elected: President, Miss Clara Green; vice president, Miss Cora Clark; secretary and treasurer, Miss Annie Crane.

Rev. Mr. Weeks has organized a Bible class, to meet Tuesday and Thursday afternoons in the vestry of the Baptist church for the study of "Dispensational Truth," to which everybody is welcome.

Friends and neighbors gave Mrs. Frank Lavene a surprise party Wednesday evening in honor of her birthday. A very pleasant evening with games and refreshments was passed, and the party broke up at a late hour, all wishing her many happy returns of the day.

With the mill only running forenoons, it is probable there will be a large attendance at town meeting next Monday. Several articles of the warrant are being discussed quite freely on the street, and the indications are that a large vote will be cast from this village.

Next Sunday evening there will be a special temperance service at the Baptist church. Rev. Mr. Weeks will take for his subject "The Voter's Three-fold Responsibility." It is expected that there will be a large audience to hear this subject, as quite a good deal of interest is being shown this year on this question.

The schools closed to-day for a three-weeks' vacation. The following pupils have been perfect in attendance through the term, which has been fourteen weeks: Grammar—Delia Lane, Nora Lane, Matilda Magee, Omer Camerlin; intermediate—Mabel Russell, Minnie Kuss, Delia O'Connor, Nelson Freak, James Doyle; third primary—Lilla Ives, John O'Connor; second primary—Maggie Chambers, Vina Freak, Albertine Pleau, Timothy Doyle, Georgie Gokey; first primary—Mabel Collins, Henry Fredette.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPERIOR COURT, in and for the County of Hampshire.

Humbly shews George A. Blish of Granby, in said county, that he was lawfully married to Anna J. McKernan, now resident in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at Chicopee, Massachusetts, on March twenty-fourth, A. D. 1875, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in Granby aforesaid, and he has ever conducted towards her as a faithful, chaste, and affectionate husband, yet the said Anna J., regardless of her marriage vows and obligations, on or about the eleventh day of June, A. D. 1884, at Granby aforesaid, utterly deserted him and has continued her up to the date of filing this libel, a period of more than three consecutive years.

Wherefore he prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between him and the said Anna J. Blish may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.
GEORGE A. BLISH.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS — HAMPSHIRE, ss. Superior Court at Northampton. February 27th, A. D. 1894.
ON THE LIBEL aforesaid, it is Ordered, that the Libellant notify the said Anna J. Blish to appear before our Justices of the Superior Court, at our Clerk's office at Northampton, within our said County of Hampshire, on the First MONDAY of April next, by publishing an attested copy of said Libel, and this Order, once a week, three weeks successively, in the Ware Standard, a newspaper published in Ware, in said county, the last publication to be fourteen days at least, before said First MONDAY of April next; also, by causing an attested copy of said Libel and Order to be sent by letter, registered if practicable, to the last known residence of the Libellee, fourteen days at least before said First Monday of April next; that he may then and there show cause why the prayer of said Libel should not be granted.
Attest: WM. H. CLAPP, Clerk.
A copy of the Libel, and Order of Notice.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.
Under and by virtue of a mortgage of real estate given by Almina Lamerine of Palmer, county of Hampden and commonwealth of Massachusetts, to Celestian Lascerbo of Dana, in the county of Worcester, dated November 25th, A. D. 1892, and recorded with Hampden county registry of deeds, book 495, page 491, and by said Celestian Lascerbo assigned to A. La Cross of said Palmer by assignment dated September 25th, 1893, and recorded with same registry, book 513, page 329, and for a breach of the conditions thereof, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction on the premises hereinafter described, on Monday, the ninth day of April next, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, the real estate described in said mortgage, as follows, to wit: A certain tract of land, with the buildings thereon and all the rights, privileges and appurtenances thereto, situate in said Palmer, and bounded and described as follows, to wit: Bounded on the south by land of P. P. Potter, on the east by land of Henry Burr, on the north by land of William Talmadge, and on the west by the Chicopee River, containing one hundred and eighteen acres, more or less, being the same premises conveyed to me (Almina Lamerine) by William Sanford, by deed recorded with Hampden county registry of deeds.

Said premises will be sold subject to a mortgage to the Palmer Savings Bank to secure the sum of four hundred dollars, and subject to all unpaid taxes thereon. A. LA CROSS.
By S. S. TAFT, his Att'y.

The Dancing Class Gives a Reception.

The event of the season occurred Tuesday evening in Memorial Hall. It was the occasion of the grand finale of the dancing class, and consisted of an exhibition German and College Lanciers, after which the audience was invited to help dance out a short list of dances. The class, consisting of about 30 couples, has been for the past season under the skilful direction of Miss Helen Filer of Springfield. Prof. Jacobs of the Springfield Philharmonic Orchestra played the piano in a most acceptable manner. The center of the hall was cleared and the seats were arranged on the sides, forming a hollow square. The leaders of the German were Robert H. Cushman and Miss Mabel K. Flynt. The first of the exhibition dances, the German, proved a delightful diverson. It consisted of three figures, the first being the favor, and was executed as follows: Three couples were chosen leaders and a short waltz was danced; at a signal from the leaders the dancing ceased and the four couples promenaded to the flower table, where each one received a flower which they bestowed on some one of the class, who in turn chose a partner, thus making eight couples for the second waltz, the first four having retired; at a signal from the leaders the waltzing again ceased, and the first figure of the German, called the "favor," had been tripped. The second is called the Japanese umbrella figure. The two leaders take two Japanese umbrellas, to the top of which are attached ribbons of divers colors, and standing in the center of two rings, one made up of ladies and the other of gentleman, twirl the umbrellas swiftly, while those in the ring catch a ribbon; after all the ribbons have been taken they are then matched in the other ring, and those holding matched ribbons are partners. The third and last figure is called the Knight of the Garter. The next dance was the College Lanciers, and proved the prettiest of the evening's program. It is similar to the Saratoga Lanciers, but its changes are far more pretty. This closed the exhibition part of the programme and the guests were now invited to dance. The party broke up about 11 o'clock. Miss Filer received with the patronesses, Mrs. E. D. Cushman, Mrs. W. K. Flynt and Mrs. C. M. Gage. The costumes worn by Miss Norris, Miss Flynt, Miss Manchester, Miss Grace Cushman, Miss Gage, Miss Potter, Miss Louise Morris, Mrs. F. W. Ellis and Mrs. S. F. Cushman, Jr., and others were unusually attractive, and added much to the beauty of the occasion. Among the guests from away were Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Wales, of Windsor, Ct., Mrs. J.V.Squier of Stafford Springs, Mrs. W. A. Lincoln of Springfield, Miss Davis of Ware, Miss Gibson of Spencer and Miss Winnie Wilcox of Norwich.

The Burdick Family Reunion.

George W. Burdick, for years a prominent business man in Monson, gave a reception and dinner to the members of his family at his residence on Mechanic street last Sunday afternoon. Of a family of twelve children eight are living, four sons and four daughters. The following are the names of those present: Mrs. Geo. L. Gates and son of Leverett; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Ramsdell of Monson, and family; Mr. and Mrs. Asher Burdick of Philadelphia; George W. Burdick Jr., of Palmer; James Burdick of Springfield, Misses Carrie and Lillian Burdick and William H. Burdick, who live at home. William H. Burdick, the youngest of the children, was chosen master of ceremonies. The aggregate weight of the family, ten in number, is 1647 pounds. Artist Gaouette was called Monday morning and a picture of the family was taken.

Stephen Newton spent Sunday in Amherst.

The south straw shop is out with a new truck wagon.

John Squiers has taken a position with Ralph Clifford.

Miss Ada Bliss of Somerville is the guest of Daniel Leonard.

Oscar Cady of Amherst spent Sunday with his father, Eugene Cady.

George Knowlton of Worcester is visiting his parents on Pease avenue.

Miss Minnie A. Wilcox of Granville is visiting Miss Ida J. Seymour.

John Curley has purchased a new horse of Thomas Blanchard of Palmer.

Mrs. A. F. Johnson made a short visit to her sister in Springfield Monday.

John McAlviney made a flying visit to his brother in New Haven, Monday.

Mrs. Frank Parke and daughter Florence are spending the week in Brimfield.

Rev. J. F. Lee has decided not to give an entertainment March 17, as planned.

The Republicans will hold a caucus in Memorial Hall next Thursday evening.

Rev. W. Adams of Enfield will preach next Thursday evening in the Methodist church.

Miss Alice Carpenter of the Westfield State Normal School spent Sunday with Daniel Carpenter.

Charles Smith, the harness maker, purchased the Sullivan horse at the auction sale last Saturday.

James C. Hale has begun the foundation for the new business block to be built by Heimann & Lichten.

Next Sunday evening Rev. Harry Blackford will preach in the Universalist church on "Church Membership."

Horace D. Moulton is having rather hard luck. He lost a valuable horse by sickness this week, also a young colt.

March 15th was the last day of Fuller's annual clearing out sale, but we find there are a few pairs of shoes left on the table and we will sell any pair of the ladies' shoes for $1 50 and the men's in the same proportion.

Winter shoes of any kind can be bought at reduced prices until they are all sold.

No. 6 and 7 Men's Wool Boot only $2; larger sizes $2 25, and Rubbers go for $1.50.

Men's and Ladies' Dancing shoes seem to be all the rage just at present. We are showing some fine dancing slippers that we think can't be beat.

Do your shoes need repairing to make them last until you want to buy your spring shoes? Our shoe maker will make them look almost as good as new.

It will pay you to watch this space and our windows for new things in shoes for spring and summer. We will have the latest in our stock of Hon. W. N. Flynt celebrated his 76th birthday Wednesday by a dinner party to a large number of relatives and friends.

W. Carroll has donated to Flynt Park the Bible used when services were held at the old vestry by the Congregational society.

Miss Minnie Gilligan has a pet dog which is exciting a great deal of interest locally on account its almost human actions. The dog comes from imported stock, and is a prime favorite.

Murdock McPherson has returned from Springfield, where he has been at work, and has taken a position with the W. N. Flynt Granite Co.

The registras of voters met last night in Memorial hall from 7.30 p. m. to 9 p. m. They will meet the 22d and 28th at the same hour.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Methodist church held its regular monthly business meeting Monday evening in the church vestry.

Preparations are being made to paint the Monson House and surrounding fences. A greater part of the inside will probably be repaired and renovated.

Rev. Harry Blackford, Rev. F. S. Hatch, and Rev. W. H. Marble will act as judges at the Demorest prize speaking contest to be held in Hampden March 26.

William E. Reilly is taking a business trip to Holyoke and vicinity. It is expected when he returns that he will bring with him a large invoice of Keating bicycles.

A caucus of the Democratic voters of the town of Monson will be held in Memorial Hall next Friday evening at 8 o'clock for the purpose of placing in nomination candidates for the town officers.

At the adjourned meeting of the Library association, to be holden next Monday, it is expected that Prof. Burke will be chosen a member of the association to fill the vacancy caused by Prof. Dustan's withdrawal.

Franklin Tanner, while chopping wood in the west part of the town last week, cut himself badly, lacerating his right knee. No physician was summoned, however. The injured man is now doing nicely.

J. W. Needham, assistant manager for the Springfield branch of the Keeley Institute, has been in town this week talking with the clergyman, physicians and business men, trying to get them interested in practical temperance work.

There has been much talk as to the coming town meeting, and most every man in town has been mentioned for a possible candidate at next week's caucuses. It is to be hoped, however, that the old board will be put up, and if so they are sure of reelection. They have had much to contend with the past year, as anyone well knows.

The W. N. Flynt Granite Company has the contract to furnish all the granite for the new Worthy block and the Y. M. C. A. building in Springfield, also a large order from Waterbury, Conn. The company now has a force of about 100 men at work, with prospects ahead of doing a good business this season.

The Chautauqua Circle met Monday evening with Miss Esther Holmes. Charles Bradway read a paper on "Village Life in France." Prof. Burke was to have read a paper on "What is Chemistry?" but was excused and will give it next week. Rev. W. H. Marble spoke on "Preparation and Action in Public Debate."

The coming week will be observed at St. Patrick's church as Holy Week, and services will be held as in former years. Holy Thursday, mass at 8 a. m., procession to depository after mass; Friday, mass of the presanctified at 8 a. m., sermon on "The Passion" at 7.30 p. m.: Saturday at 8 a. m. blessing of the holy water and paschal candle, followed by the mass of the day. Palm Sunday, next Sunday, will be observed at St. Patrick's church by the blessing of the palms and the distribution of the same before mass.

A voter writes to the JOURNAL that "As the time approaches for the annual town meeting some action ought to be taken in regard to introducing the McAdam system of road building. The present system of keeping our roads in repair ought to be abandoned, and the more modern and scientific method adopted. Under the present road repair system our roads are not improved in the least. The cost of McAdam ought not to frighten anyone. Of the two methods the McAdam is the cheapest. Repair the roads as little as possible, and build a mile or more per year of McAdam and let the public see how it works. In a few years I think the town would be satisfied to keep on with the good work. There is plenty of material in town with which to build McAdamized roads. The town ought to appoint a man to take charge of the roads who has some knowledge of road building, or one at least who has informed himself somewhat on the subject."

THE TRACK OF PROGRESS.

In all the scientific advancement which has been made there is nothing which has attracted more attention and certainly nothing which is of more vital consequence to all than that which has been made in the treatment of disease. There are thousands of sick persons and invalids all over the country who have until recently been unable to avail themselves of the most scientific medical aid.

Through the thoughtfulness and kindness of that great benefactor of mankind, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., all those who are suffering from any form of disease may avail themselves of his great system of treating and curing disease all over the land through letter correspondence. People can consult him by letter absolutely free of charge. Dr. Greene is the most succesful specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases; he is the discoverer of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters received by him, and writes the patient a full description of the case. The Doctor uses nothing but harmless vegetable remedies and has had wonderful success in curing disease through letter correspondence. Send for one of his symtom blanks and he will write you a full description of your disease and give you advice in regard to its cure, free of charge.

For Over Fifty Years

To Herbert A. Northrop, Constable of the Town of Palmer.

GREETING:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House, in said Palmer, on Monday, the nineteenth day of March current, at 9 o'clock a. m., to act on the following articles, viz.:

ARTICLE 1. To choose a Moderator to preside at said meeting.
ART. 2. To elect all necessary town officers for the ensuing year.
ART. 3. To vote by ballot, which shall be Yes or No, in answer to the question, "Shall licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town?"
ART. 4. To act on the reports of the town officers.
ART. 5. To raise money and make appropriations to defray the expenses of the town for the ensuing year.
ART. 6. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money in anticipation of the taxes for the ensuing year, the same to be paid from said taxes.
ART. 7. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money not to be paid from the taxes of the ensuing year.
ART. 8. To hear and act on reports of committees.
ART. 9. To choose committees and give them instructions.
ART. 10. To see if the town will allow a discount and determine what interest shall be paid on the taxes to be assessed for the ensuing year.
ART. 11. To determine the manner and state the terms and conditions of collecting the taxes for the ensuing year, and fix the compensation of the collector of taxes.
ART. 12. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges for the ensuing year.
ART. 13. To see if the town will raise and appropriate money to suppress the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors.
ART. 14. To act on the list of jurors as prepared by the selectmen.
ART. 15. To see if the town will raise money for the Young Men's Library Association.
ART. 16. To see if the town will raise money to convey pupils to and from the public schools, and instruct the school committee as to the manner of letting the contract for such conveyance.

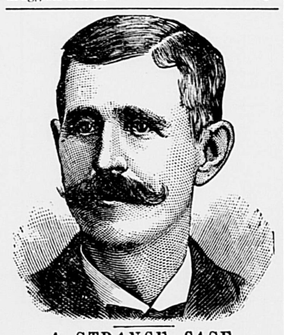
E. P. Tayer and Solomon Davis Speak to Victims of These Terribles Diseases.

E. P. Tayer, of East Nassau, New York, says: "I wish it possible to speak personally with every rheumatic victim, for I would tell them of my terrible experience and the relief and cure I found in a simple remedy.

"When I first saw in the newspapers, 'Rheumatism can be cured,' I was loath to believe it, but when I found that the statement was made by Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., I inquired into it, and upon his advice I began to use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. My condition at that time seemed hopeless. I had suffered for 15 years with inflammatory rheumatism. My physician said I would be a cripple for life, but it was not ordained that way, for I had not used Favorite Remedy long before I was convinced that it was the right medicine, and in a short while I was cured. That was three years ago, and I have not felt a trace of the disease since."

Solomon Davis of North Kortright, N. Y., suffered awfully from neuralgia and loss of sleep, as is frequently the case with elderly people; in speaking to the writer, he said:- "I found that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy relieved the bowels, improved the circulation of the blood, and the old pain left me altogether."

As one of Palmer's physicians recently said, "There is no reason in suffering with rheumatism or neuralgia, for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will cure them." All druggists sell it. :0



A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recomendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

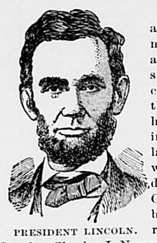
PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S HERO.

Col. Wm. Sillowaye, Whom Secretary Stanton Called the Greatest Hero of the War, Cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.



PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

There never was a time when so many of our great and prominent persons have been cured by one and the same remedy, as have been reported in the papers of late, cured by that wonderful medical discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Hon. Ex-Speaker Charles J. Noyes of the Massachusetts Senate and House of Representatives has been cured by this remarkable medicine, and now we report the extraordinary cure of the illustrious Col. Wm. A. H. Sillowaye, one of the most noted officers of the war, of whom Secretary Stanton and Secretary Welles said in conference with President Lincoln: "Col. Sillowaye saved President Lincoln's life, and we consider him as great a hero as any in the service."

COL. WM. A. H. SILLOWAYE.

Col. Sillowaye resides at 8 Pine St., Boston, Mass., where in an interview with him he talked very interestingly: "On the 19th of April, 1861, I enlisted in the army of the North. I weighed 162 pounds. After serving four years and eight months in the Army and Navy, and suffering from wounds and rheumatism, I was discharged. I weighed the day I was discharged 109 pounds. Every year I had attacks of nervous prostration; shortness of breath and the loss of appetite were not the least of my misfortunes. I tried numberless things. Nothing did me any good.

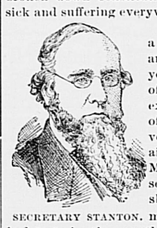
"While employed in Boston I was compelled to resign my position on account of ill-health. I consulted several eminent physicians, and took their medicines. No use—I grew worse day after day. They told me I could not live. I could not walk in the street without falling or clinging to the railings. At times I would shake and twitch. Had spells of falling down in the office and on the street.

"In the house I had to lie down or drop down; several times I believed I was at death's door. I had been commander of three different G. A. R. Posts, and my comrades advised me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I bought a bottle and when I had taken two-thirds of it I began to improve.

"I kept on taking it, improving all the time. I now weigh 130 pounds and feel like my old self again. You can put it in your paper that I attribute my good health to nothing but Dr. Green's Nervura. I am perfectly satisfied that it saved my life. I am 75 years of age, but, as you can see for yourself, I am as active as a man of 40, and can do a good day's work, as people here well know. My friends in Boston, New York and other places are surprised at my recovery. Indeed, I am surprised myself to be so well. I advise anybody afflicted to buy and try Dr. Green's Nervura blood and nerve remedy at once."

Such an astounding cure as this in so prominent a personage as Col. Sillowaye, the personal friend of the President of the United States, Secretary Stanton and Secretary Welles, of President Lincoln's Cabinet, is the highest and strongest recommendation which any remedy could possibly have.

It is a fact that this wonderful medicine is doing more good all over the land than any other known remedy. Everybody who has used it speaks in the highest terms of it. It is strengthening the weak, building up broken down constitutions and curing the sick and suffering everywhere.



SECRETARY STANTON.

Everybody requires a spring medicine, and this is just what you need. Thousands of people, while not exactly sick, are out of order, weak, nervous, run down or ailing in some way. Many people at this season do not eat or sleep well, wake mornings tired, with bad taste in the mouth, dull feeling head and without strength or energy to take hold of their work. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will cure all this; it will make you well. It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

THE TEA TABLE.

Here are a few recipes for fancy cakes that are appropriate to use for a 5 o'clock tea. They will keep fresh for more than a week in a cake tin or jar, and thus are available to serve to callers with tea or chocolate.

SPONGE DROPS.—Sift through one and a half cupfuls of sifted flour, a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat to a froth three eggs and a teacupful of sugar. Stir into this the flour. Flavor with lemon. Drop teaspoonfuls upon buttered tins about two inches apart. Bake at once in a very quick oven. Watch closely that they do not burn. These are very delicate.

VANILLA JUMBLES.—Cream two cups of sugar and one of butter, and three well beaten eggs and six tablespoonfuls sweet milk. Sift, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder through a pint of sifted flour. Stir this into the mixture and add flour till the dough is stiff enough to roll out. Flavor with vanilla. Take off pieces of the dough about as large as a nutmeg. Roll out on the board in rolls about as large as your finger; join the ends to form rings. Lay on well-buttered tins about two inches apart. Bake in a moderate oven. These form delicate round cakes; the openings in the rings close up as they bake. Be careful not to take too much dough to make a ring, else the jumble will be too large in size.

COCOANUT CREAMS.—Cream one well-beaten egg and one cup of sugar. Warm butter the size of an egg and beat into the egg and sugar. Sift a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder through a pint of sifted flour, and stir the flour into the mixture. Flavor with nutmeg. Sift in more flour, if necessary, to make a very stiff dough. Roll out and cut with an inch-and-a-half cutter. Or you may cut in any fancy shape. For St. Valentine's Day heart shape, for Easter egg shape, etc. Lay on buttered tins near together. Before beginning to make the "creams" fill a cup nearly full of grated or dessicated cocoanut; pour in milk to fill the cup. Let soak till you have the "creams" in the pans; then sprinkle the cocoanut mixture over the "creams" and bake at once in a moderate oven to a delicate brown. These will keep fresh for a long time if baked lightly. They are very nice.

GINGERS.—One and one-half cups molasses, one cup melted butter, one egg, one tablespoonful vinegar, one tablespoonful ginger, one teaspoonful soda. Beat the egg; add the molasses and vinegar; sift the soda through a pint of sifted flour; stir into the mixture; add the butter and flour enough to roll rather stiff; cut with a small biscuit or cookie cutter.

KISSES.—Beat the white of egg till it begins to be broken up; sift in a little confectioners' sugar and beat more; sift in more sugar and beat again, and so continue till the meringue will stand alone. If you wish flavor, use the flavoring powder mixed with the sugar. Use two tablespoonfuls of sifted sugar to the white of one egg, or a coffee-cupful of sugar to the whites of six eggs. Butter shallow tin sheets, lay over the bottom of the sheets buttered white writing paper. Drop the meringue from a spoon on the buttered paper, about two inches apart. Pile up in the form of an egg. Sift over the kisses confectioners' sugar. It is a good plan if your oven bottom browns quickly to put a grate on it under the tin sheets; set into a moderate oven for perhaps half an hour. Do not brown. The kisses must be made as rapidly as possible, and not allowed to stand. The best recommendation for kisses is that they are well named.

COCOANUT MACAROONS.—Two cupfuls of grated cocoanut, one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour, the whites of three eggs. Soak the cocoanut in milk enough to cover it. While this is soaking beat the whites of the eggs till stiff. Add the sugar gradually while beating the eggs. Stir in gradually the flour and the cocoanut, being careful not to add any of the milk in which the cocoanut has been soaked. Indeed, you should be careful when putting it asoak not to put into the cocoanut more milk than just enough to soak it. Make the mixture when thoroughly prepared into balls about as large as horse chestnuts, by rolling in flour. Cover the bottom of the buttered tin sheets with white writing paper; butter the paper; flatten the balls a trifle and lay them on the paper. Bake a delicate brown in a moderate oven fifteen or twenty minutes. Do not remove from the pans till cold.

Almond macaroons may be made of the same recipe as the cocoanut macaroons by using grated almond instead of cocoanut.

DELICATE EASTER DESSERTS.—No. 1. Make corn starch blanc mange as the directions are given upon your corn starch package. Pour out into egg shell molds. You may use an egg shell for a mold by "blowing" the egg. When the blanc mange is thoroughly cold and hard, break off the shell. Arrange these eggs in a deep glass dish. Make coffee gelatine, according to the directions upon the gelatine package for plain gelatine, using strong hot coffee instead of hot water. When cooled sufficiently pour the gelatine over the eggs and set in a cold place. Have gelatine enough to just cover the eggs. This is to be set upon the table. When served take out an egg with the gelatine around it and drop on it whipped cream, or pour over it a soft custard. It is prettiest served in glass dishes.

No. 2. Use receipt No. 2 of the Plymouth Rock gelatine; mold in egg shells. When ready for use lay the gelatine eggs in a glass dish and pour over them a soft custard; or mold coffee gelatine in egg shells and serve with whipped cream.

AN EASTER SALAD.—Soak one package gelatine in one pint cold water for ten or fifteen minutes; heap one quart of canned tomatoes (or use a quart of fresh stewed tomatoes) and strain; everything but the seeds should go through the sieve. Heat hot and pour the gelatine into the strained tomato. Stir till the gelatine is entirely dissolved. Pour into egg shell molds. Cool. When ready to serve place each gelatine egg in the curve of a lettuce leaf and pour salad dressing over and around it.

SALAD DRESSING.—Yolks of five eggs beaten lightly; mix together one dessert spoonful mustard, two spoonfuls sugar, two teaspoonfuls corn starch, one teaspoonful salt. Sift this through a seive into the egg and stir well together. Have a large cupful of milk boiling hot in a double kettle; stir in the mixture; cook as for a custard. Take from the stove and at once drop into the custard, drop by drop, about a third of a cupful of strong vinegar. Strain through a colander. When cold it will be quite thick. This is good if made with fewer egg yolks or with whole eggs. Two will make an excellent cream or even one. When the whites of the eggs are used there should be less corn starch.

The packages of the different kinds of gelatine vary in quantity, so you should follow the directions given on the package you use, to determine the quantity of water used and the length of time required for soaking, and adapt your receipe to those directions.

PROFESSIONAL INCOMES IN ENGLAND.

Every man—professional or otherwise—who gets to the top of his particular ladder in England is paid not only in money but in comforts, in homage, and in admiration, out of proportion to those below him. The heads of the great public schools, such as Eton and Harrow; the great prelates of the church, the archbishops of Canterbury and of York, the bishop of London, and others; the Lord High Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, and the Attorney General; the popular physicians, the eminent barristers, solicitors, and civil-engineers,—make what in a democracy would be deemed fortunes every year. On the other hand, the professional rag-tag and bob-tail receive less notice and less money, and are far more restricted in their social opportunities than with us. In giving figures relating to professional incomes in England, this chasm—impassable except to the strongest—between mediocrity and success, becomes at once the most striking and depressing feature of the discussion.

In the Church, the archbishop of Canterbury receives £15,000 a year, which is equal to $80,000, or probably more; while the average income of the clergy is well under $1000 a year. A very successful barrister like Sir Charles Russell has an income variously estimated at from $75,000 to $100,000 a year; while it is said on good authority—one of themselves—that eighty per cent of the barristers make nothing; those who make anything make $1200 a year, those of the next grade $2000; then $10,000, which is the top score of the great majority; and then a very limited figure who make $25,000 a year. Practically the same figures hold good for the medical men, with the exception that the percentage of those making nothing is smaller—an indication not wholly without significance as implying that the Briton would rather pay to have the gout than to have a quarrel where fists are barred. Consider the following list of incomes:

Annuities to fourteen members of the Royal Family, $3,000,000 per annum.
Miner with family (estimated by one of them), $390.
Archbishop of Canterbury, $75,000 a year.
Average clerical income, $600. a year.
Attorney-general, $65,000 a year.
Average barrister, making anything, $1200 a year.
Sir Andrew Clark, physician, $80,000 to $100,000 a year.
Average medical man, $1200 a year.
Head of great public school, $30,000 to $40,000 a year.
Sub-master in small school, $500.
Editor and part owner of a great newspaper, $25,000 or more a year.
Hack writer, $800 or less a year.
Macaulay, "History of England," $750,000.
Scott's novels, etc., (about) $1,000,000.
Essayists, poets, majority of novelists—nothing.
Dissenting minister (very popular), $5000 a year.
Dissenting minister (not popular) $450 a year.
Judiciary (well paid):
Lord Chief Justice, $40,000 a year.
Lord High Chancellor, $50,000 a year.
Judges in county and city courts $5000 to $10,000.
Cabinet ministers, $25,000 a year.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A NEW DISEASE.

PEOPLE WHO ARE WEARING AWAY BECAUSE THEY CANNOT DIGEST THEIR FOOD.

They Eat Heartily But Their Food Does Them No Good.

If you speak to your acquaintances you will too often find someone who says to you: "My food does me no good. I have a good, even a voracious appetite. I eat plenty and enjoy what I eat, but I'm as thin as a rail. My stomach pains me after meals. I get no flesh or strength from what I eat."

This is not exactly a new disease. It is new because doctors are beginning to give it attention. They are recognizing that at the door of this disease may be laid the blame for most of the dangerous sicknesses which decimate the human race.

Consumption, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Scrofula; all these, and many other diseases, could be prevented or cured if a food could be found that would "do good."

Doctors have recognized that in Paskola they have such a food. Made according to scientific principals, of the purest starch foods (the strengthening, fattening foods) pre-digested, it is perhaps the only food which will "do good" to the most delicate stomach and to the sickest dyspeptic.

Paskola is not a medicine. It is an aid to medicine. It often does away with the need for medicine.

Lyric of Action.

'Tis the part of a coward to brood
O'er the past that is withered and dead.
What though the heart's roses are ashes and dust?
What though the heart's music be fled?
Still shine the grand heavens o'erhead,
Whence the voice of an angel thrills clear on the soul,
"Gird about thee thine armor; press on to the goal!"

If the faults or the crimes of thy youth
Are a burden too heavy to bear,
What hope can rebloom on the desolate waste
Of a jealous and craven despair?
Down, down with the fetters of fear!
In the strength of thy valor and manhood arise
With the faith that illumes it and the will that defies.

"Too late!" through God's infinite world,
From His throne to life's nethermost fires—
"Too late!" is a phantom that flies at the dawn
Of the soul that repents and aspires.
If pure thou hast made thy desires,
There's no height the strong wings of immortals may gain,
Which in striving to reach thou shalt strive for in vain.

Then up to the contest with fate,
Unbound by the past, which is dead!
What though the heart's roses are ashes and dust?
What though the heart's music be fled?
Still shine the fair heavens o'erhead,
And, sublime as the angels who rule in the sun,
Beams the promise of peace when the conflict is won.

WHAT HAPPENED EASTER EVE.

Fierce and wild the March winds whistled around the old chimneys that were coeval with the Revolution. The brook was frozen tight, the ridges of snow yet lay along the mountain gorges, and old Greta hastened into the house, like a ship scudding before a cyclone.

"Miss Becky! Miss Becky!" she screamed, the weasles have got into the henhouse and killed every solitary fowl! Bled 'em to death as neat as if it was done with a lancet."

At the same moment Lillian Darling had rushed into the only room where they kept a fire—the great, shining, yellow-walled kitchen—crying out:—

"Oh, Rebecca, the violets are frozen, and so are all the lilies-of-the-valley and the callas that you were keeping for the Easter market! Oh, isn't it dreadful!"

Rebecca Darling laid down her tablet and pencil.

"You are a pair of Cassandras," said she, with enforced composure. "Is there any other piece of bad news that you have got to tell me?"

"I say, Miss Becky," called a bass voice from the shed adjoining, "I ain't fit to come in where folks is, but I'll just have to go to Squire Parlett's well for water; our chain pump's friz as tight as a drum!"

"It does seem as if we had the wust luck of anybody!" sighed old Greta.

Lill went up to her sister, and passed her arm lovingly around the long, slim neck.

"Come to breakfast, Becky," said she. "At least the coffee-pot hasn't exploded, and the last of the eggs is beaten up into a delicious omelet. I should like meat for breakfast, but as long as Adonijah has such a limitless appetite, I shall have to content myself with bread and butter."

"There it is, Lill," said the elder sister. I was just adding up our accounts, and I find we can't afford the luxury of retainers. Adonijah must go!"

Lill clasped her hands.

"Adonijah! Oh, Becky! Poor Adonijah, who works zealously all day long, and worships you as if you were his patron saint! But what is to become of him?"

"I don't know, Lill. I only know that adverse fortune has proved too much for me. I had calculated upon sending those fowls to the Christofel market at a fancy price, and on realizing a considerable sum on the Easter flowers. But they are both gone at one fell swoop. And, oh, Lill, this is likely to be a disastrous Easter for us all!"

"Don't talk in that way!" said Lill, stamping her small foot on the floor. Easter is never disastrous!'

At this junction honest Adonijah, all unconscious that his fate was trembling in the balance, came in with a pail of water—a ruddy-faced, gypsy-eyed boy of sixteen, who regarded "Miss Becky" as little short of a guardian angel.

"I say, Miss Becky," began he, "is it true?"

"Is what true, Adonijah?"

"That this 'ere house is haunted!"

"What nonsense, Adonijah!"

"Just what I told 'em myself," nodded the lad. "But Squire Parlett says there's a portrait of it in a New York picture paper, with 'The Haunted House of Juniper Mountain' writ under it, and a long story of a revolutionary soldier that was shot down at the upper window, over the porch, and comes there moonlight nights, all in buff toggery."

"Oh, Becky," cried Lill, with a little hysterical laugh, "I knew that man was a reporter, though he made believe he was a surveyor and wanted to run lines parallel with the new turnpike."

"Well, what difference does it make?" said Becky, dejectedly. "Nothing signifies very much now. If the New York people like to open their eyes over a bogus ghost story—"

"But is it true?' urged Adonijah—"about the soldier, I mean?"

"Why, yes, I believe it is," abstractedly answered Becky. "It was my great-grandfather Ruggles. Shot down, one Easter eve, by a Hessian—and my great-grand uncle followed the assassin half across the swamp with a rusty sickle—the first implement of warfare he could seize upon—and cut him down just beyond the big yellow pine tree that was struck by lightning last fall!"

Adonijah rubbed his hands gleefully.

"Then, by hookey," cried he, "there ought to be two ghosts! And if I—"

"Hold your tongue, Adonijah!" shrilly interrupted old Greta, bringing in the hot corn bread, which she had destined for a breakfast surprise. "Your bacon and fried potatoes is a waitin' for you out in the shed, and the quicker it's eaten, the quicker you'll get back to your wood-chopping!"

"Gee—whillikens!" muttered Adonijah, "why didn't I never hear these ghost stories afore? I mean to watch the winder over the porch the very first moonlight night."

As spring dawned slowly over the land, Adonijah's blunt perception awakened to more facts than one.

First, that his beloved Miss Becky and Miss Lill were sorely straightened for means; second, that there was some talk of selling the old house, and that Squire Parlett had offered three thousand dollars for it.

"It's only a tumble-down ruin," said the squire. "Over a hundred years old, with nothin' solid 'bout it but the chimbly, and only a few acres of stony mountain land. Nobody else won't give that for it!"

"Three thousand dollars!" cried Lill. "Why, the man wants to swindle us!"

"But we can't stay here and starve," sighed Becky. "Of course the place is worth more than that; but there is no market for real estate on Juniper Mountain. We must sell out at some price and get nearer New York."

"And turn half-paid governesses and snubbed companions," retorted Lill. "Oh, Becky, how very hard the world is!"

"If we could raise a clear sum of three thousand dollars," said calculating Becky, "we might open a boarding-house on Glassy Lake."

"But the squire wants half the money to remain on bond and mortgage."

"And for all I can see, he is likely to have everything his own way!" groaned Becky. "Oh, look there, Lill! Who is that?"

"An artist sketching the place," said Lill, frowning. "Sitting perched on the wall, exactly as if he owned it! Send Adonijah to order him off!"

"No, don't," interposed gentle Becky. "The old house is picturesque, I suppose, against the yellow March sunset."

"But there was another there, this morning, miss," said Adonijah, "and two women axing at the swing gate if this 'ere was the 'Haunted House.'"

"It's getting a deal too much talked about to suit me," growled old Greta. "Most everybody's got something to say about it, every time I go to the village. They say for sart'in there's two or three seen the ghost."

"Let them talk," said Becky. "Talk does no harm."

But "talk" naturally produced a sensation—and the sensation ended in a regular string of sight seers, who nearly drove old Greta distracted by asking for glasses of water and crocus-blooms, and propounding interminable questions.

"I wish the ghost was in Jericho!" scolded Greta.

But one night she came scampering in from a late visit to a crony down the road.

"I've seen it!" she cried—"I've seen it with these eyes! The ghost, a-standin' at the window! And I warn't the only one as seen it, nyther. There was three or four others staring down by the hemlock tree—a newspaper man, and the picture-maker of a Boston paper—and we only see it one minute. Call Adonijah up! Let him tell them fools to go about their business! It's bad enough to be scared out o' one's senses without bein' mobbed by a set of curious hunters. And Adonijah's no business to go to bed before nine o'clock."

"Adonijah works hard daytimes, and needs his sleep," said Becky. "The people will go away in time. It is rather annoying, but—"

"They actully axed leave to go through the house," said Greta. "And I told 'em you wouldn't hear to it; and the newspaper man tried to give me a quarter of a dollar, but I throwed it back into his face. But I seen the ghost—yes, I did!"

And she shivered, and threw an apron over her head.

Scarcely a week had elapsed when two gentlemen requested audience of Becky and Lill Darling.

They were the identical newspaper man, whose subsidy had been scorned, and the long-haired artist of the Boston weekly journal, and they offered the two sisters the sum of six thousand dollars, cash down, for the old place on Juniper Mountain.

"Not that it's worth that, intrinsically," exclaimed Mr. Joyce, the former; "but it has become rather prominent of late—a sort of Mecca to superstitious people, he, he, he! And there is something rather strange about that porch window—the light on the little window panes, or the refraction of the moon-beans or some curious effect—and my friend, Raphael Snipp, and myself think it wouldn't be a bad speculation to let people go through a haunted house a hundred and twenty years old at fifty cents a head. It's quite handy to the Quarter Mile Notch and Glassy Lake tourists, you see, and I and my friend Snipp are disposed to think there's money in it."

Rebecca and Lillian Darling accepted the offer without delay. The nightly crowd and the ghost story had made them nervous, and they were not sorry to exchange the historic roof of their ancestors for a pretty cottage at Glassy Lake, just big enough to take a boarder or two for the summer season.

Squire Parlett snarled.

"I'd hev riz my price a little ef I'd known the place was in demand," said he. "Them city chaps 'll make a hull b'lin' o' money outen it."

Greta accompanied the young ladies, also Adonijah, in the capacity of "useful man."

"And I'd like to know," said the old woman, savagely, as she surveyed the articles which the latter had transferred from his garret chamber at the old house, "what business you've got with the old yaller chist full o' Miss Becky's gran'ther's belongings?"

"You let them alone!" howled Adonijah. "Miss Lill, she said I could have 'em, ever so long ago."

And he guarded his treasures with Cerberus-like vigilance from Greta's desecrating hands.

That evening—an April-scented Easter eve, with the daffodils all in bloom under the window—he came to where Lill and Becky were unpacking their ancestral china and disposing of it in a queer little cherry-wood cupboard in the chimney jamb.

"Miss Lill and Miss Becky," said he in a hoarse whisper, "don't ye never let on to nobody if I tell ye somethin!"

"What is it, Adonijah?" said Lill.

"Them city fellers has put up a many signs and done a power of advertisin'," whispered Adonijah, "but they ain't done as well as they reckoned on."

"What!" cried Becky.

"The ghost moved out when we did," said Adonijah, still in the same sepulchral accents. "They bought the house, but they didn't buy the ghost."

"Is the boy crazy?" asked Lill.

Adonijah held up an ancient, moth-eaten suit of Continental clothes.

"I found it in the old chist o' duds you gin me, Miss Lill," said he. "I useter put it on moony nights, and bob back'ard and for'ard from the window to make people stare. I was the ghost, Miss Lill. But don't ye never tell nobody. The house wouldn't never have sold so well if it hadn't been for me."

Becky and Lill looked at each other in surprise, that slowly melted into amusement.

"Adonijah, said Becky, "you are a very bad boy."

"A very bad boy, indeed," said Lill.

"But of course we shall not tell," added Becky.

"Lest it should be an example for some one else to follow," supplemented Lill.

And Adonijah retired with a broad grin upon his gypsy-like countenance.—Saturday Night.

It was the chairman of the committee that rejected the St. Gaudens medal who arose to his feet. "I see," he said, while a deep hush fell upon the senate: "I see that the Wilson bill openly advocates and calls for the free admission into this country of undressed lumber!" There were loud cries of "Shame!" "Shame!" and some of the older senators were seen to hide their blushing faces in the folds of their large, clean handkerchiefs. The amendment that all undress lumber should be draped was carried unanimously.—Puck.

Spring Cleaning.

Yes, clean yer house, an' clean yer shed,
An' clean yer barn in ev'ry part;
And brush the cobwebs from yer head,
An' sweep the snow-bank from yer heart.
Jes' w'en spring cleanin' comes aroun'
Bring forth the duster an' the broom,
But rake yer foggy notion down,
An' sweep yer dusty soul of gloom,

Sweep ol' idees out with the dust,
An' dress yer soul in newer style;
Scrape from yer min' its wornout crust,
An' dump it in the rubbish pile.
Sweep out the hates that burn an' smart,
Bring in new love serene an' pure;
Around the hearthstone of the heart
Place modern styles of furniture.

Clean out the morril cubby holes,
Sweep out the dirt, scrape off the scum;
'Tis cleanin' time for healthy souls—
Git up the dusts! The spring hez come!
Clear out the corners of the brain,
Bear down with scrubbin' brush and soap,
An' dump ol' fear into the rain,
An' dust a cosy chair for hope.

Clean out the brain's deep rubbish hole,
Soak ev'ry cranny great an' small,
An' in the front room of the soul,
Hang pootier picture on the wall.
Scrub up the winders of the mind,
Clean up and let spring begin;
Swing open wide the dusty blind
An' let the April sunshine in.

Plant flowers in the soul's front yard,
Set out new shade and blossoms trees,
An' let the soil once froze an' hard
Sprout crocuses of new idees.
Yes, clean yer house an' clean yer shed,
And clean yer barn in ev'ry part;
But brush the cobwebs from yer head,
An' sweep the snow-banks from yer heart.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

There are few recreations that give more pleasure or greater return for the time and thought expended than the cultivation of flowers. It is now time to make plans and begin work for the summer flower garden. The beds in the garden should be spaded up and manured, and the hot bed made ready in which to sow seeds for early plants.

TO MAKE A HOT BED.—Situation—This should be in a warm place, fully exposed to the sun, facing the east or south, and protected by a fence, wall or hedge from the west or north winds.

Making the bed.—Having selected the position for the bed remove the soil, if it is light and dry, a foot deep, or if it is cold and damp build the bed up. Manure from the stable is best. Have enough to cover the bed to a depth of two and a half or three feet. Pile it up in the middle of the bed plot having it worked and shaken over with a fork, and let it remain three or four days. Then work it over again, turning and shaking it, and in a few days more it will be ready for the bed. Make a frame of planks nine to twelve inches deep at the front and eighteen or twenty inches at the back. This is a good slope to carry off the rain. Prepare the ground six inches larger than the frame. Fix the frame in place by putting down stakes at the corners and banking outside. Have the lower or front side toward the south. Now spread the manure evenly inside the frame, allowing a little slope toward the front. If the manure is dry water it. Let stand for a day or two to settle and exhaust the heat. For a sash, any common window sash is satisfactory; an old one answers the purpose as well as a new one; the sash must fit over the frame and rest upon it on all sides; a frame and sash three feet by nine is a convenient size. In two or three days after the bed is made cover the manure six or eight inches with light sifted sand ("screened sand" the gardener says, because he sifts it through a screen) and spread it evenly on the bed. Wet well, and now the bed is ready for the seeds. After the seeds are planted lift the sash during the day to let in the air. As the season advances the sash may be raised high up or shoved partly off. The temperature should not rise above 85° F. in the day time nor fall below 60° at night. A thermometer is the best guide for the inexperienced. Keep the sand damp, but not dry.

SEEDS.—A gardener of experience tells me he gets the best seeds from R. J. Farquars & Co., South Market street, Boston. Many of the country grocers keep seeds that give good satisfaction, but insist upon new seeds. Do not buy those several years old. Any seed firm will send you a catalogue on application. The Ladies' Home Journal advertises packages of seeds, and as this journal makes a specialty of flowers no doubt their seeds will prove satisfactory.

PLANTING.—For the fine seeds make little trenches in the sand about the size of a lead pencil or a little larger, two inches apart, and scatter in the seeds not very thick and cover lightly. Put large seeds like nasturtiums an inch or two apart in the trenches. By making a hot bed at once you may get plants large enough to transplant as soon as the weather is warm enough for them, and you will have your flowers early. As soon as you take up one lot of plants make over that part of the bed and sow more seeds, so that when a set of plants are done blossoming in your garden you will have new plants ready to take their place.

SELECTION.—Individual taste, the position they are to occupy, and the soil in which they are to be set must determine the kinds of flowers selected. It is too late now for the earliest spring flowers, crocuses, hyacinths, tulips and flowers from bulbs that must be set in the ground in the fall. I will name a few of the favorites for a summer garden. There is the Canna, a tall plant with large leaves and red flower spikes. This plant is handsome set in a mass by itself upon a lawn. These plants grow from bulbs, but are also raised from seeds, and these should be planted at once in the hot-bed, or they may be planted in a box in the kitchen. Before planting soak the seeds twenty-four hours in water at a temperature 60° F. As soon as there is no danger from frosts the plants may be set in their bed. This is a hardy plant and outlives all the earlier autumn frosts. The Zinnia is another hardy, showy plant. This may be started in the hot-bed, or in a frame without glass. It flowers abundantly and resists all the earlier frosts, being literally the "last rose of summer" and the last bloom of autumn. Only a hard freeze will kill it. The Salvia is also an abundant flowering, hardy, showy plant that may be started in a frame and will blossom all the summer and fall. This is very handsome cut for vases. The Sweet William is a biennial that will seed itself and come up year after year. There are many varieties of the old-fashioned flower, and the several varieties make pretty bouquets arranged loosely in a vase by themselves.

Nasturtiums. These are the trailing and the dwarf nasturtiums. The former is very effective planted at the edge of a terrace and trained to run downward over the bank. It may also be trained upward over a piazza post or over a fence or wall. The dwarf nasturtium grows in clumps. The nasturtiums blossom in every possible shade of red and yellow. If sowed soon in a hot bed, or in a box in the house, they will be up betimes and ready to set into the ground when the ground is ready for them. They will grow in any soil and blossom abundantly, if the blossoms are gathered and not allowed to wither on the plants. With their foliage they form exquisite bunches in rose jars and keep fresh well if worn in the bodice. Plant the seeds an inch apart, and wet when the soil becomes dry. I have been told by one nasturtium grower that the Marblehead seeds are the most satisfactory.

Asters are very beautiful. Start them at once in a frame, and in two months start another set, the former for blossoms in June the latter for blossoms in September. These plants exhaust themselves in bloom and then die. The first set may be pulled up as soon as they are done blossoming and the second set put into the same bed. The last set will blossom till winter-killed.

The comet aster is a new plant recently brought from Germany. It blossoms in four colors. The mignon is another fine rich flower.

The miniature sunflower is another new plant. It has a rich bloom and foliage. It is about three feet high and is much liked by those who planted it last year. This may be planted in the house, in a hot bed, or in the ground.

The Godelia is a good bloomer. It comes in three colors. It is easily raised and may be planted out of doors soon, or at once in a frame. This plant sows itself and comes up year after year. This is a new plant.

Everybody loves pansies. These should be started at once in a box in the house, transplanted to the hot bed when four leaves appear, and set several inches apart. They may be kept in the bed or again transplanted. They need rich soil and moisture, but the principal condition necessary to abundant flowering is that the flowers be gathered and not allowed to wither on the stems. Some pansies require shade, others not; consult the seed package and follow its directions.

Sweet Peas may be planted now in the garden as soon as the bed is ready. This should be made of rotten manure with dirt over it. Make trenches six inches deep. Put the seeds in two or three inches apart, cover with two inches of earth, leaving a ridge on each side of the row. These should be hilled up to be successful. After the plants are well started, hill, and then hill every three weeks. This insures abundant bloom. When high enough to need support set wire net or brush for them to run on, say when they are six inches high.

Nicotiana, that is, a variety of tobacco, is a new garden plant. It is beautiful and fragrant, and will soon be a favorite. It may be planted now in a bed and transplanted after the frosts. Mignonette is never amiss. Plant about the middle of April as a border to your flower beds. This cannot be transplanted. The Coleus is a beautifulp lant for lawn beds. This is better grown from slips. Set the slips in moist sand and transplant when the frosts are over. This may also be raised from seeds. There are many very fine varieties and many very poor ones. Mr. Rexford recommends two varieties, and two only, the dark crimson, Versche feltii, and the Yellow-bird or Sunrise. Yes, he adds the green and white Retta Kirkpatrick, to be set with these two.

For white flowers there are the candytuft, the feverfew, the sweet alyssum, but even to name all the different plants in their numerous variety is beyond the prescribed limit of this article.

The arrangement of the various plants with relation also to each other might well furnish material for a long essay. You must use your individual taste, but you are always safe in planting each flower bed with one kind of plant in its many varieties, or even in one color. Indeed, that is now the favorite method in the arrangement of flowers, not only in growing them but after they are cut. If you do not care to devote an entire bed to one plant and want a variety, mark off the beds into sections and mass each plant in its several varieties by itself, remembering to put the tall plants in the middle and the low plants around the border of your beds.

FRANCES VIRILLA DOANE.

ONE OF COMEDIAN SOTHERN'S JOKES.

Mrs. John Wood told me the following story of Sothern: They were both playing at Birmingham. She met him accidentally in the neighbourhood of New street. They were near an ironmonger's shep, when he shook hands with her and bade her good-morning.

"Would you mind going in here with me? I want to make a little purchase," he said.

She accompanied him.

He went up to the counter and said, "I want Macaulay's 'History of England.'"

The assistant said, "We do not sell books, sir; this is an ironmonger's shop."

"Well, I'm not particular," said Sothern, pretending to be deaf. "I don't care whether it is bound in calf or Russian."

"But this is not a bookseller's," shouted the assistant.

"All right," said Southern. "Wrap it up neatly. I want to have it sent down to the hotel. It's for a present I wish to make to a relative. Put it up nicely."

"We don't keep it," shouted the assistant, getting red in the face, while Mrs. Wood stepped aside and took a chair in another part of the shop, almost overcome with suppressed laughter at the cheerful, frank expression of Sothern's face and the mad, puzzled look of the shopkeeper's assistant.

"Do it up as if it were for your own mother. I don't want anything better than that," said Sothern. "I would like to write my name on the fly-leaf."

"Sir?" bawled the assistant, at the top of his voice; "can't you see we do not keep books?"

"Very well," said Sothern, quite undisturbed at the emotion he was creating. "I will wait for it."

Under the impression that his customer was either stone-deaf or a lunatic, the assistant bounced off to the further end of shop, and asked his master to come. "I can do nothing with him; I think he must be off his head." Whereupon the principal marched up to the spot where Sothern was standing, and asked very loudly, "What is it, sir? What do you desire!"

"I want to buy a file," said Southern, quietly; "a plain file—about four or five inches in length."

"Certainly," said the principal, with a withering look at his assistant, and producing at once the article which had been asked for.

"Are you ready?" asked Sothern of Mrs. Wood.

She was not as ready as usual.—J. L. Toole.

PALMER NEWS.

The Result of the Town Meeting.

Monday was an ideal day for the voters, warm and balmy, such a day as Palmer seldom sees for its annual town meeting, and the result was an unusually large ballot, 817. The old board of selectmen was elected by a handsome vote, John F. Twiss receiving the largest, 602, of which he may well feel proud. Messrs. Bishop and Hamilton succeed themselves as assessors, while the new member on the board is Deputy Sheriff Studley. Rufus L. Bond of Bondsville succeeds James O. Hamilton as overseer of the poor, leading his opponent by 172 votes. Mr. Shaw will remain in charge of the town's books and cash another year, F. D. Barton not running as well as a year ago. W. A. Weld will collect the taxes this year; the Democratic candidate withdrew, and there was no opposition. The friends of no license made a much better showing than usual, but were not quite numerous enough to change the vote of last year. All matters pertaining to appropriations were put over until next Friday, instead of for two weeks, and will be considered by the customary committee of fifteen, which is composed of C. L. Gardner, R. C. Newell, C. E. Getchell, C. H. Hobbs, L. E. Moore, Rev. W. H. Hart, H. P. Holden, J. F. Twiss, F. F. Marcy, J. C. Wing, T. J. Moran, Morris Moriarty, G. M. Atkins, Edward Goodes and G. E. Buck. The vote in detail was as follows, a star (*) indicating election:

Easter at the Churches.

All the churches of the village will celebrate Easter next Sunday with appropriate decorations, music and sermons, and at all of the protestant churches there will be concerts by the Sunday schools in the evening.

At the Baptist church Rev. Mr. Frost will preach an Easter sermon Sunday morning on "The Resurrection," and the choir will sing special Easter music.

At St. Paul's Universalist church Rev. Mr. Moulton will speak at 10.45 on "The Christian Faith in Immortality." At 11.30 there will be baptism and reception of members, and at 11.45 communion.

At the Congregational church the morning subject will be "Easter Light in World Darkness." The music programme will be:

"Why Seek Ye the Living Among the Dead?" ..... Nevin
"The Angel of the Lord." ..... Goatti
"Behold, I Tell You a Mystery." ..... Holden

The subject of the concert in the evening will be "Light through the Open Door," and the choir will render an anthem.

The special services at St. Thomas's Catholic church commenced yesterday with a high mass at 8 a. m., followed by the procession of the sacrament to the repository. Last evening there was the veneration of the blessed sacrament, and this morning at 8 the mass of the presanctified. The veneration of the cross will be observed this evening at 7.30. To-morrow morning at 8 there will be a high mass, with the blessing of the Easter water and paschal candle. Sunday there will be a mass at 8 a. m., with singing by the children's choir, with high mass at 11, when the regular choir will render the following musical programme:

The Lenten services at the Universalist church this week have been well attended, and will close this evening with preaching by the pastor at 7.30, followed by communion.

The whist party which was to have been given Tuesday evening by Mrs. B. P. Morse at the Converse House, was postponed on account of the illness of Mrs. C. G. Thompson, one of the boarders at the hotel.

Quaboag Council of the Royal Arcanum has received an invitation to visit Equity County of Springfield next Wednesday evening, when the Springfield council gives a reception to Grand Regent Reynolds and suite.

The regular monthly meeting of the Men's Sunday Evening Club will be held next Sunday evening at 5 o'clock in the vestry of the Congregational church. This is also the quarterly meeting for the election of officers, and a full attendance is desired.

The Past Noble Grands of Palmer Lodge of Odd Fellows will attend the meeting of the Grand Lodge in Springfield next Wednesday evening. A special train will probably be run to convey these and the Arcanum members home, as the latter visit Springfield the same evening.

The Learners and Worker's class will meet next Tuesday evening in the parlors of the Congregational church, and will have for its subject "Jesus' Final Departure from Galilee." The meetings of the class have been interrupted for two weeks, but they are to be held as usual hereafter.

The Eaton Club of the Universalist church held a meeting in the parlors of the church Monday evening and welcomed several new members. The club is to purchase a baptismal fount for the church, and will have it for use on Children's Sunday. An entertainment is being planned for the near future.

The will of Charles Upham, which has been filed for probate, leaves the income of $100 to the town of Warren to be used in caring for the cemetery lot; $200 is left to his brother Nathaniel; the residue of the estate is left in equal shares to his sisters, Mary Buffington, Olive Fosket, Lillian Peffer and Clarissa Pinney. John O. Hamilton is named as executor.

J. E. Ferrell is suffering from a painful sore on his hand, but hopes to be able to use the hand again soon. About a year ago he ran a white pine stub deeply into the flesh, but supposed it was all removed. Recently a sore formed and gave him considerable trouble. Last week he had an operation performed and a piece of the stubh five-eighths of an inch long was found and removed.

A. L. Hills, ticket agent at the passenger station, leaves the 31st for California, to attend the convention of the International Association of Ticket Agents, to be held in Los Angeles. About 200 are expected to be present, and the party will assemble at New Orleans, from whence it will travel by special train to Los Angeles and back to Chicago. Mr. Hills will be gone three or four weeks.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union celebrated the 90th birthday of Gen. Neal Dow, the great temperance apostle, in the parlors of the Congregational church Tuesday evening. There was a good attendance to listen to addresses by Rev. S. T. Frost, Rev. F. E. Jenkins and J. C. Wing, and songs by Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Campbell, after which the ladies regaled their guests with a "maple sugar eat."

The third of the institutes under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will be held in the district court room in this village next Tuesday, commencing at 10.50. "Fruit Culture in Massachusetts" will be discussed, and Prof. S. T. Maynard of the Amherst Agricultural College will speak. All are invited, whether members of the society or not. Dinner will be served at Pierce's restaurant at 25 cents per plate.

Many people have wondered why the whistle at the Rogers-Osgood hat shop has been given such short blasts at morning, noon and night this week, but it is because of the illness of a lady living within the sound of the whistle, who was annoyed by the long hoarse blast usually given. That people miss the usual sound is shown by the number of inquiries sent the firm regarding the change. Yesterday morning six postals were received asking if it was on account of economy in the matter of steam.

A citizen who takes a good deal of pride in the cleanly appearance of the town, protests against the custom of some housekeepers when cleaning house of letting the papers which have been removed from beneath carpets blow about the streets instead of being burned. Aside from the bad look which it gives the street the matter is liable to cost the town a good round sum one of these days; a horse shying at a blowing paper and injuring its driver would be the cause of a suit for damages against the town, with an almost certainty of a verdict for the plaintiff.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Congregational church will give an "Experience Party" in the church vestry next Wednesday evening. During the last month the members have been endeavoring to raise a certain sum each, the total to be expended for new chairs for the vestry, the aim being to earn the money in some unusual way, and next Wednesday evening the members are to make a report of the amount earned and the means employed, giving their account of the affair either verbally or by a tableau. A number of unique methods have been employed by those interested, and the stories will be sure to be worth the 10 cents admission which will be charged those who have taken no part in the work. Barr's ice cream will be served during the evening.

The many friends of Mrs. C. G. Thompson, of Monson, who is ill at the Converse House, will be pleased to learn that she is slowly improving, and that her speedy recovery is considered certain. Mrs. Thompson has undergone a remarkable surgical operation, which has proved to be a perfect success. For nearly two years Mrs. Thompson has been in poor health, and has been most of the time under a physician's care. Her recent illness commenced about five weeks ago, when she was taken violently ill. Her physician was treating her for neuralgia and muscular rheumatism, but she obtained little relief. Thinking at last that her case might not be thoroughly understood by her physician, she decided to call in Dr. H. W. Pierce of Greenfield. He made a careful examination, and gave his opinion that an operation would be necessary. A second visit confirmed his first fears, and an operation was decided upon. Dr. Pierce secured a professional nurse, who went to work last Friday morning getting Mrs. Thompson's apartments in readiness for the operation. All furniture, pictures, and everything movable were taken from the rooms. The floor was carefully swept and dusted, and covered with white sheets. The walls and paper were carefully cleaned. Everything which could possibly contain a particle of dust was removed or covered. Dr. Pierce came early Saturday morning, bringing another nurse with him. Everthing was ready and the operation was commenced at once. Ether was administered by Dr. G. H. Wilkins at 9.15, and the operation was concluded at 11.15. Drs. Wilkins and Stark, who witnessed the operation, say that it was a marvel of surgical skill. The wonderful nerve of the patient contributed much toward the success of the operation, she being, next to the doctors, the coolest person interested. For two or three days after the operation Mrs. Thompson was not allowed to see her friends and relatives, being attended only by her nurse, who never left her side. The most critical period has now passed, and her physician is sure she will soon be in perfect health.

District Court.

One civil case was entered in the district court last Saturday, Sarah L. Haynes of Three Rivers against F. D. Bramble of Ludlow, action of contract.

In the criminal court last Saturday John Vitchens paid $5 for having been drunk. Delia Purcutt, for concealing personal property, paid the costs of court, $14.05, and promised reform. Delia formerly lived in Palmer and bought a piano on the installment plan, but moved the instrument to Pelham and tried to sell it.

On Monday Thomas Callahan, for being drunk, was placed on probation until April 15th. Callahan is an inmate of the town farm, and says that on Saturday he went to one of the neighboring farmers, who treated him liberally to cider, which caused his condition. On his return to the farm he became abusive and foul-mouthed, and attempted to run things as he pleased, and Overseer of the poor Merriam, who happened to be there, had quite a tussle with him before he finally quieted down.

Mable P. Dean and James Wallace of Monson were before the court Tuesday charged with adultery. She pleaded guilty, while he pleaded not guilty but waived examination, and both were bound over in $300 bonds, which neither could obtain. Mrs. Dean is white and a town charge, while Wallace is not many shades removed from a full-blooded African. The officers also had a warrant against Nelson Lanphear for the same offense, but he had skipped. William Lusty of Bondsville, for larceny from a building, had his case continued until next Monday. Last September someone stole a horse, wagon, and lot of wine from the farm of George W. Brown near Bondsville, one of the thieves becoming so drunk that he lay down in the bottom of the wagon, while the horse wandered back home. Lusty is claimed to be the other.

On Wednesday Florence Gutierrez pleaded guilty to fornication, and paid a fine of $20. Florence Gutierrez was charged with bastardy by Adele Rouleau, who has gone under the name of Bessie Barlow, and the girl was charged with lewd cohabitation. Both cases will be heard to-morrow.

Yesterday Patrick Mullen paid $5 for drunkenness.

Editor Journal:—In looking over the report of the selectmen, under the heads of the different departments we find amounts appropriated and a detail of expenditures made under most all heads, so that the taxpayers can know what their money has been expended for. But the amount paid for prosecuting violations of the license law is reported in bulk,—nearly $600,—no detailed report here. Why not give the people the information they ask for, in the number of arrests which have been made and the convictions which followed. We say it is not in evidence that one case in this line can be shown. If the same kind of committee is to follow, the tax payers of the town will have a reckoning with them sooner or later, as has been done in other towns. It is high time this matter was looked after, and a remedy applied. LOOKING FOR LIGHT.

Mr. Editor:—With the JOURNAL'S growing circulation and extended rays of light you do not want to hide its light and influence under a bushel, so that no one sees it but those in the house. It should issue from every crossroad and hilltop. Give the people light and facts and they will act right many times and vote right every time, as shown in the last election. Now that the license question is settled for a year at least, would it not be in the line of progress for the good people of Palmer to adopt some course of action, to improve the morals of the town? For reason note the exposure made in last week's JOURNAL, and since that time. Some people fear the fate of Palmer may follow that of a wicked city of old, mentioned in the choicest of books, which could have been saved if ten righteous men could have been found in it, but not even one could stand the test. The saying of the Evangelist is worthy of consideration, "Who would be all things to all men if thereby some could be saved." It was stated in your last issue that license has prevented capital for investing here, and had delayed the growth of the town. If we are correctly informed fifteen hundred thousand dollars is invested in various manufacturing enterprises in Palmer, and a majority of it has been in plants here over sixty years. Is it not wonderful, after reading such a statement, that such an array of workman has been kept in working condition and dividends declared in a town which has always been license, with few exceptions, and when no-license was carried worse than free rum prevailed? It is not more than marvelous that the hat company should leave a no-license town and pitch its tent so near Sodom? When you vote a sum of money for the enforcement or the license law don't appropriate a dollar to employ an officer to protect your wives and daughters from insult, and in many cases ruined dresses, from a lot of loafers that block up and infest the post offices. XXX

A Few Facts.

The majority in this town for license in 1892 was 148. In 1893, when the liquor men were in a fight among themselves, it was cut down to 101. In 1894, when they loved one another with a love too full (often) for utterance, it was 69. For the comfort of the saloon keeper and the ex-saloon keeper who recently stated in a public place that the work in the no-license campaign made votes right along for license, I would state that before noon Tuesday, money began to be given and plans laid for a campaign a year long. How happy this will make them, since we are working in their interest! If the work of the past few weeks increased the license majority from 101 to 69, what may not a year of it do?

One saloon keeper a few weeks since was "talking" of going out of business because it didn't pay. But he gave money and whisky freely to carry the town for license, and he was on hand at 9 a. m. Monday, working on the details of the whisky side. Moreover, the writer happens to have good evidence, secured this week from a source that he does not suspect, that he takes into his saloon between $100 and $200 a day. He gets his liquors by the half-car load and has them billed to another town. Over $30,000 a year in a business more than one-half profit would be regarded as a paying business in a town of the size of ours, were it not that no money can compensate a man for the degrading business of a saloon keeper. The odium of it alone cannot be compensated by money.

The liquor men profess great anxiety to lessen the taxes of the town by the license money. The writer ran across a deliberately laid plan to run up appropriations this year, in case the town should go no-license, to the point of their being a burden to the people, and then assert next spring that no-license did it. Well does the word license begin with "li"—all the sense there is in it is license.

The temperance workers of the town are after no fictitious victory. They are after a solid sentiment against making Palmer the center of rum and the rum element in all this region. When the town is carried for "No" they want it to mean the closing of the saloons, both in name and in fact. They are winning votes that will stay won forever. We propose to turn the light on our saloons for a year; light is the most uncomfortable thing this business can have on it—the clear light of truth. We will have a sentiment here that will close the saloons of Palmer, or truth has lost its grip and hearts their feeling. Fact, Mr. "Truth About It;" fact, Mr. "Citizen." Things are dropping now-a-days before moral forces, things that never dropped before. Palmer is not so hopelessly wrecked as its wreckers would have us believe.

Now, Mr. Editor, I thank you for your kindness in letting me use your columns these four times. Permit me to say in conclusion: I feel sorry for the men who sell rum. I wish I could help them escape from this awful delusion and sin. Like the rest of us they must die one of these days, and if they close their lives with clear minds it will be in horror at what they have left behind them—a rumseller's life cursed with the cries of broken-hearted women and hungry children heard in heaven. From the bottom of my heart I pity them and the poor fellows who spend their money,—their bodies, minds and souls over the bar of the saloon. May God help them all. FRANK E. JENKINS.

PALMER CENTER.

Mrs. Naylor returned from Pittsfield Thursday.

Mr. Goldsmith has purchased an incubator and expects to raise large quantities of chickens this spring.

A large number of seam rabbits have been found within a few weeks, 18 being found at one time. This kind of rabbit is rare in this part of the town, none having been seen for some years before.

Last Friday evening a party of 40 made a surprise visit to Miss Edith Dimock. Dancing was indulged in to a late hour, all voting it a pleasantly spent evening. A beautiful album, a Palmer souvenir spoon, and a picture and frame were left to remind her of her eighteenth birthday.

BONDSVILLE.

Miss Mary A. Lynes visited friends in Ware this week.

Paul Lacroix has gone home to Canada for a vacation.

Melville Decker has gone to Bridgeport, Ct., to work.

Omer Goselin has sold his livery business to Will Whiting.

Jerry Shea is home from Holy Cross College, visiting his parents.

Thomas Fenton and family of Warren are visiting friends here this week.

The W. C. T. U. will meet next Thursday afternoon with Mrs. C. E. Getchell.

Next Sunday being Easter, there will be two masses at 8 and 11 o'clock, in the Catholic church at which special music will be given by the choir.

Joseph Bondsville, while coming home from Ware the other evening, lost a cushion from his carriage seat. The finder will please notify him and be rewarded.

Now that the special town meeting comes the 30th, a large number will no doubt attend and take a hand in the voting for the different articles in the town warrant.

Miss Mary Sheehan has been caused a great deal of annoyance by being told that she had secured aid from the town during the past year. The Sheehan referred to in the town report is an elderly woman of Bondsville, and not Mamie Sheean of this place.

Patrick Lynch, 21 years of age, died at the home of his parents on Monday morning very suddenly. Although he had been ailing for some time his death was a great surprise to the family. The funeral took place on Wednesday from his home. The pall bearers were William Murphy, Daniel McCarty, John Roach, Patrick Ford, John McKelligett, Dennis Murphy. The interment took place in the Catholic cemetery. Mr. Lynch was well known in town, and was conducting a fish business.

Joe Krysiak, an operative in the carding room in the mill, had his hand badly lacerated while at work Tuesday. Dr. Bliss, who dressed the wound, thinks the man will be able to resume work in a few weeks.

Mrs. Helen G. Rice, state recording secretary of the W. C. T. U., instituted a branch here Wednesday evening, with the following officers: President, Mrs. S. B. Barnes; vice presidents, Mrs. Weeks and Mrs. Butler; secretary, Miss Etta I. Ruggles; treasurer, Mrs. F. L. White.

The white-blooded young gentleman whose feet and legs are so much longer than his head, and whose rope broke during his interesting performance of Wednesday evening, can have the other end by calling at the house. The spectators would be glad to see the rest of the performance.

J. W. Cheney has set a gang of men to work digging cellars for two large two-tenement houses, which he intends to erect on the land he recently purchased from the Palmer Mill Company. The site is a good one, and the buildings will be modern in every respect, as Mr. Cheney's desire is always to have the best.

As a result of the town election there are many in this place retaining a veneration for Bacchus who are feeling exultant in view of the vote for license. Nevertheless, the temperance people are not at all discouraged, because the majority for license has been considerably diminished since last year, because they have been only reconnoitering the ground this season, and because they intend to carry the town for prohibition in '95.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Two cars choice stock hay just received at Squier's Mill, Monson. Headquarters for grain, hay and straw.

A first class concert is to be given in Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening. The "Old Homestead Quartette," which travelled seven successive seasons with Josh Whitcomb, is to be one of the attractions. This quartette is too well known throughout the United States to need any recommendation. The Springfield Mandolin and Guitar Club is to be another attraction. Seats are having a ready sale at Chapin's drug store.

Easter at the Churches.

Easter Sunday will be observed at St. Patrick's church by the masses at 8 and 11 a. m. Appropriate music will be rendered under the direction of Prof. Craig of Springfield. Vesper services at 6 p. m.

At the Methodist church Rev. W. H. Marble will preach a special sermon, and special music will also be provided, as follows:

Organ prelude.....
Anthem—"Christ is Risen".....
Anthem—"Tell it With a Joyful Voice".....
Hymn.....
Hymn.....
Organ Postlude.....

The Christian Endeavor Society will meet at 6 p. m., and the concert by the Sunday school will follow at 7. The church choir will render two anthems in the evening "Now is Christ Risen," and "The Resurrection."

Easter Sunday will be observed at the different churches in town by appropriate music and other worship. The programme at the Congregational church Sunday will be:

Organ Prelude.....
Doxology.....
Anthem—"As it Began to Dawn".....Foster
Gloria Patri.....
Hymn—"Christ, the Lord, is Risen Today".....Mozart
Response.....
Hymn—"Yes, the Redeemer Rose".....
Sermon.....
Anthem—"They Have Taken Away My Lord".....Stainer
Hymn—"Come Let Us Join Our Songs of Praise".....Handel
Organ Postlude.....

The Sunday school will give a concert Sunday evening in the church. An interesting feature will be the report of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society. A year ago the members were given one cent each, with which to gain as much as possible by trading, and they will report during the evening the result of their endeavors. It is rumored that several have passed the dollar mark, and the account is likely to be interesting.

At the Universalist church Sunday morning the pastor will preach a special sermon, after which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be celebrated. The following is the musical programme for the morning service:

Organ Prelude, Offertoire in F.....
Doxology.....
Gloria.....
Anthem, "Magnify and Praise Him."".....
Sermon.....
Anthem, "Cherish our Passover."".....
Postlude.....

In the evening a concert, Easter Blossoms will be given by the Sunday school. Mrs. C. R. Bullington will have charge of the recitations, and Mrs. C. H. Bruce will direct the music, which will be:

Male Quartette.....
Anthem, "Easter Bells are Ringing".....
Solo, Calvary.....
Mrs. C. H. Bruce.
Postlude, Grand Offertoire de Noel.....

Republican Caucus.

The Republican caucus was held last night in Memorial Hall. Wilson Tucker was chosen chairman and Harlow Chapin secretary. The town treasurer and clerk were nominated by acclamation, also the constables, auditors, cemetery commissioner and fence viewers. The selectmen, assessors and school committee were nominated first by an informal ballot, which was afterwards made formal. The list is: Town clerk, Carlos M. Gage; treasurer, Edward D. Cushman; selectmen and overseers of the poor, A. A. Gage, G. H. Foskit, C. C. Keep; assessors, L. C. Flynt, O. C. McCra, G. H. Foskit; school committee for three years, Rev J. F. Lee, William L. Ricketts; cemetery commissioner for three years, Arthur D. Ellis; auditors, R. P. Cushman, William J. Ricketts; constables, Charles W. King, William A. Needham, Edward P. Newton, Joel H. Thompson, David B. Needam; fence viewers, Lee Blanchard, Lester Howe, Daniel G. Potter; tax collector, Ralph Clifford. In nominating the third selectman two factions showed themselves, one strong for Ralph Clifford, the other for C. C. Keep, thus necessitating six or seven votes before a sufficient number for a choice could be found. The chairman of the Republican town committee then spoke on the uncertainty of Keep's politics, stating that for two or three years he had attended the Republican caucus and received the nomination for assessor on the Republican ticket, and then had gone out on the street and publicly declared that he had never voted that ticket. In reply Mr. Keep said that he didn't know as it was anybody's business what his his politics were, but he voted the straight Republican ticket last fall. After a little further discussion the caucus proceeded and Keep's nomination stood. On a motion of C. W. King it was voted that should any resignation occur the Republican town committee be authorized to fill the vacancy.

Monson, - Mass.

Miss Jennie E. Sizer and Mrs. E. A. Davis of Windsor Locks, Ct., have been visiting this week with Miss Sizer's uncle, H. G. Trumble.

The ladies of the Universalist church gave a bean supper Wednesday evening. A good crowd was in attendance, and the supper was reported excellent.

Quite a number of births this week. A daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Warren Dane. A son to Mr. and Mrs. Moses Lewis, a son to Mr. and Mrs. Fisk Rogers.

Considerable rivalry has been manifested of late between a local music house and a Springfield concern, which has resulted in the placing of several new pianos in town.

It has been said that Holy week, this present week, has been more generally observed than ever before. There has been no social parties or gatherings with but one exception.

Certificate holders in the Iron Hall have received a check from the headquarters at Indianapolis, also a notice saying that another dividend of 10 per cent had been declared.

Complaint was made to the selectmen that the billboard standing near the post office was a nuisance, and accordingly the board was removed Tuesday evening after considerable trouble.

While placing a piano in the house of Charles Tryon last Saturday, J. M. Bruce of Springfield severely cut his wrist. Dr. Rand was summoned and six stitches were taken in the wound.

It is expected that on April 2 an unusually large vote will be polled, owing to the number of voters idle. The Republicans held their caucus last night and the Democrats will hold theirs to-night.

Quite an accident occurred at the quarry yesterday. David Broadfoot, a stone cutter, had his right leg broken at the ankle. Dr. Jackson was summoned to attend the injured man, who now is doing nicely.

H. D. Vaile of Rockville, formerly warden at the Monson town farm, has purchased the farm of Jason Keep on East Hill for $3000. Mr. Keep will sell all his personal property at public auction next Thursday.

The music committee of the Congregational church has completed arrangements with Mrs. A. D. Norcross and F. R. Coy, and the former will direct the music for the coming year, the latter presiding at the organ.

The farmers will be glad to know that W. N. Flynt & Sons have taken the agency for the Bradley fertilizers, formerly kept by Norcross Bros., in addition to the Bowker brands, which they have formerly carried.

Rev. W. H. Adams of Enfield postponed his visit to the Methodist church last night on account of the union communion service at the Congregational church, and will deliver a sermon in the Methodist vestry next Thursday evening.

Word has been received in town that John J. Flanagan, the man who tried to blackmail Landlord Foley, has been arrested in Stafford Springs on the charge of larceny. On the promise of Flanagan to quit the town his case was not prosecuted.

Workmen commenced Tuesday morning clearing away the debris on the site of the burned Central block. Whether this is a sign that the block is to be rebuilt is a question, but it is to be hoped that a building of some kind will be erected there before long.

Heimann & Lichten's new building is fast nearing completion, and will probably be ready for occupancy before long. Simmons, the clothier, is to occupy one side, and it is not known who the other occupant is to be. It is safe to say, however, that it will not remain empty.

Good weather and good travelling brought a good crowd to the auction sale of horses held at Ralph Clifford's stable yesterday. The horses sold fairly well, and brought very good prices. Quite a number were sold to town parties. It is Mr. Clifford's purpose to hold another sale before long.

The local milliners have celebrated the advent of spring openings, showing fine displays of styles and goods, and have had a rushing business since, showing up the different patterns in hats and millinery novelties. M. & M. Gavin expect an experienced clerk from the city to assist them through the business of the season.

Palm Sunday was observed at the Congregational church by appropriate music and other worship. Rev. George A. Hood of Boston preached. Meetings have been held through the week, but special interest centers around the service held last evening, which was a communion service in which members of the Methodist church participated.

At the adjourned meeting of the Library Association Monday evening it was voted to light the clock tower with electricity, and the following committee was appointed to look after the matter: Dr. George Fuller, A. A. Gage and F. E. Morris. This plan of lighting the clock tower, thus making it possible to see the clock at night, will meet with general approval among the citizens of the town. It is to be hoped that the matter will be attended to at once.

The brilliant and picturesque preacher, author and orator, Col. Russell H. Conwell, pastor of the Bantist Temple at Philadelphia, will lecture in Memorial Hall April 10, under the auspices of the Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Methodist church, his subject being "A Jolly Earthquake, or How to be Happy." Everybody delights to hear him, as he is one of the most eloquent and gifted speakers in the country, entertaining and humorous. Reserved seats will be on sale at Keeney's drug store Monday morning, April 2.

Now that the mud has dried up and the roads have settled, bicycles are seen in great numbers. There are several agents in town, and all have been busy the past week showing up the fine points of their respective machines. It is quite probable that a large number of bicycles will be sold in town this season. With the large number of wheelmen already in town it has been urged that a bicycle club be formed, but nothing definite has been done yet. Some from this town have joined the bicycle club at Palmer.

This week closes the season of Lent, and entertainments, concerts and balls are to be plenty the coming month. The Windsor Club opens the season of festivity with a grand concert and ball next Monday evening, with music by the famous Carter bands of Boston. This will undoubtedly prove the event of the season. Tuesday evening the "Old Homestead Quartet," assisted by the Springfield Mandolin and Guitar Club, will give a concert in Memorial Hall. The following programme will be rendered:

Spanish Gafiopade.....Pirani
Mandolin and Guitar Club.
"The Jolly Blacksmith".....Gebiel

WILBRAHAM.

The academy closes its winter term next Wednesday.

"Ladies' Night" at the Grange next Wednesday evening.

"Athena" holds an open society in Fisk Hall this evening.

The young people held a dance at the Allis House Monday evening.

Prof. Austin of the Academy, has been quite sick, but is now recovering.

Miss Lillian Russell is at home from the Conservatory of Music for a few days.

The last meeting of the board of registrars will be held at the Allis House next Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cutler of North Wilbraham are visiting for a few weeks in Florida.

Easter will be observed by appropriate exercises and devotions at both churches next Sunday.

The post office has been moved into the house of Rev. Mr. Miller, and Mr. Miller has been appointed postmaster.

Henry Wynn has sold his property on Main street to parties who will erect a dwelling ready for occupancy in the fall.

The registration of students for the spring term has begun at the academy, a large number having already registered. The examinations begin to-morrow, and school closes next Wednesday.

WEST WARREN.

Howard Clark has moved his family to Westboro.

There will be an Easter concert in the M. E. church Sunday evening.

Miss Ada L. Cronch of Holyoke spent Sunday with her people here.

Miss Bridget O'Neill of Providence, R. I., spent Sunday at her old home here.

C. O. Walker spoke on temperance in the town hall in Warren Sunday evening.

Patrick Lynch, of Faneuf's store, will occupy the house vacated by Howard S. Clark.

The Epworth League gave a "Fad" sociable in the church parlor last Thursday evening.

Our popular milliners, Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Agnes Welch, have their openings this week.

Horatio Brown, of the Soldiers' Home in Chelsea, has been visiting his sister, Mrs. John Shaw.

Horace W. Strickland has sold his carpenter's tools, and will make his home now in Albany, Oregon.

Rev. Putnam Webber and J. F. Davis attended the Epworth League convention at North Brookfield Wednesday.

The many friends of Miss Jennie Barton of Milbury, who has been very sick, are glad to learn that she is fast recovering.

Rev. H. G. Hale of the Warren Congregational church preached in Lic M. E. church last Sunday in exchange with Rev. Putnam Webber.

LUDLOW.

Charles De Greenie, who has been very sick, is improving.

The Masons held a stated communication Tuesday evening.

Liveryman Blodgett has sold a pair of horses to Roy Simonds.

Several communications were received last week too late for publication.

The Sunday school reached its high water mark last week, registering 135.

The personal property of H. R. Barton of Granby was sold at auction yesterday.

Mrs. Arthur C. Widger of Swampscott is visiting her brother, Paymaster Knowlton.

H. E. Storer has resumed his duties at M. D. L. Towne's, after being sick for some time.

The annual meeting of the Union church society took place Thursday evening, and a church committee was elected.

A number of the Y. P. S. C. E. visited the Wilbraham Endeavor Tuesday evening, and were pleasantly entertained.

The trustees of the Ludlow savings bank held a meeting Tuesday, and a 2 per cent semi-annual dividend was declared.

Mrs. Quick and Mrs. Booth attended the lecture in Springfield given by Mrs. Joseph Cook on the Parliament of Religions.

The entertainment by the Lotus Dramatic Club of North Wilbraham Friday night was successful, though not very remunerative.

A private dance was held in Joy's Hall Thursday night by a number of the young people. An orchestra from Springfield furnished music.

WARE.

The A. O. H. had a large attendance and a most enjoyable time at their entertainment last Saturday evening.

John T. Winslow, formerly with Hosmer, the clothier, has accepted a situation in a clothing store in Worcester.

Henry C. Davis will deliver the Memorial address for J. W. Lawton G. A. R. post. No doubt it will be one of the best addresses the post has listened to.

Rev. F. L. Goodspeed of Amherst is to deliver a temperance lecture in the Congregational church this evening, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Everybody is invited.

The list of voters for Ware now contains 1165 names, one of these being that of Mrs. Jane T. Sibley. It was expected that other ladies would register, but they did not put in an appearance.

Who ever heard of ladies or anybody else holding a prayer meeting and asking God to bless the efforts of those who are trying to carry the town for license next Monday? Why not vote as we pray?

The American Legion of Honor, by delegates from the several councils of Western Massachusetts, is to hold a convention at Springfield early next month. Delegates from Nenameseck council of Ware are expected to attend.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold a prayer meeting in Congregational chapel next Monday, from 10 to 11 a. m. All ladies who are interested in the question of license or no license in the town the coming year are cordially invited to attend.

The entertainment and minstrel show of the Young Men's Union, to be held next week Friday evening, promises to be one of the best ever given by local talent. Much interest is taken by the young men, and it is expected there will be a full house.

The Grand Army post of Ware will celebrate its 25th anniversary May 10th. The exercises will be in the town hall. H. M. Comey will deliver the historical addresses. Officers from the posts in neighboring towns will be present, and possibly Capt. Jack Adams, National Commander.

The East Congregational chapel was well filled Wednesday evening to see Aunt Jerusha Dow's family portraits. Mrs. E. H. Sturtevant acted the part of Jerusha Dow, and gave sketches of the lives of her relatives as the portraits were shown. All who were acquainted with the Dow family pronounced the pictures to be fine reproductions of the originals. The entertainment was interspersed with music.

Mr. L. E. Rivard's sermon at the French Congregational church last Sunday morning was on temperance. He proved from statistics that it costs more to every city and town to have licensed saloons then no license, and showed the insincerity of the liquor sellers and drinkers who pretend that there is more drinking going on in places where there are no licensed saloons. He argued that if this was the case, saloon keepers and liquor dealers would not club together, hold meetings, send circulars, pay agents, and so forth, to hinder, with all their might, the temperance cause; on the contrary, rum dealers would vote no license, as they would do more business and make more money. He urged his people, for the sake of their children, their friends and neighbors, to vote no license.

Without doubt the most pleasing entertainment of the season will be the concert by the Old Homestead male quartet, with Miss Jessie Mabelle Downer, solo pianist. The following is the programme:

The Jolly Blacksmiths.....Geibel.
Quartet.
Piano Solo,.....Leibling.
Miss Downer.
Annie Laurie.....Geibel
Quartet.
Baritone Solo,.....Newton.
Mr. Myers.
The Water Mill,.....Macy.
Quartet.
Tenor Solo, "The Palms,".....Faure.
Mr. Orcutt.
Piano Solo, "Fantasie Caprice,".....Lossckhorn.
Miss Downer.
The Phantom Band,.....Thayer.
Quartet.
Bass Solo, "The Pearls,".....Brigham.
Mr. Kammerlee.
The Old Oaken Bucket,.....Arranged by Mullaly.
Quartet.

Tickets on sale at Mulvany's this evening.

The warrant for town meeting next Monday has thirty articles, though there is little in it out of the ordinary except—To see if the town will vote to pay S. A. Corser for sewer grates to the amount of $54.48, claimed to have been ordered by the chairman of the board of road commissioners; to see if the town will settle on defend suits brought against the town by Felix Lussier and Elizabeth H. Trentis an account of injuries by falling on sidewalks. Springfield, Mass., March, 1894.

Next Sunday will be Easter; and, if the weather is as fair as it is at this writing, what an Easter it will be!

Hats and bonnets are ready as ready can be. The Opening hasn't worn out. Styles are legion; combination infinite. Don't expect to learn in any other way but seeing.

The new wraps and costumes and waists reflect the highest credit on the buyer. They exceed our expectations. Would you like to know how we manage to have the right jackets and capes for half the women, and a different jacket or cape for almost every woman? Come and see.

Short of nothing in gloves but room. And no thing that we can say will prevent that part of the store from being crowded every day this week. Why do ladies come? Maybe for variety.

South entrance.

The new department for boy's clothing is now open; and the new clothing is brighter than ever you saw it. There is style that isn't gotten by money alone. You shall see it.

Second floor of Vernon-street building.

Such a collecting of ingrain art squares is hardly to be seen anywhere. Not only is the variety of patterns large, but we are fortunate in being able to sell for a good deal less than ever they were sold for before—for samples.

Short-Sighted —the woman who doesn't use Pearline; the woman who fails to have her servants use Pearline.

She fails to see what is good for her; she fails to have what is best for her.

Without Pearline washing and cleaning is drudgery and toil, and wear and tear, and rub, rub, rub.

With it, there is no hard work, and no harm to the finest things; there is little or no rubbing.

Use Pearline, and rest from your labor; the rest of your labor—the hardest part—is done by Pearline.

ARE YOU A SUFFERER FROM RHEUMATISM OR NEURALGIA?

E. P. Tayer and Solomon Davis Speak to Victims of These Terribles Diseases.

E. P. Tayer, of East Nassau, New York, says: "I wish it possible to speak personally with every rheumatic victim, for I would tell them of my terrible experience and the relief and cure I found in a simple remedy.

"When I first saw in the newspapers, 'Rheumatism can be cured,' I was loath to believe it, but when I found that the statement was made by Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., I inquired into it, and upon his advice I began to use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. My condition at that time seemed hopeless. I had suffered for 15 years with inflammatory rheumatism. My physician said I would be a cripple for life, but it was not ordained that way, for I had not used Favorite Remedy long before I was convinced that it was the right medicine, and in a short while I was cured. That was three years ago, and I have not felt a trace of the disease since."

Solomon Davis of North Kortright, N. Y., suffered awfully from neuralgia and loss of sleep, as is frequently the case with elderly people; in speaking to the writer, he said: "I found that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy relieved the bowels, improved the circulation of the blood, and the old pain left me altogether."

As one of Palmer's physicians recently said, "There is no reason in suffering with rheumatism or neuralgia, for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will cure them." All druggists sell it. 50

Offering you a preparation containing the highest order of ingredients, free from all opiates, harmless even to a baby, and a request to return the empty bottles and get the amount paid for the full ones if no cure is effected, is our way of gaining your confidence. If there were any better ingredients we would use them. We cure our patients or get no pay.

A Little Learning.

They are strolling up a hill together,
In the fairest kind of summer weather;
She was a sweet girl graduate,
He a geologist and late
Of Harvard, and still fairly yearning
To share with all the world his learning.

So much he knew and longed to utter,
That a strange sort of mental stutter
Confused his mind and flushed his face;
Her face was maddeningly cool,
And all he said was commonplace;
Commonplace which had been to school.

She was beginning to be bored.
Knowledge is excellent when stored,
But when too much of it is flying
It sometimes grows a trifle trying,
The road was rough and very steep,
The footing difficult to keep.

And lo, when stamping once or twice,
He said, urbanely, "This is gneiss!"
She curled her pretty lip with scorn,
And threw him a bewitched frown:
"Nice!" quoth she, "both my shoes are torn,
And 'twill be worse still, going down!"

—Margaret Vandergrift in Quips.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

In sackcloth and ashes the Lenten girl now
Discreetly and prettily poses;
Her "sackcloth" is made from the skin of a seal,
And a new gown she wears, just to show us her zeal,
Of the color called "ashes of roses."

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Sold by LEGRO & LYNDE, Palmer.

THE RELIGIOUS CARD PLAYER.

A private soldier by the name of Richard Lee was taken before the magistrate of Glasgow, Scotland, for playing cards during divine services. The account of it is thus given in an English journal:

A sergeant commanded the soldier at the church, and when the parson had read the prayer, he took the text. Those who had Bibles took them out, but this soldier had neither Bible nor common prayer-book, and pulling out a pack of cards, spread them before him. He first looked at one card and then another. The sergeant of the company saw him and said:

"Richard put up the cards; this is no place for them."

"Never mind that," said Richard.

When the services were over, the constable took Richard prisoner, and brought him before the mayor.

"Well," said the mayor, "what have you brought the soldier here for?"

"For playing cards in the church."

"Well, soldier, what have you to say for yourself?"

"Much sir, I hope."

"Very good; if not, I will punish you severely."

"I have been," said the soldier, "about six weeks on the march. I have neither Bible nor common prayer-book. I have nothing but a pack of cards, and I hope to satisfy your worship of the purity of my intention."

Then, spreading the cards before the mayor, he began with the ace:

"When I see the ace, it reminds me that there is one God. When I see the deuce, it reminds me of the Father and Son. When I see the tray, it reminds me of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. When I see the four, it reminds me of the four Evangelists that preached, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. When I see the five, it reminds me of the wise virgins that trimmed their lamps; there were ten, but five were wise, and five were foolish and shut out. When I see the six, it reminds me that in six days the Lord made Heaven and earth. When I see seven, it reminds me that on the seventh day God rested upon the great work he had made, and hallowed it. When I see the eight, it reminds me of the eight righteous persons who were saved when God destroyed the world, namely: Noah and wife, his three sons and their wives. When I see the nine, it reminds me of the nine lepers that were cleansed by our Saviour; there were nine out of ten that never returned thanks. When I see the ten, it reminds me of the ten commandments which God handed down to Moses on the tables of stone. When I see the king, it reminds me of the Great King of Heaven, which is God Almighty. When I see the queen, it reminds me of the Queen of Sheba, who visited Solomon, for she was as wise a woman as he was a man; she brought with her fifty boys and fifty girls, all dressed in boys' apparel, for King Solomon to tell which were boys and which were girls. The king sent for water for them to wash; the girls washed to the elbows, the boys to the wrists; so King Solomon told by that."

"Well," said the mayor, "you have described every card in the pack except one."

"What is that?"

"The knave," said the mayor.

"I will give your honor a description of that, too, if you will not get angry."

"I will not," said the mayor, "if you do not term me to be the knave."

"The greatest knave that I know of is the constable that brought me here."

"I do not know," said the mayor, "if he is the greatest knave, but I know he is the greatest fool."

"When I count how many spots there are in a pack of cards, I find 365, as many days as there are in a year. When I count the number of cards in a pack, I find 52, the number of weeks in a year. I find there are 12 picture cards in a pack, representing the number of months in a year; and on counting the tricks, I find 13, the number of weeks in a quarter. So, you see, a pack of cards serves for a Bible, an almanac and a common prayer-book.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

What Is Appetite?

HEALTHY APPETITE TEACHES US WHEN WE OUGHT TO EAT.

Without Appetite We Would Not Eat, We Would Not Live.

Convalescents are always hungry: they are growing well. Children have great appetite: they are growing big. Healthy people have good appetites: their stomachs need food to replace the waste tissue and fat consumed by the body.

If your appetite is bad, you are sick. Your stomach does not wish to work. Your store of fat will decrease. You will get thinner. You will sooner or later waste away. This is consumption.

If you do not waste away, but remain always thin, you are still laying yourself open to the attacks of disease. Fat is nothing but nature's reserve force or fuel. You cannot be absolutely healthy unless you are normally fat.

What makes Paskola the great "appetizer," is the fact that it aids the stomach to digest all other food, is itself at once absorbed into the system, and thus leaves the stomach perfectly empty. As soon as this happens hunger occurs. The reason so many dyspeptics have no appetite is that their stomach are constantly full of imperfectly digested food.

There is only one way to permanently remedy this, and that is by the use of Paskola. Paskola being a pre-digested food is directly absorbed, and gives the stomache no work. It brings back a healthy appetite and will make even a consumptive healthy and fat.

MODERN MIRACLES.

CAREFUL AND COMPLETE INVESTIGATION BY A "JOURNAL" REPORTER.

A Searching Inquiry as to Startling Statements Recently Published.

[FROM THE ALBANY, N. Y., EVENING JOURNAL.]

A few days since, the Times-Union of this city published a remarkable letter under the head lines of "An Athens Miracle." The statement made were so unusual, and the interest occasioned so great, that an investigation by a "Journal" reporter seemed a necessity. The letter was that Mr. Lewis Clow, of Athens, N. Y., had been stricken with kidney disease. The best of medical attendance was obtained, and failed to benefit him. While in this almost hopeless condition, he began the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and it cured him; and furthermore, that there were other residents who had a simular experience.

To verify these statements and get what other information would be of interest to our readers, the Journal representative left Albany and soon found himself in the pretty village of Athens. It did not take long to satisfy the reporter that the statements of Mr. Clow were in every way true. The Rev. D. William Lawrence, pastor of the Lutheran church, Postmaster True and Justice of the Peace Goeller, when asked about it, said that every word was true to their knowledge. Mr. Clow was at death's door suffering with kidney trouble. The physicians failed to help him, and he was cured by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Also that Favorite Remedy had performed as marvelous a cure for Mrs. Casper Brooks, wife of the proprietor of the Robins House, of that place

Calling upon Mrs. Brooks, your reporter stated his mission, and Mrs. Brooks replied that she would be perfectly willing to tell all about her wonderful recovery.

"Yes," said she, "I had a hard fight for health, but Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy restored mine. My first trouble was ulcers of the womb, and they caused me the most intense pain and suffering. I consulted our regular physician, but he did not benefit me; in fact, I kept growing worse. My kidneys were getting very much diseased, and this combination of troubles was almost unbearable. At my husband's suggestion, I consulted physicians at Albany, Hudson and Chatham, and took their medicines and prescriptions faithfully, but found no benefit. You can imagine my terrible condition at this time, after employing five of the best physicians, all to no purpose; but at this dark hour a ray of light broke in upon me. Dr. William Smith, of Jewett Heights, was recommended, and it is to him I owe my good health, for it was Dr. Smith who prescribed Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy for me. I purchased a bottle and commenced taking it, and began to feel better and kept improving daily, the ulcers healed up, and my kidney trouble left me entirely. My case was greatly complicated, and did not stop here; I suffered misery from those terrible headaches so common among women, but I kept on taking Favorite Remedy; and am now entirely free from these diseases.

"I am told that I have a tumor that cannot be cured unless I go to a hospital, but I think Favorite Remedy will, in time, cure that. I have been so well for the past few months, said Mrs. Brooks," with a smile on her face, "that I do nearly all the work about the hotel, and am getting along with about one-half the help we used to employ. I certainly don't want to pose as a miracle, but what else could you call my recovery?"

Such a straightforward statement convinced the Journal reported that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was certainly a Godsend to the sick and suffering.

Hundreds of people in and about Athens are conversant with the facts of these cases.

In speaking to Mr. Horton, the well-known druggist of that place, he said: "Oh, yes, we sell quantities of Favorite Remedy. Why, there's Joseph McGiffert, William Mackey, Martin Hallenbeck, Casper Hallenbeck, Mrs. Robert Tiffany, and many others, say that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is worth its weight in gold."

The investigations of the Journal reporter admit of but one conclusion; that as this great medicine is within the reach of all, it should be used by those who are suffering from rheumatism, dyspepsia, biliousness, kidney, liver and urinary troubles. It will correct the worst cases of habitual constipation, and is a certain cure for the diseases and weakness of women, particularly those that originate in change of life. It cures scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, eczema, ulcers, sores and tumors, gravel, diabetes or Bright's disease. Favorite Remedy is acknowledged by the medical profession as nature's antidote for uric acid.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and it never fails to cure when the directions are followed. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is to be found with every dealer in medicine, at one dollar a bottle, or six bottles for five dollars.

Mr. Peter of Schoharie Moralizes.

Ye'd like to be a boy again? I wouldn't, ye can bet
I'm satisfied jest as I am; age brings me no regret.
I'm havin' finer times these days than when I was a lad,
An' wishin' I was back again's a wish I never had.
I wouldn't have to go to school for all the cash there be,
A-learnin' how to read and write and study g'og raphy
With that red-headed teacher, with his frownin', lammin' way,
To spank me 'cause I'd mix Maine up with Pennsylvaniay.
An' drivin' cows to pasture every day at 6 a. m.,
An' gittin thrashed for fishin' 'stead o' keepin' track o' them,
'Ain't got no sentiment for me. I never did enjoy,
The trials that I allers got for bein' just a boy.
An' furthermore, I'd ruther have the misery of life
I went through when it came to choosin' Marthy for my wife
To look back on an' shiver 'bout, jest as I now kin do,
Than havin' it a thing to come to be looked forward to.
An' as for chums, I wouldn't swap them little sons o' mine
For twenty thousand of the chums I had when I was nine;
An' when it comes to eatin', why, it sort o' suits my eye
T. know that if I want it I can eat a whole mince pie.

You fellers kin be boys again if so it pleases ye,
But where I stand just now's the age of ages all for me.
I'm satisfied with what I am, old, gray, and bent withal;
It's sort o' pleasant to be old and know ye know it all.

A WELL-EARNED DINNER.

Fresh meat was a very scarce article aboard the gunboats comprising the blockading fleet off Wilmington, N. C., about Thanksgiving time, 1864. This was especially the case on the United States steamer "Wilderness." To be sure, we had the canned meat which was furnished by the government, but that always tasted the same, never mind how nicely it was cooked. And then the blue-jackets used to look at it so suspiciously, handle it so gingerly, and mince and dawdle with it, when it was served out to them.

Some would even whistle to it, and look surprised that it did not respond like a dog. Others would claim that it was not fit to eat, and refuse it. Altogether, the encouragement to eat "soup and bully," as they used to call it, was none of the best, and we longed for our coal to get low in the bunkers, that we might therefore be compelled to run to Beaufort for more fuel, when we could also take in a supply of fresh provisions.

Early in the morning of the day we expected to realize our anticipations, a schooner laden with coal appeared on the blockade, and we were ordered to take our supply from her.

This meant to delay our visit to Beaufort for at least three weeks. What we were to do for the wherewithal to celebrate Thanksgiving was a much-discussed question. The shore, bristling with an enemy's guns, so far as we could see, offered no easy solution to the problem. There was but one house near the coast for fifty miles, and that, although but a short distance inland, up Masonboro Inlet, was only a few miles north of Fort Fisher, with Half Moon and Flag Pond batteries lying between.

It was very apparent that the utmost caution would be necessary in approaching this house. Besides, the stories that were told concerning its occupants by officers who had been on the station longer than we were not calculated to inspire us with hope of success should we undertake operations in this direction.

It was said to be the home of a well-to-do planter, who entertained Confederate officers, and that frequently, for days at a time, the presence of soldiers and officers in the immediate vicinity of the house caused it to more closely resemble a military barrack than a private residence. There was one thing upon which we all agreed; if we were to have anything fresh for the next day's feasting, or anything that was better than that which Uncle Sam's larder provided, it must come from that house, for there was absolutely no other source of supply short of Beaufort.

There was to be a full moon that night, and, as the sky was clear, indications were that we would give our station near Fort Fisher a wide berth.

At sundown we weighed anchor and started in toward the fort, slowly, maintaining this course until within a mile of the shore, when we turned and steamed in a northeasterly direction as far as the inlet, where we stopped.

The captain, Doc Higgins, Steve Reyburn, the chief engineer, and the writer were standing by the wheel-house on the upper deck, where we had been discussing chickens and geese and the danger of an effort to secure them at this place. All but the doctor agreed that it would be unwise to attempt it, and had about concluded to abandon the idea, when the doctor said:—

"It's no use, captain: we surely can't get anything unless we try, and I'm willing to try."

"Better not do it, doc," said the captain. "The risk is too great and the game too small. What's a few chickens?"

"Everything on the blockade, captain. Besides, there's a good moon to-night, and we can easily see what's going on."

"There used to be a flying battery up here, and a dangerous one too, if all accounts are true," said the captain, musingly.

"We can easily give that the slip."

"Who will take charge of the boat?"

"I will, and be glad to. Give me four good men, and I'll go up Masonboro Inlet, call at that house, and if we don't have chickens and sweet potatoes for to-morrow's breakfast and dinner it will be because there is nothing of the kind to be bought, begged, or stolen."

"Broiled chickens certainly are an inducement," said the captain, with a smile at the earnestness of the doctor. "All right; go ahead." And he turned to the deck officer and ordered his gig to be lowered.

A few minutes later, the captain's gig dropped noiselessly into the water. The doctor, the writer, Tom Savage, Bob Saunders, Fireman Daly, and Jack Allen, seamen, then stepped into the boat; the oars, well muffled, were placed in the oarlocks, the man in the bow pushed off, and we left our vessel, stealing silently away and into the black shadows of the tall pines which grew on the left bank of the inlet.

"Now, boys," said the doctor, after we had fairly started up the creek, "keep your eyes open to-night, and look and listen hard. Let me do all the talking there is to be done. If we get what we're after, you can all count on a square breakfast in the morning."

"'Nd the docthor's a man that'll kape his wurrud," added Fireman Daly.

"Saw wood, Daly," said Allen, who was pulling stroke-oar. "Don't catch any crabs, my boy."

"Divil a crab 'll I catch whin it's chickens I want."

"Pull steadily, then, and save your breath. If you don't need it before we get back to the ship, your name's not Daly."

"Oh, niver ye moind Daly. He'll kape his ind up."

"Steady, boys; go easy," interrupted the doctor. "Words don't count. This is business."

"Begorra, but ye're right!" responded Daly, after which he lapsed into silence.

We hugged the shadowy bank all the way up the creek to a low bridge, beneath which we crossed to the other side, where we fastened the boat and, with the exception of Saunders, who was to act as boatkeeper, stepped ashore.

Only a few rods from where we landed stood a fine old house, the first two stories of which were surrounded with broad piazzas.

Through the white curtain of a side window gleamed a light. Whether we were running into an enemy's camp was the first bit of information necessary to be acquired. Accordingly, at the doctor's suggestion, our party was divided, so that after making a wide detour we should approach the house from different directions.

After completing our examination without finding any signs of the enemy, we all went boldly to the front-door, where a quaint, old-style brass knocker served to arouse the occupants of the house. A negro answered the summons, exclaiming, as he saw the uniform of the doctor:—

"Goliy! Who you is?"

"Where's your master, boy?" asked the doctor, without answering the question.

"Who all is it, Luke?" queried the hoarse voice of a female, from the rear end of the hall.

"No one to be afraid of, madam," responded the doctor, stepping at once into the house. "We belong to a gunboat—wait a moment, don't be frightened," he added quickly, as the woman stepped back into the room and shut the door.

The doctor and the rest of us followed at once, and reached the room just as the woman had placed a lighted candle on the table near to one of the rear windows.

Tom Savage, who was behind the doctor when he entered the room, noticed the action, and at once hurried across the floor, and with his thumb and fingers nipped out the flame of the dip, remarking as he did so:—

"If that candle wasn't a signal, I'll throw up my billet as Jack o'-the dust."

"The murtherin' owld Banshee," growled Daly.

"What you all s want?" asked the woman, with a savage look at Tom. "Going to burn down the house, same's you burned down the salt-works?"

"No, madam," said the doctor, "we're not here to burn anything. We simply want to buy chickens, eggs, and sweet potatoes, that is," noting a quizzical expression in the face of the woman, "if you have any to sell."

"Master and mistress have gone to Wilmington, and I got no right to sell you uns anything."

"Have you got any right to sell to any one?" asked the doctor mildly.

"Yes, to the people of the fort."

"Why not sell to us. We'll pay you better than they will."

"Pay in gold?" said the woman, softening.

"No, but we'll give you the difference in greenbacks, which is just as good."

"Won't skedaddle without paying when you get your chickens?"

"No, you shall have your money in advance, if you can't trust me. What have you got to sell?"

"Half a dozen pairs of chickens, a lot of sweet potatoes, and all the fresh pork you want. There ain't no eggs. Sent 'em to the fort yesterday."

"That will do; we'll take what we can get," said the doctor.

"Here, you, Luke," spoke the woman sharply to the colored boy, who had been standing near by, gazing at us. "Get out to the smoke-house and bring in that pig you killed to-day. Better let one of these men go with him," to the doctor, "and you, Luke, get the men those chickens out'n the well-cover. Lively, now! If the boys at the battery seen the light in the window they'll be here in half an hour."

"Told you so," said Savage to Daly. "I knew that's what she was up to."

"Bad cess to her," ejaculated Daly, "she's a greedy old kite."

"Here, you," said the woman, addressing Allen, who carried a bag, "come down cellar after the potatoes. These were going to the fort in the morning, but greenbacks 's a heap better'n scrip. Be quick, you've got no time to lose!"

A few moments later Allen appeared with the potatoes, and while the doctor was paying for these, Luke and Savage came in with the pork and the chickens.

"That will be enough, will it?" remarked the doctor, as he finished counting and passed to the woman a handful of greenbacks.

"Yes, yes, that's enough; you'd better get out 'o here now. 'Pears like I just heard the battery wheels on the corduroy road, 'bout a quarter-mile below. They'll be here in less'n ten minutes."

Without further ceremony the men with the potatoes and half a dozen pairs of chickens, and Luke with the pork, started out of the house at a lively pace for the gig.

Reaching the boat, our purchases were thrown in, we quickly followed them, pushed off, and with a hurried good-night to Luke, who stood in the shadow of the bridge watching us, we crossed the creek, gained the shadows of the trees on the other side, and sped quickly away down the stream.

"If we land this load 'board ship, we'll do a good night's work," said Savage, as he tugged away at his oar.

"Begorra, but we'll land it! And why wouldn't we? It's foine pickin', is grub like that; 'nd what'd a felly foight fer, if he w'uldn't foight fer his grub? Av coorse, we'll land it."

"Give away hard, men!" interrupted the doctor. "We must gain all we can before they cross the bridge. The road is along the creek, through the woods after that, and must be better going than through the loose sand. With hard bottom to run on, they'll soon overtake us if we don't look sharp. Five minutes' hard work now means a good deal to us."

The men bent to their oars with a will, and the gig now rushed swiftly through the black water of the creek. After a few moments of silence, we heard a hollow, rumbling noise, made by the battery as it crossed the bridge.

"Begorra, but there they are, comin' lickety larrup!" exclaimed Daly.

"Pull, men, pull steadily, every stroke tells; the tide is ebbing, and we have the current with us."

Silently, as regularly as if operated by machinery, the men dipped their oars, compelling the boat to fairly leap through the water with each stroke.

A few moments later, and we could hear the heavy tramp of horses' feet along the forest road; then we heard the voices of men urging the animals to greater speed.

"They're gaining on us, doc," I said.

"I know it, replied the doctor. "But I can see the tall pine just at the mouth of the creek. "We'll soon be out of this."

All at once the tramping ceased. An instant later and a succession of flashes and reports of musketry indicated that our pursuers were attempting to cripple us without using the battery.

"May the divil fly away wid ye!" said Daly, as the bullets whistled harmlessly above our heads. "Ye'll hurt nobody here."

The doctor steered the boat closer to the bank, where the shadows were more dense.

"You'll loose the benefit of the current if you run in closer," I said.

"I know it; but we'll be out of the way of their bullets. Besides, while they stand there, firing, we'll be gaining on them."

Volley after volley they fired, and the spiteful "zip! zip!" of the bullets, as they flew by, plainly told us of the determination not to permit us to escape.

An interval of silence, then from Daly:—

"They're after us again, byes! Hear 'em the schpalpeens!"

"We're all right now, boys! Here we are at the mouth! Hold! Way enough! Back water! Back her off! Put your oar into the water, Tom, and push! Be quick!"

We had run into a little point of land that jutted out under water from the bank. The men backed with their oars, while Tom Savage, at the bow, pushed with his oar, but all to no purpose; the boat held fast.

In a second the doctor had jumped into the water and forced his way to the bow.

"Get into the stern, all of you! Hurry!" Quickly the men left their seats and scrambled to the stern of the boat. At the same instant, the doctor, with both hands under the stem, lifted the boat clear of the bed in which she was grounded, and pushing her into deeper water, jumped in.

The men resumed their seats, and once more we glided through the water.

"Now, boys," said the dripping doctor, "we've got to run out into the moonlight, so the 'Wilderness' can see us. If we go as we are, we'll be in a straight line between the battery and the steamer, and that will never do. It's all there is left for us. The battery is close by and coming like the wind. They'll see us, too, of course, as soon as we get out, and, may be, will try a shot or two with their rifles; but they'll see us as quickly if we don't get out, and we've got to take chances. We want all the help just now we can get."

"Moonlight it is, docthor; we take no more chances than ye," said Daly.

"Now for it, men!" urged the doctor, as he pointed the prow of the gig toward the opposite shore and directly into the broad expanse of moonlit water. "Pull! Pull for your lives!"

The gig sprang out of the shadowy darkness into the moonlight. I have seen men in the excitement of a race strain every muscle in urging their boat to still greater speed, as they realized the danger of being vanquished in the race, by some well-mannered pursuer behind them; but I never saw, and I never expect to see, four men so ably and heroically handle their oars as these men did in their effort to get out of the way of the bullets.

With surprising swiftness we had nearly covered half the distance across the creek before a shot was fired. Then a volley of rifle shots warned us that we were seen, and that it was now, indeed, a struggle for life.

Before there was time for the enemy to fire another shot, we saw a bright flash from the side of the "Wilderness." Almost at the same instant came the report, then the long trail of fire from the burning fuse; then the explosion of the shell directly at the point from which the light of the enemy's guns had located them.

"Bedad, but that was a foine shot!" exclaimed the irrepressible Daly. "'Twas the captain sighted that gun. Divil a man else."

"He strikes twelve every time," observed Savage.

"Faith an' he'd as leve hit thirteen as twilve," replied Daly.

"Pull, boys, pull! We're not out of it yet. We'll get the battery next. The ship's coming this way and we've got to take that with us.

As the doctor ceased speaking, he suddenly turned the course of the boat to a right angle from the direction he had been steering.

Hardly had he done so when a succession of flashes and a flight of shells screamed through the air and ricochetted over the water in our wake.

"Howly smoke, but that was a close one," said Daly. "Sure, it's the docthor knows when it's toime to move."

A reply from the "Wilderness" came speedily, and in good earnest, for it seemed as if every shell must have burst near the battery.

A few moments more, and we were alongside the "Wilderness" and steaming away at full speed. Of course, we were congratulated over our narrow escape, and the doctor was lionized as a hero. The success of the expedition was made apparent to the men who took part in it by as choice a roast cut from the pig we secured as it was possible to select. To this was added sweet potatoes enough to go around and to spare, together with a can of condensed milk from the doctor's own private supply.

We enjoyed our Thanksgiving dinner, but after it was finished, Steve Reyburn brought us all to a realizing sense of the risk we ran in obtaining it by quoting the words of the captain uttered the night before:—

A MAN OF FEW WORDS.

Old Simmons advertised for a secretary, and when a young man presented himself the old fellow looked at him sharply, and in a gruff voice asked:

"Well, sir, what can you do?"

"Don't know exactly—haven't sized myself up in a complete way yet, but I think that I can manage to hold my end up."

"Yes, you think so. Now, sir, I want a man to do my writing, and I want him to be a man of judgment. Do you understand?"

"Yes."

"I don't want any namby-pamby fellow about me. I want a man to catch my ideas at once, and in expressing them to my correspondents to use as few words as possible."

"Think I'm your man, sir!"

"I don't want any scallops, understand. I want plain words—want a spade to be called a spade."

"All right, sir, and if I don't suit you, I don't think there is anybody that can."

"What is your name?"

"Spires."

"Very good, Mr. Spires, you may go to work."

When the old man took up the first letter that Spires had written he looked at it a moment, and then uttered an angry exclamation. "Why, what do you mean here? After signing my name you have put the word 'Sweats.' What did you do that for?"

"Why, to carry out your idea of calling a spade a spade, for, instead of saying per Spires, I have simply added Sweats, which you know means the same thing, expressed in a simpler way."

"Mr. Spires," said the old man, and his voice trembled, "I shall take you into full co-partnership at once. I have a beautiful daughter, sir. Come with me to my home."

Judge Begad—"Prisoner at the bar, you are charged with shooting the plaintiff through each ear, one foot, an elbow, and along the tip of his head. What have you to say for yourself?" Alkali Ike (the prisoner)—"Wal, I didn't have no kilin' grudge ag'in him, an' so I jest shot him in the thin places around the edges so's not to hurt him too much."—Life.

PALMER NEWS.

THE ADJOURNED TOWN MEETING.

A Large Attendance. Full Account of the Doings, and List of Appropriations.

The adjourned town meeting began to-day at 10 a. m. and closed at 12.30 p. m., an unusually short session for the matters involved and the number in attendance, which was unusually large. The record of the meeting follows:

THE RECOMMENDATTIONS OF THE COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN.

That the town borrow $20,000 at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent for the purpose of paying present indebtedness, the town now paying 5 per cent.

For the suppression of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, $1000.

For the Young Men's Library Association $800, with the request that the association change its by-laws so that the chairman of the selectmen and school committee be members ex-officio, of the association and the board of directors.

Lighting the streets of the town, $7 000.

Memorial Day, $100.

G. A. R. Post relief fund, $300.

To indefinitely postpone the matter of buying a stone crusher.

For bell, and improvements on engine house in the Depot village, $650.

To indefinitely postpone the matter of a town hall.

That the town pay the cost of interments in the Catholic cemetery, the same as in other cemeteries. That the matter of other interments be left with the selectmen.

That the selectmen be authorized to appoint such officers as they may deem necessary to maintain order on the streets and sidewalks of the several villages, and appropriate $1600 therefor.

That High street in Thorndike be widened so that a sidewalk may be built, and raise and appropriate $1600 therefor.

To extend the sewer on Main street in Thorndike 150 feet toward the Catholic church, and raise and appropriate $150.

Contingencies, $3500.

Railings, $200.

Highways, $4500.

Bridges, $1000.

Sewers and culverts, $500.

Discount on taxes, $2200.

Interest, $800.

Change of railroad crossings, $1000.

Board of health, for publishing rules and regulations, $100.

Support of poor, $6000.

Contingent fund for overseers of poor, $300.

Teachers' salaries, $12,000.

Text books and supplies, $1000.

Care of houses, $1000.

Repairs of houses, $800.

Fuel, $1500.

Contingencies and superintendent's salary, $1700.

Transportation of pupils, $1600.

To appropriate from money unexpended last year by school committee and now in the town treasury,—$461.42,—sidewalks for school houses, grading around grammar school in Depot village.

That the assessors be instructed to assess the entire amount voted to be raised and appropriated, less the amount of license money to be received.

The list of jurors was accepted after adding the names of James P. Gallcher and Michael Griffin, and removing the name of William Brown.

It was voted to accept the reports of the town officers as printed in the town report.

The motion to appropriate $6000 for the support of the poor was amended to $7000 by Overseer of the Poor Merrian, who stated that they were $1000 in debt for last year and this should be paid, and it was voted.

Voted that the assessors be instructed to assess the total sum to be raised and appropriated less the amount to be received from liquor licenses.

The treasurer, with advice and consent of the selectmen, was authorized to borrow not exceeding $10,000 in anticipation of the taxes of the ensuing year, to be paid from said taxes. He was also authorized to borrow $20,000 at not exceeding 4 per cent, to pay the present indebtedness of the town, for which the town is now paying 5 per cent.

A discount of 6 per cent was voted on all taxes paid on or before Sept. 1, and that interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum be charged on all taxes unpaid on that date. The tax collector's salary was fixed at $350, all taxes to be collected and paid into the town treasury by Feb. 1, 1895.

The manner of repairing the highways and bridges was left with the selectmen.

The sum of $600 was appropriated to suppress the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, after amending a motion for $1000, and dividing the house, the matter being left with the selectmen.

The suits pending against the town were left in the care of the selectmen.

The purchase of a stone crusher and steam roller was indefinitely postponed, as was also the question of giving the Palmer Cemetery Association full control of the cemetery at the Depot village.

The question of medical attendance for the poor was left with the selectmen.

The question of establishing a town library was indefinitely postponed.

The recommendation of $650 for a bell and other improvements at the engine house caused much discussion and some feeling, and it was finally defeated, the count being made by the voters passing through the gates in front of the moderator; then $200 was voted for improvements on the engine house, provided the fire district wished to put a bell thereon.

The matter of a town house was indefinitely postponed.

It was voted that the town pay the expense of interments in the Catholic cemeteries, the same as in the other cemeteries, and that other matters regarding other interments be left with the selectmen.

The highway in the Depot village known as Converse avenue, as laid out by the selectmen, was accepted.

The selectmen were authorized to employ such special officers as they might deem necessary to maintain order on the sidewalks and streets of the town, for which $1600 was appropriated.

The school committee was instructed to use money now on hand to build sidewalks at the various schools, and grade about the grammar school building in the Depot village.

A part of High street in Thorndike was ordered widened, and $125 was appropriated for the same. The sum of $390 was appropriated for a part of the cost of sidewalks, and the selectmen empowered to order them built where they deemed it necessary.

The grading of the road from the Baptist church to the iron bridge in Three Rivers was indefinitely postponed. The sewer on Main street in Thorndike was ordered extended 150 feet toward the Catholic church. Voted to drain Main street in Three Rivers from the residence of C. P. Haynes to Charles street.

An electric light was ordered erected near the residence of Mrs. Cornelius McAuliffe on Main street in Thorddike, and the matter of other lights was left with the selectmen with full power.

The committee on sewers made a report of the plan arranged for the several villages of the town, but it was impossible to give it this week, and it will appear in detail next Friday. The sum of $37,000 was recommended for a storm-water system, but the matter was indefinitely postponed.

The board of health was authorized to make such rules and regulations as it might deem necessary, and publish the same.

R. C. Newell, C. B. Fiske and J. B. Shaw were reappointed a committee to devise a new system of keeping the town accounts.

These officers were elected: Surveyers of lumber and measurers of wood and bark—H. P. Marcy, R. L. Bond, H. T. Bishop, C. P. Haynes, G. W. Lyman, J. A. Palmer. Field drivers—Dennis Mahoney, E. E. Ryther, Morris McCormick, Patrick Hurley, J. R. Wellman, W. A. Lawson. Sealer of weights and measures, J. B. Shaw.

The appropriations are:

The Third Farmers' Institute

Was held in this village at the court room on Tuesday. Prof. S. T. Maynard of the Agricultural College at Amherst was the speaker. His topic was "Fruit Culture in Massachusetts." He first gave some statistics regarding the enormous quantities of fruit consumed in this country, by which he showed that it ought to be a profitable product to raise. He dwelt at length upon the best methods of treating various fruit trees with fertilizers also how best to combat the pests which infest fruit—the small boy not included. He concluded that we must fight the insect pests at every turn, in order to produce perfect fruit, by the appliance of washes to the trunks of trees and by spraying the branches and foliage with insecticides at the proper time, which can be done at a small outlay of time and money. His lecture was well worth hearing, and should have been listened to by a crowded room, though only twenty-five were present. It is a reflection upon the society that so few attend these institutes, which are furnished with speakers at the expense of the state. It shows a great lack of interest on the part of the farmers, who should be alive to their best interests and turn out to learn valuable hints from scientific men who devote their energies to the subjects about which they speak. A pamphlet will soon be issued by the Experiment Station at Amherst on the whole subject of fruit and its production and protection, a copy of which will be sent to any one applying for it, or if the names are left with the secretary of the Eastern Hampden Society, O. P. Allen, he will forward the names with pleasure.

The list of voters for the fire district meeting has been posted.

C. L. Gardner is painting the exterior of his house on Church street.

Mrs. C. J. Tuthill of Saylesville, R. I., is the guest of Mrs. J. T. Tuthill.

Miss Carrie Tuthill is home from Brown University at Providence, R. I.

Calvin Hastings will give a party to about thirty of his friends this evening.

Mrs. W. W. Leach has been spending the week with friends in Somerville.

Calvin Hastings has been home from school at Newberg, N. Y., the past week.

The selectmen will meet next Monday for organization and the payment of bills.

Miss Carrie Moore of Springfield is the guest this week of Miss Blanche Hastings.

The warrant for the annual meeting of the fire district will be found in another column.

Mrs. J. T. Warren of Brattleboro, Vt., spent last week with her daughter, Mrs. Auger.

E. B. Taylor, who went South a few weeks ago for his health, is expected home next Sunday.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club will meet next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. L. E. Chandler.

Hattie P. Hubert has been appointed executrix of the will of Margaret Hubert, late of Palmer.

Mrs. L. E. Carpenter will have have her opening of spring and summer millinery and novelties to-morrow.

W. E. Stone has the agency for the Bradley and Coe fertilizers, in all the grades made by each manufacturer.

W. E. Breckenridge has been home from Newberg, N. Y., the past week, accompanied by a friend, Mr. Edgell.

The Lend-a-Hand Club of the Congregational church will meet next Monday afternoon with Mrs. J. B. Shaw.

Robert F. Hovey is to go to Worcester next week to study medicine with Dr. J. K. Warren, formerly of Palmer.

A bunch of keys, the loss of which is causing the loser considerable inconvenience, is advertised for in another column.

John McKenna of Waltham, Grand Guide of the Royal Arcanum, was the guest yesterday and to-day of Judge George Robinson.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins of the Congregational church will speak on temperance in the town hall at Warren next Sunday evening.

The Daughters of Rebekah will serve a ten-cent supper in their parlors next Friday evening, from 6 to 8. The public is invited.

John Page, formerly of Palmer, now of the School for Christian Workers at Springfield, has been spending the week with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Breckenridge.

The regular monthly meeting of the Eaton Club of the Universalist church will be held next Monday evening at 7.30, when an entertainment will be arranged.

The pews in St. Paul's Universalist church will be rented next Thursday evening at 7.30, when all who desire pews in this church should meet the parish officers.

H. A. Northrop has a gang of men at work digging the cellar east of the opera house site for J. P. Lynde's block, which is to be moved from its present location.

At the Congregational Sunday school next Sunday the illustration of the life of Christ by the aid of the stereopticon will be resumed with a number of fine pictures.

The Woman's Relief Corps is making arrangements for an Old Folks' concert, to be given in Memorial Hall on the evening of April 10th. A social dance will follow the concert.

A special train was run to Monson Tuesday evening to the concert by the Old Homestead Quartet and the Springfield Guitar and Mandolin Club, and was well patronized by Palmer people.

It is reported that J. T. Bostock, formerly agent for the Boston and Albany road at Palmer, who left to go South seven or eight years ago, is to return to this vicinity as station agent at Warren.

After the finest of weather for the first three weeks of March the month has at last shown its true character, and the past week has been of the kind usually credited the third month of the year.

Palmer friends of Lecturer Conwell may be interested to know that tickets for his lecture at Memorial Hall, Monson, Tuesday, April 10th, go on sale at Keeney's drug store in Monson next Monday.

The law will be off on trout to-morrow night, and if Sunday should be a pleasant day and certain seats in the churches be not filled, there are those uncharitable enough to attempt to put two and two together and claim the result as four.

C. W. Johnson has the contract to move for H. P. Holden the tenement house which stood between the opera house and Dr. Holbrook's residence, and which must be shifted several feet to allow the placing of Lynde's block in front of it.

The Men's Sunday Evening Club connected with the Congregational church held its regular quarterly meeting Sunday evening and elected these officers for the ensuing three months: President, L. H. Gager; vice president, O. P. Allen; secretary, F. B. Pope; treasurer, H. W. McGregory.

The ruins of the burned blocks which have lain in the vacant lot of the Boston and Albany road between the stores of H. McGilp and C. D. Holbrook for several years, have been cleared away this week, with the unsightly heaps of coal ashes accumulated through the winter.

The pastor of the Congregational church will take for his subject next Sunday morning, "Put Yourself in His Place." In the evening there will be a people's service, entitled "At the Cross," under the auspices of the Men's Sunday Evening Club. It will have a full musical programme, and Rev. Harris G. Hale of Warren will speak.

A large number of the Royal Arcanum members and Odd Fellows, also several members of the Eastern Star, attended meetings of the various orders at Springfield Wednesday evening, returning by special train. Six Past Grands of the Odd Fellows lodge here took the Grand Lodge degrees at the meeting of that body that evening.

A large party of members of the A.O.U.W. attended the special meeting of the order at Three Rivers Tuesday evening to consider the question of building a hall at that place. The structure will probably be built at some time, but action is postponed for the present. The party went by train and was brought home in Twiss's 'bus, reporting a royal good time.

Local members of the Golden Grail—one of the various endowment orders which flourished for a time—who have not sold their certificates have been notified by the receiver this week that a dividend of 11 per cent would be paid on all sums paid into the benefit fund, and that all assessments above 11 in the year class and 44 in the six months class would be returned in full. Some of the members here paid in about $116 in the hope of getting their $100 back.

In the district court last Saturday the civil case of Giovanni against Leadbetter was commenced but not finished, and will be continued to-morrow. In the criminal court last Friday afternoon Frank Allen, for neglecting to provide proper and sufficient food for his horse, was fined $10. On Monday John Bredaw of Bondsville paid $10 for having been drunk. Frank Cygan and Peter Skrzynarez, for an assault on John Bredaw, paid $5 each, while cases against the same for disturbing the peace on Sunday were continued for sentence.

The fifth and last recital given by pupils of Mrs. Auger will be held next Friday at 3.30 p. m. The following is the programme:

(a) Hungarian Dance	Sharnenka
(b) Mazourka	Saint Saens
Maud Murdock.
Mazourka	Vera Tryon

With next Sunday there will be a change in the makeup of the choir at the Congregational church, and the singing will be by a quartette instead of a chorus choir, as for the past three years. The quartette will be composed of Miss Georgia Packard, soprano; Mrs. Rufus Flynt, contralto; H. W. McGregory, tenor; C. H. Clark of Thorndike, bass. Mrs. H. W. Small will be the organist, and Mrs. Flynt will have charge of the music. There will also be a slight change in the choir at St. Paul's Universalist church, which will be composed for the present of Miss Clara Sexton of Springfield, soprano; Miss Effie Moffat, contralto; G. W. Ely, tenor; F. A. Royce, bass. Mr. Ely is director, and Mrs. Melen Warren Auger, organist.

Mrs. S. T. Frost was surprised Tuesday afternoon by quite a number of her friends from the W. C. T. U., and other ladies, who called to offer congratulations on her 50th birthday and express their pleasure at her recovery from a recent illness. A neat little sum of money was given her, with other tokens of loving regard. Mrs. Frost is also indebted to the King's Daughters, Revere Chapter O. E. S., and others for keeping her room supplied with beautiful flowers, and for many other kindnesses received which helped to lighten the gloom of the past few weeks. She wishes to express her thanks for every kind thought expressed, by word or action, and assure them that they will ever be held in grateful remembrance.

St. Paul's Universalist church was tastefully decorated last Sunday in green and white, and the morning service was largely attended. An Easter offering of $91 in two new silver offertory plates—a present to the church by a friend—was made for the choir in acknowledgement of their creditable and faithful services during the past year. At the close of the sermon the rite of baptism was administered to six persons, three others were confirmed, and four received the fellowship of the church by letters. Holy communion immediately followed. In the evening a pleasing Easter concert was given by the children of the Sunday school. The members of the choir each received an appreciative letter from the parish committee, with a substantial check from the parish treasurer, Monday, in recognition of their services.

Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Converse entertained a number of friends at a whist party at their home Tuesday evening. There were nine tables, and a very pleasant evening was passed. The prizes for the highest scores were awarded Mrs. F. D. Barton and G. A. Adams, while the ones for the smallest number of points won went to Miss Anna Shaw and Dr. E. S. Bryant. There were present Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Stone, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Small, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Hellyar, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. McGregory, Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Wilkins, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Flynt, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Barton, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Holden, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Holden, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Chandler, Miss Anna Shaw, Miss Idelar Holbrook, Miss Mabel Tillson, Miss Hattie Blanchard, Miss Julia Cook, Miss Mabel Smith, G. A. Adams, George Holden, J. P. Lynde, C. G. Gardner, N. W. Chandler, Dr. E. S. Bryant.

The "Experience Party" given at the Congregational church Wednesday evening by the young people of the Christian Endeavor society was an interesting affair. The participants have been trying to earn a certain sum each in a given time by some unusual method, their experiences being told in rhyme or by tableaux. The experiences were numerous and varied, ranging on the part of the gentlemen from shaving a friend and mending his clothes to getting a meal and contracting to sweep a whole house. One masqueraded in female attire as a vender of confectionery, while others had assisted about the house as kitchen girls (?) and chambermaids, and one had been barber for his wife. The ladies had blacked boots, soldered tinware, turned grindstones, sold bread, cake, etc. After the various experiences had been related ice cream, cake and lemonade were served. An orchestra composed of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Weld, Dr. E. S. Bryant, J. P. Lynde, and a violinist from Springfield, furnished music during the evening. The society cleared about $40.

An Open Letter.

PALMER, Mass., March 29, 1894.

Dear Nameless Whiskyites:—The Jack posted "Nightingale" over his stall, but when he sang the people heard the same old bray. Be men, come out and make an honest whisky fight and do not pose as "Citizen," "The truth about it," "XXX" etc. We smell your breath every time. We all know that you either fear your names will injure your cause or are ashamed of what you are doing. Quit your skulking, you deceive yourselves only. Dear friends, it is useless to shout "We are not hurt, we like it," when you are kicking and squirming as you are. We all know you are hit and hit hard, and so do you. Get up, hit back in a fair fight. Meet us in open debate, we are ready; if you write, sign your names, as we do. But if you will not do this, shout away! We have whole magazines of ammunition on board that we have not opened yet. We are equipped, too, with modern search lights. You and the saloons where you spend your time will have a year of such light as you never lived in before. Now, friends, permit me to address a few words to some of you separately.

Dear "Citizen:"—You say, but you do not dare say it over your own name, "Most of the intoxicants sold in Palmer are consumed by those who do not live in town." You also argue that just as much will be drunk in Palmer under no-license as under license. Do you think the people have neither sense, heart, or conscience? Why do the bummers come to Palmer for their rum from no-license towns, if no-license is just as bad as, or worse than license? Is it good business or citizenship to make Palmer the dumping place of all the filth of the whole region? Is it right to treat our neighboring towns as we do? They do not want rum and we force it on them. We get our deserts in the name they give us and which we have earned. If you are right and most of the rum sold in Palmer is drunk by outsiders, enough is drunk here to paralyze the best interests of the town. You confirm the "enormous estimates" with reference to the saloon business in Palmer.

Dear "XXX:"—You try to quote Scripture, but you cannot do it as well as your friend, the Father of saloons, who quoted it in tempting the Master. He knew an Apostle from an Evangelist, and he knew the words and you do not. Come around and I will gladly give you a Bible. You say, but you do not dare say it over your own name, "Is it not more than marvelous that the hat company should leave a no-license town and pitch its tent so near Sodom?" If you had given your name, you would have heard from that same hat company before this. I am authorized by a member of the company to denounce your plain implication as absolutely false, and to express the indignation that the company feels toward you. Everybody knows that this company came from a town without needed railroad facilities to this town because of its railroad facilities. But we only does not know what a time they have had here because of the saloons. They brought skillful men with them who had been in their service for years, three of whom have already been dismissed because they have been made unfit for work by our saloons; and sad to say, one is in jail to-day. Three good workman all right for years in a no-license town have been ruined in less than a year in this town. Mr. "XXX," I state that on authority, and over my own name.

Dear ———:—Your communication printed in the Springfield Republican March 28 is before me. Was there no town paper that you should rush abroad with your statements? Who is injuring the town now? And you do not dare sign your name, either. My dear friend, you have given your side one of the hardest blows it has yet received. Was it an intentional step toward suicide? Do you not see that you have admitted on behalf of the rum "party" that the saloons have driven away another "large enterprise"? Just what we have been saying. This is only one of a procession beginning several years ago and preventing Palmer from being a city to-day. It is all nonsense and you know it, to say that those articles drove them away. It was the facts told in them and which are patent to the casual visitor, much more to the shrewd business man, coupled with the late license vote that drove away this large enterprise. If the articles had not been written the result would have been the same—just as in the former cases. Those articles have not yet driven an established business out of town, and the saloons have. Those articles are true to the facts, and not a statement in them has been disproved. Moreover your item has one statement in it that is absolutely false. The writer, not the "no-license party," is responsible for those articles in the JOURNAL, and there was not in them a single criticism of our town officials, as you allege. Two bitter criticisms of the town officials did appear in the JOURNAL, but they were by license advocates, and not a word in that line has been published by the no-license side. You should stick to facts, even if you do not sign your name. You say that "the general opinion is that a lack of good judgment has been shown which is inexcusable." My good friend, show your name and let us see whether your record entitles your judgment to higher consideration. Give the names of the business men you interviewed and see if their reputation for judgment is superior to that of the business men who believe in facing the facts and redeeming Palmer. I challenge you to this comparison on the score of judgment.

Finally, my dear anonymous whiskyites, I have been asked by a part of the people of Palmer to live in Palmer for the very purpose of declaring the truth for the good it will do. I am trying to do this work as faithfully as I know how. I pray over every sermon I preach and article I write, that it may have God's guidance and blessing. Even the sarcasm is sent with a prayer that it may penetrate farther because of its point into Palmer's sore to give it a better chance to heal. I shall continue to declare the truth for the good of Palmer according to my best judgment as long as I remain here. When my people do not want me and my work, it is very easy for them to say so, and the way out of Palmer is not long. They have not said so yet. The writer is not to be bluffed by anonymous articles or in any other way. If Palmer does not want the truth about the saloons, it must get rid of either the saloons or him, and then there will be plenty of good workers in the ministry and out of it left, and another will come in his place.

I close by repeating the emphatic and unqualified charge that the man who writes an article in favor of license and does not sign his own name, does it because he is a coward fearing his name will hurt his cause, or ashamed of what he is doing. In the name of truth, manliness and sobriety.

FRANK E. JENKINS.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. Henry Gay, who has been quite ill, is fast improving.

E. C. Lyons of Springfield spent Sunday with his family in town.

Miss Bessie Edward of Orange, Mass., is visiting relatives in town.

Dennis Leary of School street purchased a horse and carriage Saturday at the auction in Ware.

Miss Mary Kelliher, formerly of this place, spent Easter as the guests of Mrs. Dennis Crowley.

The choir at the Catholic church has been strengthened by the addition of several new members.

John F. Loftus, the liveryman, disposed of two of his horses at the auction held in Ware on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Sullivan are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son, which came to them on Friday.

John King of this place is intending to start for a trip to his old home in Grennick, Scotland, some time next month.

There is some talk of having a benefit dance for Patrick Riley, who is blind, at Union Hall some time in the near future.

John W. Loftus will have his undertaking rooms in the room on Commercial street which he has formerly used as a pool room.

Misses Mabel and Nellie Smith are home from Smith college, Miss Maud Parker from Wellesley, and Granger F. Clark from New York.

Mrs. E. E. Kendall returned this week from Charlton, where she has been for a few days staying with her mother, Mrs. Ely Rood, who was ill.

Several young men from this place attended the ball at Monson Monday evening, also the concert given by the Old Homestead Quartet on Tuesday evening.

Easter Sunday being a fine day, although somewhat cloudy, a large number were present at the two masses celebrated at St. Mary's church. The altar bore the usual handsome appearance. Vespers and benediction were held at 3 p. m.

The Easter concert on Sunday at the Congregational church was largely attended. The musical part of the programme was very good, including singing by the church quartette, and a solo by Miss Mabel Van Housen entitled "Angels Bright and Fair." There were also recitations by the children.

Mrs. Marshal Linson, formerly Miss Cronin, died on Friday morning after an illness of a few months. Mrs. Linson was well known here, having lived in the village a number of years. Her funeral took place on Sunday afternoon from the Catholic church, and was largely attended. A husband and two daughters survive her.

THREE RIVERS.

Dr. Bouley spent last Sunday in Webster, visiting friends.

C. P. Haynes is having a planing machine placed in his wood yard.

Mrs. C. H. Hall of Worcester is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. White.

Julius Lagesse has removed his shoe repairing business to Holyoke.

Mrs. J. W. Cheney is staying in Saco, Me., where her mother is quite ill.

Mrs. S. Gauthier is spending this week in Worcester, with her mother, Mrs. Vallient.

Rev. G. S. Butler intends to preach a sermon next Sunday morning appropriate to Easter time.

Mrs. Moore of Lowell, a former resident of this place, has been visiting friends in town during this week.

W. A. Snow of Belchertown has taken a position in Joseph Belanger's carriage shop, as carriage trimmer.

Mrs. McGarret and son of Goshen have been spending a few days this week with Mr. and Mrs. Charles McGarret.

John R. Cole, who has been quite ill for several weeks past, has recovered so far as to be able to walk out once more.

George Barrows has moved to Willimantic, Ct., and his position with Charles Haynes is occupied by Dick Coyer.

The Easter concert will be given in the U. E. church next Sunday evening. Special music is being prepared for the occasion, and it is expected that some good singing will be rendered.

Rev. Hollis Jordan, who has been holding evangelistic meetings in this place for several weeks past, has gone to Ludlow, with the intention of conducting a series of similar meetings there.

One week from next Monday evening the young men of the Monday Evening Club intend to entertain the ladies of the society. Exercises suitable to the occasion are being practiced for presentation on that evening.

Several small boys in this village, who frequently manifest their depravity by attaching incumbrances to dog's tails and then abusing the animals, should be attended to by some person interested in the protection of dumb creatures.

On Sunday an Easter concert was given in St. Anne's church, at which the Three Rivers Orchestra performed very creditably. Every one who was present is satisfied that it was one of the very best musical programmes ever rendered there during the history of the church.

One of the residents of this place, who thinks that there are many others second to himself in knowledge of the science of horticulture, admits that he was a little previous in commencing spring gardening. It seems that for a number of evenings last week this thrifty husbandman was observed scrutinizing an arable plot, where summer gardens are usually located. Accordingly some of the neighbors became curious to know what the man was in search of, and accosted him on one of these occasions, when he frankly admitted that not even with the light of a large lantern could he discover a pea sprout.

Attempted Double Crime.

An attempt at murder and suicide was made in Bondsville this morning at about 8.30. Ludwig Copacz, aged 33, shot Agnez Nikodem, aged 18, and then tried to kill himself. Both parties are Polanders, and have lived in Bondsville about a year. Both were employed by the Boston Duck Co. and boarded in the same house. The woman is single and the man has a wife living in Poland. Copacz came to Bondsville from Hazleton, Pa., where it is alleged he served a year in jail for an attempted killing. Copacz and the woman have been intimate, it is alleged unduly so.

He gave up his position in the mill about two weeks ago, and stated his intention of returning to Pennsylvania. He attempted to persuade the woman to accompany him, but she refused to do so. Yesterday Copacz left Bondsville but returned last night. He renewed his attempt to persuade the girl to go with him, and again failed. He spent the night in wandering about the house and yard. At about 8.30 he came into the kitchen, and told the girl if she did not go with him he would shoot her. The other occupants of the room laughed at the threat, thinking Copacz was joking. He was in earnest, however, and on the refusal of the girl to leave town drew a 32 caliber 5-shooter and fired at the girl. Before he could be prevented he turned the revolver against himself and emptied the remaining chambers. The first shot passed through the girl's left forearm, making a painful but not dangerous wound. The second shot passed through a hall door and lodged in the ceiling. The third entered Copacz's neck below the chin, coming out through the lower hip. The fourth took effect under the left jaw, coming out below the right eye. The last shot entered below the right jaw and came out below the left eye. Officer Collins was not in town, and Deputy Sheriff Studley and Medical Examiner Holbrook were summoned by telephone.

Dr. H. A. Smith was called in, and found a sorry spectacle at the scene of the crime. The woman had been put to bed, and the man was lying on the floor in a pool of blood. His wounds were dressed and Officer Studley took him to the lockup in the Depot village. His recovery is probable, while the woman is not considered in any danger.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

An Elopement.

Although it is not very generally known, yet there was an elopement of two young people living in the out districts of the town last Friday. Ever since William Dunham purchased a farm at State Line his daughter, Mabel, has been the object of admiration to all the young men of the surrounding locality. It has been noticed by Mabel's father that a young man named Walter Miller received favor in his daughter's eyes, and he did all in his power to stop the affair. Mabel and Walter laid plans about the time they should become one. The fact did not enter Mr. Dunham's head that his daughter would elope with young Miller, although he watched carefully his daughter's conduct. Mabel was missed from her home last Friday, and after a long search the truth was known. The young couple had come to Monson and hired a team for Somers, Ct., where they were married Saturday by a minister in that place. Mr. Dunham, on being interviewed, refused to give any facts in the matter, but said that he would have nothing to do with his daughter after her rash act. The young people have returned to town and are at home at Jack Robbins's place on the Stafford upper road.

Miss Amelia Bacon has been visiting friends in Stafford.

There will be a social dance in the stonecutters' hall to-night.

Mr. and Mrs. John Joyce left New York city Saturday for Ireland.

Clarence W. King has taken a position in W. N. Flynt & Son's store.

Mrs. Dr. Brown of Chicopee is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sutcliffe.

James C. Hale has bought the house of H. E. Acker on Maple street.

Miss Lena Babbitt of Springfield has been visiting her parents this week.

John L. Bacon, Jr., spent Sunday in Brimfield at the home of his parents.

Micaael Cunningham has bought the old Williams farm of Thomas Bogan.

Miss Helen Tucker of Smith college is spending her vacation at her home.

George L. Shattuck of Boston was the guest of A. F. Johnson over Sunday.

Dr. P. T. O'Reilly was the guest of his brother, William E. O'Reilly, Tuesday.

Miss Ellie Cordner has returned from a week's visit with friends in Springfield.

Dr. N. Preston of South Hadley made a visit to Dr. A. D. Coleman last Saturday.

John L. Bacon, Jr., is working for Dr. Rand during the absence of George Brown.

Patrick Lyons, who has been employed in Fairfield this winter, has returned to town.

Matthew F. Connelly, the tailor, is slowly recovering from a severe illness of two months.

Mrs. Alfred Wallace was called to Hartford Saturday by the serious illness of her mother.

When the snow ceases to fly the Monson Bicycle Club is likely to begin on a good foundation.

John M. O'Reilly, who broke his arm five weeks ago, expects to be able to resume work Monday morning.

The Woman's Relief Corp will serve a dinner election day in the G. A. R. Hall, to which everyone is invited.

The Easter service at the Congregational church last Sunday morning was notable for the fine music. The congregation was the largest for several years.

Tickets will be on sale at Keeney's drug store next Monday morning for the lecture April 10 by Russell H. Conwell.

August Freitag, who lives on the Ferry place in Silver Street, brought a parsnip to Pendergast's market this week that measured three feet in length.

Robert Murphy, owing to the reduction in prices, will hereafter charge 85 cents for tapping and heeling men's shoes. The shop will be open evenings till 7.30.

Thomas Horton, who lives at State Line, expects to go into the vegetable business this summer. He will run one two-horse wagon to Palmer and another to Monson.

The Wesleyan College Glee and banjo Clubs are expected to give a concert in Memorial Hall April 19, the proceeds to go to the athletic association of the Academy.

The Ladies' Dorcas Society of the Congregational church will give a supper and entertainment in the church parlors to-night.

The Academy closed Wednesday for a twelve days' vacation, and will not re-open till April 9. Most of the students and teachers will spend the vacation at their homes.

The Easter display of flowers at the several churches was unusually good Sunday. Potted plants and cut flowers helped to brighten the effect, with elaborate trimming of the platforms with evergreen. Miss Ellie Aldrich had charge of the decorations at the Universalist church, and great praise is due to her taste.

Last Friday's New York Tribune contained a lengthy account of elevation of Clarence Woodman to knighthood in Spain. Mr. Woodman was a student here in the Academy some years ago, in the same class with Congressman Sperry, Henry King, and a number of other brilliant lights. He was well known by the older people of the town as prominent in church work. After graduating from Amherst college he embraced the Roman Catholic faith and joined the Paulist Fathers in New York city. His elevation to knighthood is considered a great honor among his associates, who will miss him sadly in their missionary work in the great metropolis.

The annual town report for the past year shows the following expenditures: Miscellaneous, 88567; highways and bridges, 4876; cemetery account 511; Bridge street bridge 1213; liquor prosecution 48; Monson Free Library 750; Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., 50; street lighting, 1535; discount on taxes, 231; support of poor, 2603; side and ass walks, 1231; No. 5 schoolhouse, [illegible]; State street schoolhouse, 5404; portation of children, 48; repairs incidentals for schools, 666; fuel janitor, 957; school books and supplies, ; teachers' salaries, 6528; superintendMateri of schools, 918; high school tuition, ; total 56,054. Cash in hands of treasurer, now, 432.

A good audience was present Wednesday evening at the Academy chapel at the open session of the literary societies. There were fourteen numbers on the program, the most interesting perhaps being the debate: "Resolved that the Press is a Greater Power for Good than the Pulpit and Platform," with Miss Alma W. Bissell and Horace Broughton for the affirmative, and Miss Ida J. Seymour and Alvah M. Walker for the negative. Some interesting arguments were presented on both sides. The committee on debate, Dr. N. W. R., Rev. W. H. Marble and Prof. W. E. Morse, could not agree as to which side had the weight of argument, the vote standing two for the affirmative and one for the negative. Another leading feature was the society paper, George W. Brown and Miss Florence J. Deverell, editors. Many local hits were noticed and appreciated.

At the Democratic caucus held last Friday evening George H. Newton was elected chairman and Omer E. Bradway clerk. The following were nominated for town officers: Town clerk, C. M. Gage; treasurer, E. D. Cushman; selectmen and overseers of the poor, Ralph Clifford, Lyman Miller, Wm. H. Bugbee; assessors, E. R. Sisson, R. M. Hayes, M. J. Foley; school committee for three years, Rev. J. F. Lee, William L. Ricketts; cemetery commissioner for three years, Arthur D. Ellis; tax collector, Ralph Clifford; auditors, Frank L. Bliss, C. L. Peck; fence viewers, Lee Blanchard, Arthur Rood, C. P. Lyon; constables, Joel H. Thompson, William Cantwell, J. S. Carew, Arthur Rood, E. P. Newton. The officers of the caucus were authorized to fill any vacancy that might occur through resignation. The town warrant was posted last Monday and is of unusual length, containing 28 articles. In view of this fact it has been said that an adjourned meeting will be necessary to finish untransacted business. Nothing of special interest was noticed in the warrant. A new highway is called for at the quarry, also a new sewer is petitioned for. The most interesting feature is quite likely to be the report of the committee to look up the water works. Owing to the absence of the chairman of the committee it has been difficult to ascertain what the nature of the report will be, or what location has received favorable comment. The polls will open for balloting at 9.15 a. m. It is thought that the old board of selectmen will be reelected.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The Wilbraham Woolen Company and Benjamin Butler have petitioned the superior court for a jury to assess damages done their property by the change in the grade of Butler's crossing.

The directors of the Springfield Bicycle Club were here last Saturday, and looked at the proposed location for a summer club house. Mr. Collins owns the land, and arrangements will probably be made soon. It is thought that four or five acres will be needed, as they intend to have tennis courts and a ball field.

BELCHERTOWN.

Miss Daisy Fairchild and her brother, B. R. Fairchild of Norwich, Ct., spent last Sunday as the guests of the Sanford family.

B. Butler of this place, who leased the Leicester House at Leicester last year, will continue his management of the hotel for the coming season.

Rev. Mr. Haskins of Northampton preached for the Baptist people last Sunday. This was the first service held in the church since January 1.

The Guild entertainment Wednesday evening was a success in every way. Experiences were told, and some of them were novel indeed. Instead of the 50 cents pledged some of them succeeded in getting $5.

Rev. H. G. Alley will exchange pulpits with Rev. F. F. Thayer of Holyoke Sunday.

The Grange received several new members at its regular meeting Tuesday evening. The District Grange is to meet here the second Wednesday in April, and special music is being prepared for that occasion by the Grange choir.

WALES.

Bert Eager has been confined to his house for several days by illness.

Damon Gregory has bought the real estate of the late Chloe Colburn at private sale.

Mrs. May D. Smith, widow of the late Dr. John Smith, is confined to her house with the grippe.

Auctioneer McFarland sold at auction Monday the personal property of the late Chloe Colburn.

Mrs. J. C. Burley and daughter Anna spent last Sabbath with their aunt, Mrs. Nancy Atkins, at Wilbraham.

Mrs. Grace Arnold presided at the organ in the Baptist church last Sunday, in the absence of the organist.

Report says Stephen P. Smith has bought out the meat business of C. Moore, and will take possession about April 1.

H. A. McFarland is thoroughly renovating his Hobbs house, papering and painting entire. When finished Mr. Gay is expected to occupy it.

Rev. Mr. Bluett of Boston gave a talk on temperance last Sunday night. He made it plain in the light of the Gospel that every voter should vote "no" next Monday on the license question.

WEST WARREN.

Charles Cutler's new house is nearly ready for occupancy.

George Bliss and J. Grayline are buying horses in Canada.

Mrs. H. H. Hebert has moved into the tenement over her store.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Brooks of Boston are visiting Mrs. Josiah Brooks.

Mrs. N. Knights of Brookfield is visiting her sister, Mrs. Frank Bemis.

Mrs. Agnes Nevins of Lewiston, Me., is visiting her father, Byron Bearce.

Rev. A. L. Squier of West Brookfield will preach in the M. E. church this evening at 7.30.

Albert Converse is sick with the grippe, and his shop was closed last week and part of this week.

There will be communion, baptism and reception of members at the Methodist church next Sunday morning.

Divisions Nos. 27 and 21 of Warren, A. O. H., attended the funeral of Lawrence Smith of Gilbertville Sunday. He was president of the A. O. H. of that town.

Paul O'Neill, an old resident of Warren, died at his home in East Boston, and his body was brought here Wednesday morning. Mass was celebrated at the Catholic church; interment at Ware.

WILBRAHAM.

The Farmers' Club of Wilbraham met with the Young People's Agricultural Club last Monday evening at schoolhouse No. 3.

Easter Sunday was observed at the First Congregational church in an appropriate manner. An interesting concert was given in the evening.

James Richards, William T. Eaton, Franklin Edwards, H. M. Bliss and Willis Cutler have been drawn as jurors for the district court at Boston.

W. T. Sheldon, of the class of '95, delegate from Wesleyan Academy to the convention of the Young Men's Christian Association at Detroit, gave a very interesting report in the chapel of the Methodist church last Sunday evening.

The final contests in the gymnasium divisions at Wesleyan Academy took place last Saturday evening. After a very close struggle division 1, captained by H. L. Hannah, '95, and R. H. Jones, '95, won the prize in free movements and club swinging. The prize for paralled bars was won by Paul Clark, '95. This was a handsome silver cup presented by the alumni at Amherst. The cup offered for horizontal bars was won by R. E. Clark. The girls' division in the Emerson physical culture drill was a very pleasing part of the programme, the girls being dressed in artistic Grecian costumes. Music was furnished by the Academy orchestra.

Death of an Academy Trustee.

News was received at Wesleyan Academy last Saturday of the death, Friday night, of Trustee Edwin H. Johnson, a wealthy and retired shoe manufacturer of Lynn. Mr. Johnson was born in Lynn in 1826. In 1875 he was elected a trustee of the Academy, and was greatly interested in the school up to the time of his death. The funeral took place in Lynn, Monday, and Rev. W. R. Newhall, principal at the Academy, attended.

BRIMFIELD.

Lincoln Peirce is spending his vacation in Boston.

Miss S. May Wood is in Boston, visiting her sister.

Harry Converse appears on the street with a new bicycle.

Miss Fannie Warren of Worcester was in town Thursday and Friday.

The spring term of the Hitchcock Free High School will begin next Tuesday.

Willis T. Sparhawk left for Westport, Randolph, Vt., Saturday morning, where he will remain until next Monday.

Principal G. W. Earle is devoting a week to the study of the methods of instruction in the city schools at Springfield.

The annual town report for the past year shows the following expenditures: Highway repairs, $1359; bridges, $66; snow paths, $230; conveyance, text books and supplies, $2775; school house repairs, $217; support of paupers, $1434; officers' salaries, $411; miscellaneous expenses, $1172. The treasurer's report shows that, including $2224 on hand in 1893, the receipts for the past year have been $12,495. The balance on hand now is $1950.

On Friday evening the town hall was filled with citizens and people from adjoining towns to listen to the speaking contest among the students of the Hitchcock Free High School. The speakers were well prepared and without exception delivered their selections in a most praiseworth manner. The entertainment proved one of the most interesting and meritorious that has been given by the school for some time. It is to be hoped that it will become one of the features of the school. Supt. W. H. Small of Palmer, Supt. Brodeur of Warren, and Supt. C. A. Wood of Monson acted as the judges. The programme was:

Piano Duet.....
Misses Florence Bliss and Winifred Sawyer
"The Monk of Casal Maggiore".....
Clarence W. Stowell
"The Cancelled Debt".....Mabel A. Parker
"The Soldier's Pardon".....Cheney F. Newton
"The Bridal of Malahide".....E. Stella Allen

Miss Lydia B. Hitchcock and F. Lincoln Peirce

In order that the girls and boys need not complete with each other, two sets of prizes were given. Of the former, Ada M. Green was given the first, and Ida M. Brown the second prize; of the latter, Frank E. Bacon the first and Cheney F. Newton the second prize. The prizes were the gifts of Dr. R. V. Sawin, H. H. Bowman, Dr. E. W. Norwood and W. W. McClench.

WARREN.

Prof. Whitaker has been visiting Charles Comins this week.

M. K. Whipple has resumed work in his mill for the present.

Miss Sadler from Springfield is the guest of Mrs. F. Fairbanks.

Mrs. George de Lavel gave a domino party last Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Luke Washburn is the guest of Mrs. Newton on Bacon street.

The McTammany voting machine will be on exhibition at the town hall to-morrow.

Miss Nellie Comins from Amherst is spending her vacation at her home in town.

Rev. F. E. Jenkins of Palmer will give a temperance address in the town hall Sunday evening.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. George Shumway Wednesday afternoon.

Easter services were held in all the churches, all of them having fine decorations of flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Jenks had a narrow escape Sunday evening while riding, by their horse being frightened and running with them.

Fred S. Sylvester, agent for C. Brigham & Co., the Boston milk dealers, will resign April 1. Mr. Sylvester has had charge of the milk and ice business in Warren for the past 12 years.

It is expected that the permanent agent of the Boston and Albany road here will be J. T. Bostock, formerly agent at Palmer, who left that place seven or eight years ago to go South.

The new Universalist choir will be made up as follows: Organist, Mrs. W. H. Hallows; soprano, Mrs. Lewis H. Holbrook; contralto, Mrs. L. P. Bushnell; tenor, George E. Martin; bass, W. H. Hallows.

Elmer T. Gould, the grain dealer, and W. Leach, mechanic at the Knowles steam pump works, left Tuesday for San Francisco, Cal. While there they expect to visit the Mid-Winter Fair, and will be gone about a month.

Clara Barton Post has invited all the neighboring posts, the department officers and Governor Greenhalge to be present at the camp-fire to be held in the town hall May 8. A reception will be given in honor of the governor.

There are several important articles to be acted upon at the town meeting Monday. Among them are these: To see if the town will vote to move the iron bridge near Sayles & Jenks's woolen mill to the new location on Bridge street, or build a new bridge; to accept an alteration in Burbank avenue near the residence of Frank A. Keith, as laid out by the selectmen; to vote to grant the Central Massachusetts Electric Company of Palmer the right to erect a line of poles along the highways for the purpose of lighting the town; to reduce the number of school committee to three; to appoint a committee of five to select a building lot in West Warren for a firemen's building; to buy horses and wagons for the fire department, and furnish a system of electric fire alarms and 1000 feet of hose; to raise a sum of money for night and Sunday police.

A no-license caucus was held in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union hall last Friday night to nominate officers for the town-meeting April 2. The meeting was called to order by Fred Lincoln, Judge John W. Tyler being chosen chairman. The following were nominated: Town clerk and treasurer, J. Edward Lombard; selectmen, W. E. Patrick, J. E. Walsh, F. E. Gleason; overseers of the poor, George Bliss, Ella E. Morse, J. G. Skipper; assessors, Haschel Underwood, J. E. Moore, C. A. Shepard; board of health, Dr. C. A. Deland, Dr. J. W. Hastings, Dr. O. W. Phelps; school committee for three years, Rev. D. O. Clark, C. O. Walker, John W. Lawrence; one year, Mrs. Mary C. Buck; auditors, W. L. Curtis, H. S. Ellis, C. S. Hitchcock; collector of taxes, W. H. Kelley; constables, F. Tomlinson, S. J. Dupranc, C. L. Thompson, J. W. Quinlan, J. P. Sheridan.

WARE.

Fogwell, the upholsterer has given up his shop in Trench's block and is doing his work at his shop on West Main street.

Early Wednesday morning Thomas O'Rourke was on a drunken revel and smashed the windows and a door in a tenement of the Otis company on East street. The occupant sought in vain for a policeman, even coming down to the police station.

A CARD.—We wish to return thanks for the many acts of kindness shown by our friends during the late sickness and death of Miss Nellie V. Topliff. Also for the beautiful floral gifts presented by the Christian Endeavor Society and Sabbath school.

MR. & MRS. GEO. B. KENERSON.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

Fruit culture is more profitable to the farmer now than his other crops. Brown Bros. Co., the most extensive nursery house in the United States, have a vacancy in this section. Write them at Rochester, N. Y., for their terms.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., March, 1894.

We have prepared facilities for the rest of visitors; rooms where they may sit, read, write, as freely as at home.

Thousands of jackets, capes and suits, from home and abroad are under our roof ready to be seen. Whatever one's taste or inclination may be it can be gratified here in the surest way, viz., by a comparison of a great number of different garments, all chosen for the present season's trade.

We are charged with selling capes too low; jacketsal so. It isn't the first time—nor the last. We like to sell "too low".
Main floor, of Pynchon-street building.

The number of elegant things in black-and-white and gray and black dress goods just now is not a little surprising. There are stripes and plaids and fancy weaves of more sorts than you would read, if we should write. Prices range from 37½ to $1.50.

As good a black 75-cent serge as you'll find anywhere—59 cents; and 46 inches wide. Would you like a sample sent?
Right aisle.

Fast black sateens, richly brocaded, 15, instead of 25 cents.
Right aisle.

We are in the midst of carpet time, and up to our ears in work. We seem to be getting our share of the business; very promptly too.
Second floor of Pynchon street building.

Episcopalians will be glad to know that the New Church Hymnal with Music, edited by Chas. I. Hutchins, is ready. $1.15; by mail $1.35.
Main floor of Pynchon street building.

Strictly high-grade bicycles for $55, $59 and $69. Fully guaranteed. Send for catalog.
Basement.

Part 5 of the World's Fair Portfolios is ready, 5 cents, 7 cents by mail. The series so far, five parts, eighty full-page pictures, 23 cents, by mail 33.

BABY CARRIAGES.

Over 70 styles in "Wakefield" and Heywood Carriages, and not an undesirable one in the assortment, even the lowest priced one has a charm about it that no other makes produce.
First floor, carpet room.

PARLOR FURNITURE.

When in the city inspect our line of Parlor Furniture. You'll see an exceptional line of five piece suits in all grades from $35. to $75. that are worthy of your consideration if you are looking for something of this nature.
Third floor, take elevator.

PARLOR TABLES.

These form no small feature in this department. We have all shapes, sizes and styles in all desirable woods, made in the very best manner, and our prices fit all purses.
Second floor, take elevator.

CHAMBER SETS.

We shall continue our sale of Chamber Sets as long as the excitement is at its present height, and it shows no signs of subsiding very soon. The sets at $14.75, $15, $17 and $20 are leaders, but if you want more style and finer finish, see those from $25. to $50.
Fourth floor, take elevator.

LACE CURTAINS—PORTIERES.

It's not only the number of patterns but the patterns themselves and the low prices that make so many sales on these goods: We are constantly adding new styles and at lowest prices. Our customers tell us ours is the stock to select from, and they ought to know.

CARPETS.

Busy times in these, but we are accustomed to them. The reason:— We are selling Tapestry Carpets at 45c, 50, 62½ and 75c. a yard, over 100 patterns.

Ingrain Carpets in new patterns at 55c and 58c, such as we sold last season at 75c. Hartford, Lowell and Bigelow Brussels at 85c and upward. No wonder we have busy times.
First floor.

CLOAK and SUIT DEPARTMENT.

Never before have we shown such a choice line of Ladies suits in serge, cheviot and silk fabrics in plain and fancy weaves in the latest and most approved styles. Coats and Capes we looked upon with equal favor, and we feel confident of suiting the tastes of even the most fastidious persons. All the correct materials and shapes.

Our line of silk waists is now complete. Black Indias at $2.50, Wash Silks at $5.00, and handsome ones in plaid and figured Taffetas and Surahs.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation others are taking this valuable remedy." Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

Sold by LEGRO & LYNDE, Palmer.

TOWED BY AN ICEBERG.

When the captain of the Norwegian bark "Wave King" sailed for the port of New York, he expected as a matter of course to meet some icebergs on the way. He also expected to engage a tug-boat to tow him into the harbor if he found the weather at Sandy Hook boisterous or the wind too strong against him to sail in alone; but as for having a present of a tow in the middle of the Atlantic, and free of charge, that was a piece of good fortune of which he never dreamed in his most economical moments. Yet, improbable as it seems, that was the treat he unexpectedly received.

Everything went very well with the bark until half through her voyage, when one day the mate (who was an arctic weather-prophet) reported that ice-fields and icebergs were near.

He knew it, he said, because of the light loom along the ocean's rim; also from the look and coldness of the sea-water. A bright lookout was therefore kept, and sure enough, about noon a great ice-field, or "floe," became visible in the haze, dead ahead. There it lay right in their track, and extended as far on each side as their best telescope was able to make it out.

For several miles on both sides the bark now sailed back and forth, the lookouts searching for an opening in the beautiful, trembling, glistening white fields; but none could be found, although the fair blue water lay temptingly beyond, in full sight.

Presently the captain noticed that the ice-field, under the pressure of the fresh breeze, was advancing toward them, and he gave orders to "'bout ship."

As the vessel went about, a large iceberg was noticed right astern in the light haze, and, strange to relate, it also appeared to be coming toward them. At first this caused the sailors much uneasiness, for they feared to be caught between it and the field of ice.

A little careful steering, however, placed them safely to one side of the berg, and the men gathered along the ship's side to watch the monster as it went majestically by.

The captain knew that some strong lower-current was pushing against the under-water portion of this berg, and urging it along against the winds and surface currents. He wondered what would result when the berg and ice-field met. Which would gain the mastery? Why, the heavy berg, of course.

Then a bright idea flashed through his mind, which he instantly began to put in execution, by ordering the steersman to turn the bark and run her right in behind the berg.

Going as close as he dared to the great ice-mountain, he ordered the crew to lower a boat and take a rope and hitch on to it. This they did, making fast to a low pinnacle, or foot-hill. Then sail was shortened to flying-jib and spanker, just enough to keep her steady and take some strain off the rope; and lo! the ship was towing kindly in the wake of the berg, while all hands awaited developments.

They had not long to wait. Steadily and surely the ice-mountain bore down on the ice-field. There came a great crash, and a little shiver of the berg that could be felt on the towline.

With bang, and smash, and roar, the mighty contest went on. But the berg proceeded serenely, leaving a broad swath behind in which the bark rode safely until clear water was once more reached.

Then, as quickly as possible, the rope was cast off, all sail set, and a respectful distance put between the bark and berg.—J. O. Davidson, in February St. Nicholas.

WHAT DID MCSWAT SAY NEXT?—In shutting down the lid of his wife's Saratoga trunk, locking it and wrapping the trunk securely with ropes and leather straps for the purpose of making the structure baggage-man-proof, Mr. McSwat had consumed half an hour.

"Now, Lobelia," he said, after he had loaded the thing into the express wagon and sent it to the railway station, "you have just three-quarters of an hour to get ready, go to the depot and have your trunk checked. Got your ticket handy?"

"The ticket?" replied Mrs. McSwat. "That's all safe enough, Billiger. It's in the trunk."—Chicago Tribune.

Tramp—"Won't you give me a dime, please, to get me something to eat?" Citizen—"Wouldn't you rather have a quarter?" Tramp—"Thanks, no; I'm afraid of the income tax."—Detroit Free Press.

HAD FUN WITH THE POLICEMAN.

It is seldom that one of the finest gets such a scare as a member of the force received the other night on Park Row in front of the post-office. This policeman has made himself obnoxious to the newsboys who congregate around the postoffice. He seemed to them to take delight in moving them on. The boys had no redress, but at last they took up a scheme which has afforded pleasure to small boys more than once.

They secured an old pair of trousers, together with a coat and a hat, which they stuffed with straw. Waiting until the policeman was looking in their direction, two of them, with the dummy between them, boldly walked out of Beekman street and started across Park row toward the post-office. The sight of the two boys in charge of a man who apparently could not take care of himself interested the policeman, and he started to follow them. The boys walked on until they reached the middle of the street, when they threw the figure on the track before an approaching horse car and fled.

With a pale face and an involuntary cry of terror the policeman ran toward the body. He had gone but a few feet when he tripped and fell. The driver of the car put on the brake just as the horses reached the body. Just then two boys rushed from the post-office, seized the body by the legs, one on each side, and ran down Beekman street with it amid the shouts of their companions, who had been silent but much amused witnesses of the joke. The policeman did not follow.—New York Sun.

PLAYING CARDS.

The invention of playing cards has been attributed to the Chinese, Hindoos, Arabians and Romans, but cards as now used were invented by Jacques Gringonneur, a painter, in Paris in the fourteenth century. They were supposed to have been first made for the amusement of Charles VI of France, who was deranged. The French had particular names for the 12 court cards. The four kings were David, Alexander, Cæsar and Charles; the four queens, Angine, Esther, Judith and Pallas; the four knaves or knights, Ogier the Dane, Lancelot, La Hire and Hector de Garland. Cards seem originally, however, to have been taken to England direct from Spain, having probably been introduced into that country by the Moors; the clubs, in Spanish cards, not being trefoils as with us, but cudgels—that is, bastos—the spades or swords, espadas. They were at first stamped from wood blocks in outline and filled in by hand, but after the invention of engraving the best artists engraved them on copper and struck them off at once. Columbines were spades; rabbits, clubs; pinks, diamonds; and roses, hearts. Human figures opposed to those of flowers and animals were the ancestors of court cards.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Tom Mulcahy's wife lay dying, and Tom was making note of her directions on this wise: "Tom, there's Mrs. Smith, up at the crossing. She owes me $1.80 for butter. See ye get it." "Sinsible to the last ye are, my dear," said Tom; "I'll get it." "And there's Mrs. Jones at the creek; she owes me $1.50 for chickens." "Ah!" said Tom, look at that for a moind; she forgets nothing." "And Mrs. Brown owes me $2.30 for milk." "D'ye here that? Sinsible to the last. Go on, my dear." "And—and"—"Yes?" "And Mrs. Roberts, at the toll gate, I owe her—" "Ah! poor dear," exclaimed Tom—"poor dear! How her moind begins to wander! Sure, we've allowed her to talk too much entirely; so we have!"—Morning Star.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

Quick as a wink

the clothes are washed, the paint scoured, the dishes washed, the house itself and every thing in it made bright and clean.

Not with soap—you know better than that. But with Pyle's Pearline. Dirt leaves, and the work is done—easily, quickly, safely, thoroughly.

You save time with Pearline—but you save more than that. You're spared the endless rub, rub, rubbing, that tires you out and wears out what is rubbed.

It's money in your pocket to use Pearline. If it cost more than soap, if it were dangerous—then you might hesitate. But you needn't. It's as cheap as any soap, and just as harmless.

Beware of imitations. 311 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Offering you a preparation containing the highest order of ingredients, free from all opiates, harmless even to a baby, and a request to return the empty bottles and get the amount paid for the full ones if no cure is effected, is our way of gaining your confidence. If there were any better ingredients we would use them. We cure our patients or get no pay.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Starving to Death.

PLENTY TO EAT BUT THEY GET NO NOURISHMENT FROM THEIR FOOD.

Dangerous Loss of Weight—Doctors can do Nothing.

There are in America perhaps 5,000,000 people who, in the midst of plenty are starving to death. Not paupers, simply people who cannot digest their food. What is to be done with them? Give them a food that is easily digested—Paskola.

There is no medicine in nature's laboratory that will keep people who cannot digest their food from starving to death. There is only one thing that will do them any good:—food. If ordinary food doesn't feed them, Paskola will.

Fat people who want to get thin abstain from starch food. Thin, starving people, who want to get fat, shouldjdo the opposite, of course. Paskola is prepared according to this scientific fact. It is a pure starch food, artificially digested—not "pepsinated." Pepsin doesn't digest starch. The starch in Paskola is digested with the natural ferments discovered in the human saliva and prepared from the natural products.

People who are starving show it by losing weight. Consumptives starve to death. The loss of two lungs wouldn't make a hundred pounds difference in your weight.

What must people do who are steadily losing weight? Eat starch food. But if that doesn't help? Paskola.

MODERN MIRACLES.

CAREFUL AND COMPLETE INVESTIGATION BY A "JOURNAL" REPORTER.

A Searching Inquiry as to Startling Statements Recently Published.

[FROM THE ALBANY, N. Y., EVENING JOURNAL.]

A few days since, the Times-Union of this city published a remarkable letter under the head lines of "An Athens Miracle." The statement made were so unusual, and the interest occasioned so great, that an investigation by a "Journal" reporter seemed a necessity. The letter was that Mr. Lewis Clow, of Athens, N. Y., had been stricken with kidney disease. The best of medical attendance was obtained, and failed to benefit him. While in this almost hopeless condition, he began the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and it cured him; and furthermore, that there were other residents who had a simular experience.

To verify these statements and get what other information would be of interest to our readers, the Journal representative left Albany and soon found himself in the pretty village of Athens. It did not take long to satisfy the reporter that the statements of Mr. Clow were in every way true. The Rev. D. William Lawrence, pastor of the Lutheran church, Postmaster True and Justice of the Peace Gœller, when asked about it, said that every word was true to their knowledge. Mr. Clow was at death's door suffering with kidney trouble. The physicians failed to help him, and he was cured by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Also that Favorite Remedy had performed as marvelous a cure for Mrs. Casper Brooks, wife of the proprietor of the Robins House, of that place.

Calling upon Mrs. Brooks, your reporter stated his mission, and Mrs. Brooks replied that she would be perfectly willing to tell all about her wonderful recovery.

"Yes," said she, "I had a hard fight for health, but Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy restored mine. My first trouble was ulcers of the womb, and they caused me the most intense pain and suffering. I consulted our regular physician, but he did not benefit me; in fact, I kept growing worse. My kidneys were getting very much diseased, and this combination of troubles was almost unbearable. At my husband's suggestion, I consulted physicians at Albany, Hudson and Chatham, and took their medicines and prescriptions faithfully, but found no benefit. You can imagine my terrible condition at this time, after employing five of the best physicians, all to no purpose; but at this dark hour a ray of light broke in upon me. Dr. William Smith, of Jewett Heights, was recommended, and it is to him I owe my good health, for it was Dr. Smith who prescribed Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy for me. I purchased a bottle and commenced taking it, and began to feel better and kept improving daily, the ulcers healed up, and my kidney trouble left me entirely. My case was greatly complicated, and did not stop here; I suffered misery from those terrible headaches so common among women, but I kept on taking Favorite Remedy; and am now entirely free from these diseases.

"I am told that I have a tumor that cannot be cured unless I go to a hospital, but I think Favorite Remedy will, in time, cure that. I have been so well for the past few months, said Mrs. Brooks," with a smile on her face, "that I do nearly all the work about the hotel, and am getting along with about one-half the help we used to employ. I certainly don't want to pose as a miracle, but what else could you call my recovery?"

Such a straightforward statement convinced the Journal reported that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was certainly a Godsend to the sick and suffering.

Hundreds of people in and about Athens are conversant with the facts of these cases.

In speaking to Mr. Horton, the well-known druggist of that place, he said: "Oh, yes, we sell quantities of Favorite Remedy. Why, there's Joseph McGiffert, William Mackey, Martin Hallenbeck, Casper Hallenbeck, Mrs. Robert Tiffany, and many others, say that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is worth its weight in gold."

The investigations of the Journal reporter admit of but one conclusion; that as this great medicine is within the reach of all, it should be used by those who are suffering from rheumatism, dyspepsia, biliousness, kidney, liver and urinary troubles. It will correct the worst cases of habitual constipation, and is a certain cure for the diseases and weakness of women, particularly those that originate in change of life. It cures scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, eczema, ulcers, sores and tumors, gravel, diabetes or Bright's disease. Favorite Remedy is acknowledged by the medical profession as nature's antidote for uric acid.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and it never fails to cure when the directions are followed. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is to be found with every dealer in medicine, at one dollar a bottle, or six bottles for five dollars.

International Hymn.

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where the wheels are tied,
Land where industries died,
And to the English side
Took rapid wing.

My native country, thee,
Land to which paupers flee,
Thy name I love;
I love thy Cleveland frills,
Thy no-trade tariff bills,
Thy Greshams, Smiths and Mills,
Born from above.

Let music swell the breeze,
Democrats to your knees,
And swell the song;
Let those who brought this fate,
Their medicine take straight,
And three years longer wait,
To right the wrong.

Our father, Grover C.,
Mogul of misery;
To thee we sing;
Bear with us, if you can,
But, if not, like a man,
Say you don't care a damn
For anything.

—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

AMEN AND AMEN.

"Oh, oh, I is killed! I is killed!" and both papa and mamma ran out into the hall, where the cries of distress came from.

"But you are not, Jennett, or you could not cry so," said papa half impatiently, as he lifted his little daughter to her feet.

"But my w'ist is broken," and the brown eyes looked up into the gray ones, as if there to read the awful consequences should the fact be true.

"No, neither killed nor broken," mamma said soothingly.

"But I fell down free steps," and the little face was still drawn.

"Well, well, you are not hurt much, Jennett, so do not fear," and Mr. Summers sat his little girl down after kissing her.

But she continued to moan and to worry until papa said:

"Now, Jennett, I will get me another little girl down town if you don't hush. Come, be a lady."

"Bigger than me?"

"No, just as big, so when you are naughty I can have another one."

"Do they keep them at stores?"

"Yes, yes; plenty of them."

The tears were all gone now, and two little hands rested firmly on her father's knee as she read the story from his eyes, even while he was yet speaking. Another little girl—one to be loved even as much as she; one to go to when she was naughty, so papa had said. Her dear papa not hers alone! The tears came nearer and nearer.

"And if I is dood."

Then papa saw how his words had wounded and he felt sorry. He lifted her up, but the tears could not be staid. She cried a little until his kisses soothed her to sleep, and he laid her down and the momentary remorse at the same time.

Nothing was further from his thoughts as he hailed the passing car.

Mrs. Summers covered her little girl warmly and hurried down to receive callers.

But soon Jennett wakened and called for mamma.

"No, no," the nurse said. "Mamma is busy."

"I won't bother," and she started for the door.

"You must not go," nurse said sharply. "There is an old witch down there who hates little girls."

Jennett then paused and finally went to the window. Turning around by and by, she saw her nurse busy at her table with her work, so she slipped down stairs.

Mamma saw a timid little face at the door and said, "Come on in, darling." She pressed close to her mother while she eyed the visitors curiously.

"Oh, such a dear," Mrs. Cooler smilingly murmured.

"Such perfectly gorgeous eyes!" Miss Cora replied.

Jennett looked at each as she spoke and came to the conclusion that the last one was the witch—the witch that hated little girls, for she was the oldest of the three.

"Come and see me," Miss Cora entreated. Now Jennett was not timid generally, but she would not go.

"But she will come to me," and Mrs. Cooler rocked forward to caress her.

"Oh, mamma, this is a witch and hates little girls," and Jennett clung around her mother's neck. "Take me away, mamma. I don't like her a bit," she screamed.

"Hush, child, what do you mean?" and Mrs. Summer's face burned painfully.

"Hush, and tell mamma all about it." She was a sensible woman in some things and knew the best way to prove it a freak of the child's brain was to let the ladies hear the confession.

"What made you fear the lady?"

"Nurse—"

"Nurse—well, go on."

"Nurse said there was a witch down here, and she hated little girls," and she still hid her face.

"Naughty nurse! Why did she say that?"

"She was afraid she would hate me," came the tones in all confidence.

"It's a shame," mamma said, "and I will tell nurse so." But no coaxing could change the little lady's mind, and the visitors departed in a little while.

But mamma forgot all about it, and she was very busy all the afternoon.

Jennett went for a walk with nurse and found mamma all dressed for an evening party when she came home.

"You is booful," she cried gleefully "May I go too?"

"Oh, no dear."

"Why can't I go?"
